PREFACE

TO THE

FOREIGN COMMUNICATIONS

Contained in the APPENDIX to the REPORT from HIS MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS for inquiring into the Administration and practical Operation of the POOR LAWS.

THE Commissioners appointed by His Majesty to make a diligent and full Inquiry into the practical operation of the Laws for the relief of the Poor, were restricted by the words of their Commission to England and Wales. As it was obvious, however, that much instruction might be derived from the experience of other countries, the Commissioners were authorized by Viscount Melbourne, then His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, to extend the investigation as far as might be found productive of useful results. At first they endeavoured to effect this object through their personal friends, and in this manner obtained several valuable communications. But as this source of information was likely to be soon exhausted, they requested Viscount Palmerston, then His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, to obtain the assistance of the Diplomatic Body.

In compliance with this application, Viscount Palmerston, by a circular dated the 12th of August 1833, requested each of His Majesty's Foreign Ministers to procure and transmit, with the least possible delay, a full report of the legal provisions existing in the country in which he was resident, for the support and maintenance of the poor; of the principles on which such provision was founded; of the manner in which it was administered; of the amount and mode of raising the funds devoted to that purpose; and of the practical working and effect of the actual system, upon the comfort, character and condition of the inhabitants.

The answers to these well-framed inquiries form a considerable portion of the contents of the following volume. They constitute, probably, the fullest collection that has ever been made of laws for the relief of the poor.

But as a subject of such extent would necessarily be treated by different persons in different manners, and various degrees of attention given to its separate branches, the Commissioners thought it advisable that a set of questions should also be circulated, which, by directing the attention of each inquirer and informant to uniform objects, would enable the influence of different systems on the welfare of the persons subjected to them to be compared.

For this purpose the following Questions were drawn up:

THE following Questions apply to Customs and Institutions, whether general throughout the State, or peculiar to certain Districts, and to Relief given:—

- 1st. By the Voluntary Payment of Individuals or Corporate Bodies.
- 2d. By Institutions specially endowed for that purpose.
- 3d. By the Government, either general or local.
- 4th. By any one or more of these means combined.

And you are requested to state particularly the cases (if any) in which the person relieved has a legal claim.

QUESTIONS.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?

P. L. (F.)

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?
3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?
4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?
5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?
6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?
7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?
8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?
9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?
10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?
2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?
3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?
4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on householders.
5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?
2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?
3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?
4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?
5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?
2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?
3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?

Orphans, Foundlings or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?
6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?
7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?
2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?
3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?

4. To

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?

Idiots and Lunatics.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any and what effect,

1st. On the industry of the labourers?

2d. On their frugality?

3d. On the age at which they marry?

4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parents, children and other relatives?

5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible? See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law Extracts.

You are also requested to read the accompanying volume,* published by the English Poor Law Commissioners, and to state the existence of any similar mal-administration of the charitable funds of the country in which you reside, and what are its effects?

* Extracts from the information on the Administration of the Poor Laws.

You are also requested to forward all the dietaries which you can procure of prisons, workhouses, almshouses and other institutions, with translations expressing the amounts and quantities in English money, weights and measures, and to state what changes (if any) are proposed in the laws or institutions respecting relief in the country in which you reside, and on what grounds?

In replying to the following Questions respecting Labourers, you are requested to distinguish Agriculturists from Artisans, and the Skilled from the Unskilled.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?

2. Is piece-work general?

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?

17. The average number of children to a marriage?

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?

These questions, together with the volume to which they refer, of Extracts of Information on the Administration of the Poor Laws, were transmitted by Viscount Palmerston to His Majesty's Foreign Ministers and Consuls on the 30th November 1833.

The replies to them form the remaining contents of the following pages.

It will be perceived, therefore, that this volume contains documents of three different kinds:

1. Private Communications.
2. Diplomatic Answers to the general inquiries suggested by Viscount Palmerston's circular of the 12th of August 1833.
3. Diplomatic Answers to the Questions framed by the Commissioners, and contained in Viscount Palmerston's circular of the 30th November 1833.

Unfortunately, only a small portion of these documents had arrived when the Commissioners made their Report to His Majesty on the 20th February 1834. The documents then received are contained in the first 115 pages of this volume, and were printed by order of the House of Commons, and delivered to Members in May 1834. Those subsequently received were transmitted to the printers as soon as the requisite translations of those portions which were not written in English or French could be prepared. If it had been practicable to defer printing any portion until the whole was ready, they might have been much more conveniently arranged. But to this course there were two objections. First, the impossibility of ascertaining from what places documents would be received; and secondly, the difficulty of either printing within a short period so large a volume, containing so much tabular matter, or of keeping the press standing for six or seven months. The Parliamentary printers have a much larger stock of type than any other establishment, but even their resources did not enable them to keep unemployed for months the type required for many hundred closely printed folio pages. The arrangement, therefore, of the following papers is in a great measure casual, depending much less on the nature of the documents than on the times at which they were received. The following short summary of their contents, may, it is hoped, somewhat diminish this inconvenience.

I.—The Private Communications consist of,

1. Two Papers by Count Arrivabene, containing an account of the labouring population of Gaesbeck, a village about nine miles from Brussels (p. 1.); and a description of the state of the Poor Colonies of Holland and Belgium in 1829 - - - p. 610

It is impossible, within the limits of a Preface, to give more than a very brief outline of the large mass of information contained in this volume, respecting the provision made for the poor in America and in the Continent of Europe.

AMERICA.

AMERICA.

It may be stated that, with respect to America, a legal provision is made for paupers in every part of the United States from which we have returns, excepting Georgia and Louisiana; and that no such provision exists in Brazil or in Hayti, or, as far as is shown by these returns, in any of the countries originally colonized by Spain.

The system in the United States was of course derived from England, and modified in consequence, not only of the local circumstances of the country, but also of the prevalence of slavery in many of the States, and of federal institutions which by recognizing to a certain extent each State as an independent sovereignty, prevent the removal from one State of paupers who are natives of another. Such paupers are supported in some of the northern districts not by local assessments, but out of the general income of the State, under the name of state paupers.

The best mode of treating this description of paupers is a matter now in discussion in the United States.

The following passage in the report of the Commissioners appointed to revise the civil code of Pennsylvania, shows the inconveniences arising from the absence of a national provision for them: (pp. 139, 140.)

We may be permitted to suggest one alteration of the present law, of considerable importance. In Massachusetts and New York, and perhaps in some other States, paupers who have no settlement in the State are relieved at the expense of the State. In this commonwealth, the burthen falls upon the particular district in which the pauper may happen to be. This often occasions considerable expense to certain counties or places from which others are exempt. The construction of a bridge or canal, for instance, will draw to a particular neighbourhood a large number of labourers, many of whom may have no settlement in the State. If disabled by sickness or accident, they must be relieved by the township in which they became disabled, although their labour was employed for the benefit of the State or county, as the case may be, and not for the benefit of the township alone. If provision were made for the payment of the expenses incurred by the township in such case out of the county, or perhaps the State treasury, we think that it would be more just, and that the unhappy labourer would be more likely to obtain adequate relief than if left to the scanty resources of a single township. A case which is stated in the 2d volume of the Pennsylvania Reports, (Overseers v. M'Coy, p. 432), in which it appeared, that a person employed as a labourer on the State Canal, and who was severely wounded in the course of his employment, was passed from one township to another, in consequence of the disinclination to incur the expense of supporting him, until he died of the injury received, shows in a strong light the inconvenience and perils of the present system respecting casual paupers, and may serve to excuse our calling the attention of the legislature to the subject.

On the other hand, the Commissioners appointed to revise the poor laws of Massachusetts, after stating that the national provision in their State for the unsettled poor has existed ever since the year 1675, recommend its abolition, by arguments, a portion of which we shall extract, as affording an instructive picture of the worst forms of North American pauperism: (pp. 59, 60, 61.)

It will appear, (say the Commissioners), that of the whole number more or less assisted during the last year, that is, of 12,331 poor, 5,927 were State's poor, and 6,063 were town's poor; making the excess of town's over State's poor to have been only 497. The proportion which, it will be perceived, that the State's poor bear to the town's poor, is itself a fact of startling interest. We have not the means of ascertaining the actual growth of this class of the poor. But if it may be estimated by a comparison of the State's allowance for them in 1792-3, the amount of which, in round numbers, was $14,000, with the amount of the allowance 27 years afterwards, that is, in 1820, when it was $72,000, it suggests matter for very serious consideration. So sensitive, indeed, to the increasing weight of the burthen had the legislature become even in 1798, when the allowance was but $27,000 that "an Act" was passed, "specifying the kind of evidence required to accompany accounts exhibited for the support of the poor of the Commonwealth." In 1821, with a view to still further relief from the evil, the law limited its allowance to 90 cents a week for adults, and to 50 cents for children; and again, for the same end, it was enacted in 1823, that "no one over 12, and under 60 years of age, and in good health, should be considered a State pauper." The allowance is now reduced to 70 cents per week for adults, and proportionally for children; and in the cases in which the poor of this class have become an integral part of the population of towns, and in which, from week to week, through protracted sickness, or from any cause, they are for the year supported by public bounty, the expense for them is sometimes greater than this allowance. But this is comparatively a small proportion of the State's poor: far the largest part, as has been made to appear, consists of those who are but occasionally assisted, and, in some instances, of those of whom there seems to be good reason to infer, from the expense accounts, that they they make a return in the products of their labour to those who have the charge of them, which might well exonerate the Commonwealth from any disbursements for their support. Even 70 cents a week, therefore, or any definable allowance, we believe, has a direct tendency to increase this class of the poor; for a charity will not generally be very resolutely withheld, where it is known that, if dispensed, it will soon be refunded. And we leave it to every one to judge whether almsgiving, under the influence of this motive, and to a single and defined class, has not a direct tendency at once to the increase of its numbers, and to a proportionate earnestness of importunity for it.

It is also not to be doubted, that a large proportion of this excess of State's poor, more or less assisted during the year, consists of those who are called in the statements herewith presented, "wandering or travelling poor." The single fact of the existence among us of this class of fellow beings, especially considered in connexion with the facts, that nearly all of them are State's poor, and that, to a great extent, they have been made what they are by the State's provision for them, brings the subject before us in a bearing, in which we scarcely know whether the call is loudest to the pity we should feel for them, or the self-reproach with which we should recur to the measures we have sanctioned, and which have alike enlarged their numbers and their misery. Nor is it a matter of mere inference from our tables, that the number is very large of these wandering poor. To a considerable extent, and it is now regretted that it was not to a greater extent, the inquiry was proposed to overseers of the poor, "How many of the wandering, or travelling poor, annually pass under your notice?" And the answers, as will appear in the statements, were from 10 to 50, and 100 and 200. Nor is there a more abject class of our fellow beings to be found in our country, than is this class of the poor. Almshouses, where they are to be found, are their inns, at which they stop for refreshment. Here they find rest, when too much worn with fatigue to travel, and medical aid when they are sick. And, as they choose not to labour, they leave these stopping places, when they have regained strength to enable them to travel, and pass from town to town, demanding their portion of the State's allowance for them as their right. And from place to place they receive a portion of this allowance, as the easiest mode of getting rid of them, and they talk of the allowance as their "rations;" and, when lodged for a time, from the necessity of the case, with town's poor, it is their boast that they, by the State's allowance for them, support the town's inmates of the house. These unhappy fellow beings often travel with females, sometimes, but not always, their wives; while yet, in the towns in which they take up their temporary abode, they are almost always recognized and treated as sustaining this relation. There are exceptions, but they are few, of almshouses in which they are not permitted to live together. In winter they seek the towns in which they hope for the best accommodations and the best living, and where the smallest return will be required for what they receive. It is painful thus to speak of these human beings, lest, in bringing their degradation distinctly before the mind, we should even for a moment check the commiseration which is so strongly claimed for them. We feel bound therefore to say, that bad as they are, they are scarcely less sinned against in the treatment they receive, than they commit sin in the lawlessness of their lives. Everywhere viewed, and feeling themselves to be, outcasts; possessed of nothing, except the miserable clothing which barely covers them; accustomed to beggary, and wholly dependent upon it; with no local attachments, except those which grow out of the facilities which in some places they may find for a more unrestrained indulgence than in others; with no friendships, and neither feeling nor awakening sympathy; is it surprising that they are debased and shameless, alternately insolent and servile, importunate for the means of subsistence and self-gratification, and averse from every means but that of begging to obtain them? The peculiar attraction of these unhappy fellow beings to our Commonwealth, and their preference for it over the States to the south of us, we believe is to be found in the legal provision which the State has made for them. Your Commissioners have indeed but a small amount of direct evidence of this; but the testimony of the chairman of the overseers in Egremont to this fact, derived from personal knowledge, was most unequivocal, and no doubt upon the subject existed in the minds of the overseers in many other towns. But shall we therefore condemn, or even severely blame them? Considered and treated, in almost every place, as interlopers, strollers, vagrants; as objects of suspicion and dread, and, too often, scarcely as human beings; the cheapest methods are adopted of sending them from town to town, and often with the assurance given to them that there, and not here, are accommodations for them, and that there they may enjoy the bounty which the State has provided for them. Would such a state of things, your Commissioners ask, have existed in our Commonwealth, if a specific, legal provision had not been made for this class of the poor? Or, we do not hesitate to ask, if the Government had never recognized such a class of the poor as that of State's poor,—and, above all, if compulsory charity, in any form, had never been established by our laws, would there have been a twentieth part of the wandering poor which now exists in it, or by any means an equal proportion of poor of any kind with that which is now dependent upon the taxes which are raised for them? Your Commissioners think not.

Either an increase of the evils of pauperism, or a clearer perception of them, has induced most of the States during the last 10 years to make, both in their laws for the relief of the poor and in the administration of those laws, changes of great importance. They consist principally in endeavouring to avoid giving relief out of the workhouse, and in making the workhouse an abode in which none but the really destitute will continue. Compared with our own, the system is, in general, rigid.

In the detailed account of the workhouses in Massachusetts, (pages 68 to 93,) the separation of the sexes appears to be the general rule wherever local circumstances do not interfere: a rule from which exceptions are in some places made in favour of married couples. And in the returns from many of the towns it is stated that no relief is given out of the house.

The following passages from the returns from New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York, are also evidences of a general strictness of law and of administration.

By the laws of New Jersey,

The goods and chattels of any pauper applying for relief are to be inventoried by the overseer before granting any relief, and afterwards sold to reimburse the township, out of the proceeds, all expenses they have been at; all sales of which by the pauper, after he becomes chargeable, are void*.

The same rule prevails in Pennsylvania. When any person becomes chargeable, the overseers or directors of the poor are required to sue for and recover all his property, to be employed in defraying the expense of his subsistence†.

By the laws of the same State,

No person shall be entered on the poor-book of any district, or receive relief from any overseers, before such person, or some one in his behalf, shall have procured an order from two magistrates of the county for the same; and in case any overseer shall enter in the poor-book or relieve any such poor person without such order, he shall forfeit a sum equal to the amount or value given, unless such entry or relief shall be approved of by two magistrates as aforesaid. (p. 142.)

Nor is the relief always given gratuitously, or the pauper always at liberty to accept and give it up as he may think fit; for by a recent enactment‡ the guardians are authorized—

To open an account with the pauper, and to charge him for his maintenance and credit him the value of his services; and all idle persons who may be sent to the almshouse by any of the said guardians, may be detained in the said house by the board of guardians, and compelled to perform such work and services as the said board may order and direct, until they have compensated by their labour for the expenses incurred on their account, unless discharged by special permission of the board of guardians; and it shall be the duty of the said board of guardians to furnish such person or persons as aforesaid with sufficient work and employment, according to their physical abilities, so that the opportunity of reimbursement may be fully afforded: and for the more complete carrying into effect the provisions of this law, the said board of guardians are hereby authorized and empowered to exercise such authority as may be necessary to compel all persons within the said almshouse and house of employment to do and perform all such work, labour and services as may be assigned to them by the said board of guardians, provided the same be not inconsistent with the condition or ability of such person.

And whereas it frequently happens that children who have been receiving public support for indefinite periods are claimed by their parents when they arrive at a proper age for being bound out, the guardians are authorized to bind out all children that have or may receive public support, either in the almshouse or children's asylum, although their parents may demand their discharge from the said institutions, unless the expenses incurred in their support be refunded.

In New York the administration of the law is even more severe than this enactment:

With respect to poor children, (says Mr. Buchanan,) a system prevails in New York, which, though seemingly harsh and unfeeling, has a very powerful influence to deter families from resorting to the commissioners of the poor for support, or an asylum in the establishment for the poor; namely, that the commissioners or overseers apprentice out the children, and disperse them to distant parts of the State; and on no account will inform the parents where they place their children. (p. 110.)

EUROPE.

It appears from the returns that a legal claim to relief exists in Norway, Sweden, Russia, Denmark, Mecklenburg, Prussia, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, and the Canton de Berne; but does not exist in the Hanseatic Towns, Holland, Belgium, France, Portugal, the Sardinian States, Frankfort, Venice, Greece, or Turkey. The return from Saxony does not afford data from which the existence or non-existence of such a claim can be inferred.

The great peculiarity of the system in the North of Europe is the custom of affording relief by quartering the paupers on the landholders in the country and on householders in the towns.

NORWAY.

Consuls Greig and Mygind, the authors of the return from Norway state, that the—

Impotent through age, cripples, and others who cannot subsist themselves, are, in the country districts, billeted or quartered on such of the inhabitants (house and landholders in the parish) as have the means of providing for them. By them they are furnished with clothing and food, and they are in return expected to perform such light services as they can. In the distribution, respect is had to the extent or value of the different farms, and to the number of the indigent, which varies greatly in different parishes. In some they have so few poor that only one pauper falls to the lot of five or six farms, who then take him in rotation; whilst in other parishes they have a pauper quartered on every farm or estate all the year round, and on the larger ones several. (p. 696.)

It is to be regretted that the information respecting the existing poor laws of Norway is not more full and precise. The return contains two projects of law, or, in other words, bills, for the relief of the poor in the country and in towns, drawn up in 1832, in obedience to a government commission issued in 1829; and also the arguments of the commissioners in their support; but it does not state how far these projects have been adopted.

In treating of the modes of relief, the bill for the country states that,

Section 26. The main principle to be observed everywhere in affording relief is to maintain "lœgd," or the outquartering of the paupers, wherever it has existed or can be introduced, taking care to avoid the separation of families. The regulation of "lœgd," where it has been once established among the farms, should be as durable and as little liable to alteration as possible; so that a fresh arrangement should be made only in instances where there exists a considerable decrease or increase in the number of the paupers quartered out, or a marked alteration in the condition of the occupiers upon whom they are so quartered. In the event of a fresh arrangement, it is desirable that the existing paupers hitherto provided for should, in as far as may be consistent with justice towards the parties to whom they are quartered, continue to have "lœgd" upon the same farm or farms where they have hitherto been relieved. Families not belonging to the class of peasants are bound to have paupers quartered upon them in "lœgd," in case they cultivate land; however, the overseer of the district is competent to grant permission to them as well as to other "lœgds-ydere," to let out the "lœgd" when he finds that they individually are unable to provide for the pauper on their own lands, and the letting out can be effected without any considerable inconvenience to the latter. (p. 704.)

27. When a new regulation of "lœgd" takes place, or new "lœgd" is established, a statement in writing of the "lœgd," or outquartering intended, is to be issued by the commission, or by the overseer on its behalf, containing the name of the pauper to be outquartered, and the farm or farms on which he shall receive "lœgd," and in case it is on several, the rotation, and for what period, on each. In case the "lœgd" is only to be during the winter, or during a certain part of the year, this likewise is to be stated. In like manner the houseless and others, who are provided with relief in kind from particular farms, are to be furnished with a note setting forth the quantity the individual has to demand of each farm, and the time at which he is entitled to demand the same. In default of the furnishing of these contributions in proper time, they are to be enforced by execution, through the lensmand. (p. 705.)

35. In case the house poor, and other poor who are not quartered out, conduct themselves improperly, are guilty of idleness, drunkenness, incivility, obstinacy or quarrelsomeness, the overseer is entitled to give them a serious reprimand; and in case this is unattended with any effect, to propose in the poor commission the reduction of the allowance granted to the offender, to the lowest scale possible. Should this prove equally devoid of effect, or the allowance not bear any reduction, he may, in conjunction with the president of the commission, report the case, at the same time stating the names of the witnesses, to the sorenskriver*, who on the next general or monthly sitting of the court, after a brief inquiry, by an unappealable sentence shall punish the guilty with imprisonment not exceeding 20 days, upon bread and water.

* Sorenskriver, an officer in the country, whose duties are chiefly those of a registrar and judge in the lowest court.

NORWAY.

In case of a like report from the superintendent of the "lægd," of improper conduct on the part of the pauper quartered out, the overseer shall give the said offending pauper a severe reprimand; and in case this likewise proves devoid of effect, the mode of proceeding to be the same as has been stated already in reference to the house poor.

36. In case the person with whom a pauper has been quartered out do not supply adequate relief, or ill use the pauper so quartered upon him, and is regardless of the admonitions of the overseer, an appeal to the sorenskriver is to take place, and in other respects the mode of proceeding is to be the same as is enacted in s. 35: when all the conduct complained of can be proved, for which purpose, in default of other witnesses, the combined evidence of the superintendent of the "lægd," and of the overseer, is to be deemed sufficient, the offending party to be fined, according to his circumstances and the nature of the case, from 2 to 20 specie dollars, and in case of ill-usage, to be imprisoned on bread and water for from 5 to 10 days; and in the event of a repetition of the offence, for from 10 to 20 days.

39. None may beg, but every person who is in such want that he cannot provide for himself and those belonging to him, shall apply for aid to the competent poor commission, or to the overseer. In case any one is guilty of begging, for the first offence he is to be seriously admonished by the overseer of the district in which he has begged, who is likewise to point out to him what consequences will follow a repetition of the offence. In case he offends afterwards, he is to be punished according to the enactments set forth in s. 35; and afterwards, in case of a repetition of the offence, with from two months to a year's confinement in the house of correction.

A person is not to be accounted a beggar who asks only for food, when it appears that his want of sustenance is so great that unless he tried to procure immediate relief he would be exposed to perish of hunger, provided he immediately afterwards applies to the overseer of the district for relief; or in case the poor administration is unable to relieve all the poor in years of scarcity, save in a very scanty manner, and the hungry mendicant then confines himself to the soliciting of food. (p. 706.)

The bill directs that the poor-fund shall consist, in the country,

1. Of the interest of legacies, and other property belonging to it.
2. An annual tax of 12 skillings, (equal according to Dr. Kelly, Univ. Cambist, vol. 1, p. 32, to 2s. 6d. sterling,) on each hunsmand or cottager, and on each man servant, and six skillings on each woman servant.
3. A duty on stills equal to half the duty paid to the State.
4. Penalties directed by the existing laws to be paid over to that fund.
5. The property left by paupers, if they leave no wife or children unprovided for.
6. An annual assessment on the occupiers of land, and on all others capable of contributing, such as men servants, clerks, tutors and pilots.

In towns,

Of all the above-mentioned funds, except No. 2, and of a tax of one skilling (2½ d. sterling) per pot on all imported fermented liquors.

We have already remarked that the report does not state how far this bill has passed into a law, or how its enactments differ from the existing law: they appear likely, unless counteracted by opposing causes, to lead to considerable evils. The relief by way of lægd resembles in some respects our roundsman system. It is, however, less liable to abuse in one respect, because the lægd, being wholly supported by the lægd-yder, must be felt as an incumbrance by the farmer, instead of a source of profit. On the other hand, the situation of the country pauper cannot be much worse than that of the independent labourer; and in towns, though this temptation to idleness and improvidence may be avoided by giving relief in the workhouse, the temptation to give out-door and profuse relief must be considerable, since a large portion of the poor-fund is derived from general sources, and only a small part from assessment to which the distributors of relief are themselves exposed. It is probable that the excellent habits of the population, and the great proportion of landowners, may enable the Norwegians to support a system of relief which in this country would soon become intolerable.

SWEDEN.

SWEDEN.

The fullest statement of the pauperism of Sweden is to be found in a paper by M. de Hartsmandorff, the Secretary of State for Ecclesiastical Affairs, (p. 368); an extract from Colonel Forsell's Swedish Statistics, published in 1833, (p. 375); and Replies to the Commissioners' Queries from Stockholm, (p. 372), and from Gottenburgh, (p. 384.)

M. de

M. de Hartsmandorff states that every parish is bound to support its own poor, and that the fund for that purpose arises from voluntary contribution, (of which legacies and endowments appear to form a large portion,) the produce of certain fines and penalties, and rates levied in the country in proportion to the value of estates, and in towns on the property or income of the inhabitants. Settlement depends on residence, and on that ground the inhabitants of a parish may prevent a stranger from residing among them. A similar provision is considered in the Norwegian report, and rejected, (p. 718,) but exists in almost every country adopting the principle of parochial relief, and allowing a settlement by residence. An appeal is given, both to the pauper and to the parishioners, to the governor of the province, and ultimately to the King.

M. de Hartsmandorff's paper is accompanied by a table, containing the statement of the persons relieved in 1829, which states them to have amounted to 63,348 out of a population of 2,780,132, or about one in forty-two. This differs from Col. Forsell's statement, (p. 376,) that in 1825 they amounted to 544,064, or about one in five. It is probable that Col. Forsell includes all those who received assistance from voluntary contributions. "In Stockholm," he adds, "there are 83 different boards for affording relief to the poor, independent one of the other, so that it happens often that a beggar receives alms at three, four or five different places." There is also much discrepancy as to the nature and extent of the relief afforded to the destitute able-bodied. We are told in the Stockholm return, (p. 372,) that no legal provision is made for them; but by the Gottenburgh return, (pp. 384 & 386,) it appears that they are relieved by being billeted on householders, or by money.

The following severe provisions of the law of the 19th June 1833 seem directed against them. By that law any person who is without property and cannot obtain employment, or neglects to provide himself with any, and cannot obtain sureties for the payment of his taxes, rates and penalties, is denominated unprotected (försvarlös). An unprotected person is placed almost at the disposal of the police, who are to allow him a fixed period to obtain employment, and to require him to proceed in search of it to such places as they think fit.

Should any person, (the law goes on to say,) who has led an irreproachable life, and has become unprotected, not through an unsteady or reprehensible conduct, but from causes which cannot be reasonably laid to his charge, and who has obtained an extension of time for procuring protection, still remain without yearly employment or other lawful means of support, and not be willing to try in other places to gain the means of support, or shall have transgressed the orders that may have been given him, and (being a male person) should not prefer to enlist in any regiment, or in the royal navy, or should not possess the requisite qualifications for that purpose, the person shall be sent to be employed on such public works as may be going on in the neighbourhood, or to a work institution within the county, until such time as another opportunity may offer for his maintenance; he shall however be at liberty, when the usual notice-day arrives, and until next moving time, to try to obtain legal protection with any person within the county who may require his services, under the obligation to return to the public work institution in the event of his not succeeding. Should there be no public work to be had in the neighbourhood, or the person cannot, for want of necessary room, be admitted, he shall be sent to a public house of correction, and remain there, without however being mixed with evil-disposed persons or such as may have been punished for crimes, until some means may be found for him or her to obtain a lawful maintenance. (p. 362.)

Servants or other unprotected persons who have of their own accord relinquished their service or constant employ, and by means of such or other reprehensible conduct have been legally turned out of their employ, or who do not perform service with the master or mistress who has allowed such person to be rated and registered with them, or who, in consequence of circumstances which ought to be ascribed to the unprotected person himself, shall become deprived of their lawful means of support, but who may not be considered as evil-disposed persons, shall be bound to provide themselves with lawful occupations within 14 days, if it be in a town, and within double that number of days if it be in the country. Should the unprotected person not be able to accomplish this, it shall depend on Our lord-lieutenant how far he may deem it expedient to grant a further extended time, for a limited period, to a person thus circumstanced, in order to procure himself means for his subsistence. (p. 363.)

Such persons as may either not have been considered to be entitled to an extension of time for procuring lawful maintenance, or who, notwithstanding such permission, have not been able to provide themselves with the same, shall be liable to do work, if a man, at any of the corps of pioneers in the kingdom, and if a woman, at a public house of correction. If the man is unfit for a pioneer, he shall in lieu thereof be sent to a public house of correction. (p. 363.)

SWEDEN.

It appears that pauperism has increased under the existing system. Mr. Bloomfield states that since its institution the number of poor has increased in proportion to the population, (p. 368.) The Stockholm return states that—

The main defect of the charitable institutions consists in a very imperfect control over the application of their funds, the parish not being accountable for their distribution to any superior authority. This is so much felt, that new regulations are contemplated for bringing parish affairs more under the inspection of a central board. Another great evil is, that each parish manages its affairs quite independently of any other, and frequently in a totally different manner; and there is no mutual inspection among the parishes, which, it is supposed, would check abuses. Again, parishes are not consistent in affording relief; they often receive and treat an able-bodied impostor (who legally has no claim on the parish) as an impotent or sick person, whilst many of the latter description remain unaided.

The Swedish artizan is neither so industrious nor so frugal as formerly; he has heard that the destitute able-bodied are in England supported by the parish; he claims similar relief, and alleges his expectation of it as an excuse for prodigality or indifference to saving. (p. 375.)

That the number of poor (says Colonel Forsell,) has lately increased in a far greater progression than before, is indeed a deplorable truth. At Stockholm, in the year 1737, the number of poor was 930; in 1825 there were reckoned 15,000 indigent persons. Their support, in 1731, cost 9,000 dollars (dallar). In 1825, nearly 500,000 rix dollars banco were employed in alms, donations and pensions. Perhaps these facts explain why, in Stockholm, every year about 1,500 individuals more die than are born, although the climate and situation of this capital is by no means insalubrious; for the same may be said of almshouses as is said of foundling hospitals and similar charitable establishments, that the more their number is increased, the more they are applied to.

In the little and carefully governed town of Orebro, the number of poor during the year 1780 was no more than 70 or 80 individuals, and in the year 1832 it was 400! In the parish of Nora, in the province of Nerike, the alms given in the year 1814 were 170 rix-dollars 4 sk.; and in 1832, 2,138 rix dollars 27 sk.; and so on at many other places in the kingdom. That the case was otherwise in Sweden formerly, is proved by history. Botin says that a laborious life, abhorrence of idleness and fear of poverty, was the cause why indigent and destitute persons could be found, but no beggars. Each family sustained its destitute and impotent, and would have deemed it a shame to receive support from others.

When the accounts required from the secretary of state for ecclesiastical affairs, regarding the number of and institutions for the poor, shall be reduced to order, and issue from the press, they must impart most important information. By the interesting report on this subject by the Bishop of Wexio, we learn, that the proportion of the poor to the population is as 1 to 73 in the government of Wexio, and as 1 to 54 in that of Jönköping. The assessed poor-taxes are, on an average, for every farm (hemman), eight kapper corn in the former government, and 12½ in the latter. With regard to the institutions for the poor, it is said, the more we give the more is demanded, and instead of the poor-rates being regulated by the want, the want is regulated by the profusion of charities and poor-taxes.

In the bishopric of Wisby (Island of Gottland), the proportion between the poor and those who can maintain themselves, is far more favourable than in that of Wexio; for in the former only one in 104 inhabitants is indigent, and in 22 parishes there is no common almshouse at all. Among 40,000 individuals, no more than 17 were unable to read. (p. 377.)

The price of 8 kapper = 1½ doll. or 2 s. 5 d.

RUSSIA.

RUSSIA.

A general outline of the provision for the poor in Russia is contained in the following extracts from Mr. Bligh's report, (pp. 328, 329, 330.)

As far as regards those parts of the empire which may most properly be called Russia, it will not be necessary for me to detain your Lordship long, since in them (where in fact by far the greatest portion of the population is to be found), the peasantry, being in a state of slavery, the lords of the soil are induced more by their own interest, than compelled by law, to take care that its cultivators, upon whom their means of deriving advantage from their estates depend, are not entirely without the means of subsistence.

Consequently, in cases of scarcity, the landed proprietors frequently feel themselves under the necessity (in order to prevent their estates from being depopulated) of expending large sums, for the purpose of supplying their serfs with provisions from more favoured districts. There is no doubt, however, (of which they must be well aware) that in case of their forgetting so far the dictates of humanity and of self-interest, as to refuse this assistance to the suffering peasantry, the strong hand of a despotic government would compel them to afford it.

The only cases, therefore, of real misery, which are likely to arise, are, when soldiers, who having outlived their 25 years service, and all the hardships of a Russian military life, fail in getting employment from the government as watchmen in the towns, or in other subordinate situations, and returning to their villages, find themselves unsuited by long disuse to agricultural pursuits, disowned by the landed proprietors, from whom their military service service has emancipated them, and by their relations and former acquaintances, who have forgotten them.

I am led to understand, that in all well-regulated properties, in order to provide for the contingencies of bad seasons, the peasants are obliged to bring, to a magazine established by the proprietor, a certain portion of their crops, to which they may have recourse in case of need.

In the estates belonging to the government, which are already enormous, and which are every day increasing, in consequence of the constant foreclosing of the mortgages by which so many of the nobility held their estates under the crown, more special enactments are in vigour; inasmuch as in them, all serfs incapable of work are supported by their relations, and those whose relations are too poor to afford them assistance, are taken into what may be termed poor-houses, which are huts, one for males, the other for females, built in the neighbourhood of the church, at the expense of the section or parish, which is also bound to furnish the inmates with fuel, food and clothing.

The parish must, moreover, establish hospitals for the sick, for the support of which, besides boxes for receiving alms, at the church and in the hospitals themselves, all fines levied in the parish are to be applied.

The clergy are compelled to provide for the poor of their class, according to an ordinance, regulating the revenues set apart for this object, and enacting rules for the distribution of private bequests and charities.

In Courland, Esthonia and Livonia, the parish (or community) are bound to provide for the destitute to the utmost of their means, which means are to be derived from the common funds; from bequests, or from any charitable or poor fund which may exist; and in Esthonia, from the reserve magazines of corn, which, more regularly than in Russia, are kept full by contributions from every peasant.

When those are inadequate, a levy is made on the community, which is fixed by the elders and confirmed by the district authorities; and when this rate is levied, the land-owners or farmers contribute in proportion to the cultivation and works they carry on, or to the amount of rent they pay; and the labourers according to the wages they receive.

The overseers consist of the elder of the village, (who is annually elected by the peasantry) and two assistants, one of whom is chosen from the class of landholders or farmers, and the other from the labourers, and who are confirmed by the district police. One of these assistants has to give quarterly detailed accounts to the district authorities, and the elder, on quitting office, renders a full account to the community.

Those who will not work voluntarily, may be delivered over to any individual, and compelled to work for their own support, at the discretion of the elder and his assistants.

Those poor who are found absent from home, are placed in the hands of the police, and transferred to their own parishes.

All public begging is forbid by very strict regulations.

In the external districts of the Siberian Kirghese, which are for the most part peopled by wandering tribes, the authorities are bound to prevent, by every means in their power, any individual of the people committed to their charge from suffering want, or remaining without superintendence or assistance, in case of their being in distress.

All the charitable offerings of the Kirghese are received by the district authorities, and as they consist for the most part of cattle, they are employed, as far as necessary, for the service of the charitable institutions; the surplus is sold, and the proceeds, together with any donations in money, go towards the support of those establishments; when voluntary contributions are not sufficient for that purpose, the district authorities give in an estimate of the quantity of cattle of all sorts required to make up the deficiency, and according to their estimate, when confirmed by the general government, the number of cattle required in each place is sent from the general annual levy made for the service of the government.

In the Polish Provinces incorporated with the empire, as the state of the population is similar to that of Russia Proper, the proprietors in like manner, in cases of need, supply their peasantry with the means of existence; under ordinary circumstances, however, the portions of land allotted to them for cultivation, which afford them not only subsistence, but the means of paying a fixed annual sum to their lords, and the permission which is granted to them of cutting wood in the forests for building and fuel, obviate the necessity of their receiving this aid.

The same system existed in the Duchy of Warsaw prior to 1806, and every beggar and vagabond was then sent to the place of his birth, where, as there was not a sufficiency of hands for the cultivation of the soil, he was sure to find employment, or to be taken care of by his master, whilst there were enough public establishments for charity to support the poor in the towns belonging to the government, and those, who by age, sickness, or natural deformities, were unable to work.

But when the establishment of a regular code proclaimed all the inhabitants of that part of Poland equal in the eye of the law, the relations of the proprietor and the peasant were entirely changed; and the former having no power of detaining the latter upon his lands, except for debt legally recognised, was no longer obliged to support them.

So great and sudden a change in the social state of the country soon caused great embarrassment to the government, who being apprehensive of again altering a system which involved the interests of the landed proprietors, the only influential class in the country, for a long time eluded the consideration of the question, by augmenting the charitable institutions; but at length the progressive expense of this system compelled the Minister of Finance to refuse all further aid to uphold it, and by an arbitrary enactment, recourse was had to the former plan of passing the poor to the places of their birth. As this arrangement is only considered as provisional, and as the population has not hitherto more than sufficed for the purpose of agriculture, and the manufactories which were established prior to the late insurrection, it has not been much complained of, though the necessity for some more precise and positive regulations respecting the poor is generally acknowledged.

In Finland, there are no laws in force for the support of the indigent, nor any charitable establishments, except in some of the towns. In the country districts it is expected that reserve magazines of corn should be kept in every parish, but I cannot ascertain that the adoption of this precautionary measure is imperative upon the landed proprietors and peasantry.

On comparing, however, Mr. Bligh's statement as to the law in Courland with that made by M. Kienitz His Majesty's Consul, it does not seem that the provision afforded by law is often enforced, excepting as to the support of infirmaries. It appears from his report that the government provides expeditiously for vagrants by enrolling them as soldiers or setting them on the public works; and that the proportion of the population to the means of subsistence is so small, and the demand for labour so great, that scarcely any other able-bodied paupers are to be found.

DENMARK.

DENMARK.

The information respecting Denmark is more complete and derived from more sources than any other return contained in this volume.

The Danish poor law is recent. It appears (p. 278) to have originated in 1798, and to have assumed its present form in 1803. The following statement of its principal provisions is principally extracted from Mr. Macgregor's report, (pp. 280. 283, 284. 287, 288. 273. 285. 289, 290.)

Poor districts.

Each market town, or kiöbstæd, (of which there are 65 in Denmark,) constitutes a separate poor district, in which are also included those inhabitants of the adjacent country who belong to the parish of that town. In the country, each parish forms a poor district.

The poor laws are administered in the market towns by a board of commissioners, consisting of the curate, of one of the magistrates (if any), of the provost (byfoged) in his quality of policeman, and of two or more of the most respectable inhabitants of the place.

In the country this is done in each district by a similar board, of which the curate, the policeman, besides one of the principal landholders, and three to four respectable inhabitants, are members, which latter are nominated for a term of three years.

All persons are to be considered as destitute and entitled to relief, who are unable, with their own labour, to earn the means of subsistence, and thus, without the help of others, would be deprived of the absolute necessities of life.

Classification of paupers.

The poor to whom parochial relief may be awarded, are divided into three classes. To the first class belong the aged and the sick, and all those who from bodily or mental infirmity, are wholly or partially debarred from earning the means of subsistence. In the second class are included orphans, foundlings and deserted children, as well as those, the health, resources or morals of whose parents are of a description which would render it improper to confide the education of children to their care. The third class comprises families or single persons, who from constitutional weakness, a numerous offspring, the approach of old age or similar causes, are unable to earn a sufficiency for the support of themselves or children.

Relief to first class.

Paupers of the first class who are destitute of other support, are to be supplied by the proper parish officers:

(a) With food (or in market towns where the necessary establishments for that purpose are wanting, with money in lieu thereof); to which, in the agricultural districts, the inhabitants have to contribute, according to the orders issued by the commissioners, either in bread, flour, pease, groats, malt, bacon, butter or cheese, or in corn, or in money, or by rations, or in any other manner, which, from local circumstances, may be deemed most expedient:

(b) With the necessary articles of clothing:

(c) With lodging and fuel, either by placing them in establishments belonging to the parish, or in private dwellings:

(d) With medical attendance, either at their own dwellings or in places owned or rented by the parish.

To second.

The children belonging to the second class are to be placed with a private family, to be there brought up and educated at the expense of the parish, until they can be apprenticed or provided for in any other manner.

The commissioners are carefully to watch over the treatment and education of the children by their foster-parents, and that such of them as have been put out to service are properly brought up and instructed until they are confirmed.

To third.

The paupers of the third class are to be so relieved that they may not want the absolute necessities necessaries of life; but avoiding mendicity on the one hand, they must at the same time be compelled to work to the best of their abilities for their maintenance. To render the relief of paupers of this description more effectual, care must be taken that, if possible, work be procured for them at the usual rate of wages; and where the amount does not prove sufficient for their support they may be otherwise assisted, but in general not with money but with articles of food and clothing, to be supplied them at the expense of the parish.

In cases where families are left houseless, the commissioners are authorized to procure them a habitation, by becoming security for the rent; and where such habitation is not to be obtained for them, they may be quartered upon the householders in rotation, until a dwelling can be found in some other place.

Should the rent not be paid by the parties when due, such persons must be considered as paupers, and be removed to that district where they may be found to have a settlement. The house-rent thus disbursed must in this case be looked upon as temporary relief, and be borne by the parish that advanced it. Where parish officers refuse to obey these injunctions, they may be compelled by a fine, to be levied daily until they comply.

The Danish law has established the principle, that every individual receiving relief of any kind under the poor laws, is bound, either with his property or his labour, to refund the amount so disbursed for him, or any part thereof; and authority has therefore been given to the poor law commissioners, "to require all those whom it may concern, to work to the best of their ability, until all they owe has been paid off."

Liabilities of pauper.

On relief being awarded to a pauper, the commissioners of the district have forthwith to take an inventory of, and to appraise his effects, which are only to be delivered over to him for his use, after having been marked with the stamp of the board.

Any person receiving goods or effects so marked, either by way of purchase or in pledge, shall be liable to the restitution of the property, to the payment of its value, and besides to a fine.

The same right is retained by the parish upon the pauper, if he should happen to acquire property at a later period, as well as it extends to his effects at his demise, though he should not have received relief at the time of his death.

An ordinance of the 13th August 1814 expressly enacts, that wherever a person absolutely refuses either to refund or to pay by instalments the debt he has so contracted with the parish, he shall be forced to pay it off by working for the benefit of the same, and not be allowed to leave the parish; but that if he do so notwithstanding, he is to be punished by imprisonment in the house of correction. The commissioners are further authorized to stipulate the amount such individual is to pay off per week, in proportion to his capability to work, to the actual rate of wages and other concurring circumstances, and that where such person either refuses to work, or is idle or negligent during the working hours, he is to be imprisoned on bread and water until he reform his conduct.

The poor having thus been provided for, begging is prohibited, and declared to be liable to punishment.

Begging.

In adjudging punishment for begging, it is to be taken into consideration whether the mendicant was in need of support or not. In the first case he shall, the first time, be imprisoned 14 days; the second time, four weeks; and the third time, work for a year in the house of correction. For every time the offence is committed, the punishment to be doubled. But if the mendicant is able to work, and thus not entitled to support from the parish, he shall, the first time, be imprisoned four weeks, the second time, eight weeks; and the third time, work for two years in the house of correction, which last punishment is to be doubled for every time the offence is committed. When the term of punishment is expired, the beggar is to be sent to his home under inspection, and his travelling expenses by land in every parish through which he passes to be paid by the poor-chest of the bailiwick in which the parish lies; but his conveyance by water to be paid by the parish bound to receive him.

In the market towns, all persons belonging to the working classes are obliged to enter into fixed service, unless they have some ostensible means of subsistence, which must be proved to the satisfaction of the magistrates, if required.

Duty of the poor to seek service.

In the agricultural districts, every person belonging to the class of peasants, who is not a proprietor or occupier of land, a tacksman (boelsmand), or cottager (huusmand), or subsists upon some trade or profession, is to seek fixed service, unless he be married and permanently employed as a day labourer.

Where a single person of either sex belonging to the labouring class is not able to obtain a place, he (or she) shall within two months before the regular term when regular servants are changed (Skiftetid) apply to the parish beadle, who on the Sunday following at church meeting, is publicly to offer the services of his client, and inquire amongst the community if any person is in want of a servant, and will receive him (or her) as such. Should the said person not get a place within a fortnight, a similar inquiry is to be made in the neighbouring parish.

All those that have not followed the line of conduct pointed out in the preceding regulation, and are without steady employment, shall be considered as vagrants, and punished accordingly.

It is also provided, that where parents, without sufficient reason, keep more grown up children at home than they absolutely require for their service, it shall be considered indicative, either of their being in comparatively good circumstances, or that their income has been improved by the additional labour of their children, and their poor and school-rates are to be raised in proportion.

DENMARK.

Mode of raising

It is not only made obligatory upon the house and landowners to contribute to the parochial fund, but also upon servants and labouring mechanics; in short upon all persons, without distinction of religion, who are not on the parish themselves, and whose circumstances are such that they can afford to pay the contribution in proportion to their incomes, without thereby depriving themselves of the necessities of life.

The only exception are the military, and persons receiving pay from the military fund, who are only liable to contribute in so far as they have private means.

The receipts of the parochial fund are derived from various sources, which may be classed under the following heads, viz.

1. Parochial fund.

1°. An annual contribution in money, either voluntary or levied upon the inhabitants, according to the assessment of the board of commissioners in each parish, and in proportion to the amount annually required for the relief of the poor.

This contribution is recovered in four quarterly instalments, each of which is payable in advance. The commissioners have to transmit a list of those persons that are in arrears to the bailiff of the division, who may levy the amount by distress.

2°. A contribution assessed upon the produce of the ground tax in the townships.

3°. One quarter per cent. of the proceeds of goods and effects sold by public auction in the townships.

4°. Fines and penalties adjudged to the parochial fund by the courts of justice and the Commissioners of arbitration in the townships.

5°. Produce of collections in churches and hospitals on certain occasions; of the sale of the effects of paupers deceased; of the sale of stray cattle having no owner; voluntary donations on the purchase or sale of houses and lands; contingencies.

6°. Interest on capital, and rent of lands or houses bequeathed to, or otherwise acquired by the poor administration.

2. Bailiwick fund.

The receipts of the separate poor fund of the bailiwick consist chiefly, 1°. In a proportion of certain dues levied in each of its jurisdictions; 2°. In fines and penalties adjudged to the fund by the tribunals and the commissions of arbitration in the agricultural districts; 3°. In $\frac{1}{4}\%$ of all goods and effects sold by public auction in the country; 4°. In the interest on capital belonging to the fund.

This fund has been established for the following purposes: 1°. Of contributing to the support of paupers who, although not properly belonging to the poor of the district in which they have become distressed, must still be relieved; 2°. Of assisting the parochial fund in extraordinary cases; 3°. Of defraying all expenses of a general nature that ought to be assessed upon the several parish funds within the jurisdiction of the bailiwick.

stitutions.

Be the management, (he says,) of the poor laws good or bad, yet the system itself seems to have answered an important object, that of checking the rapid growth of pauperism. I admit that paupers have increased in Denmark these last thirty years, in the same proportion with the increase of population (pari passu); but I am far from believing that the proportion which they bear to the whole population is much greater now than it was in 1803, namely, 1 = 32, although some of the townships, from particular circumstances, may form an exception. I have diligently perused all the different reports that have been published for the last five years upon the present state of the rural economy of the country, and they all concur in stating that there is a slight improvement in the value of land; that idle people are seldom found; and that there is sufficient work in which to employ the labouring population. (p. 291.)

Pauperism is chiefly confined (especially in the country) to the class of day-labourers, both mechanic and agricultural, who, when aged and decrepit, or burdened with large families, throw themselves upon parish relief whenever they are distressed from sickness or from some other casualty. But happily the allowance-system, which is productive of so much mischief, is not acted upon here to the same enormous extent as in England, and as the able-bodied can expect nothing beyond the absolute necessities of life, they have no inducement for remaining idle, and they return to work the moment they are able, and have the chance of obtaining any. Relief, therefore, or the expectation of it, has hitherto not been found to produce any sensible effect upon the industry of labourers generally, nor upon their frugality, although it is more than probable that any relaxation in the management of the system would stimulate them to spend all their earnings in present enjoyment, and render them still more improvident than they already are. Nor are the poor laws instrumental in promoting early marriages amongst the peasants; but it being their custom to form engagements at a very early period of life, this, in the absence of all moral restraint in the intercourse between the two sexes, leads to another serious evil, bastardy, which has so much increased of late years, that out of ten children, one is illegitimate.

A pauper in this kingdom lives in a state of degradation and dependence; he only receives what is absolutely necessary for his subsistence, and must often have recourse to fraud and imposition to obtain that, what is reluctantly given.

The working labourer, on the other hand, enjoys a certain degree of freedom and independence, although his means may be small, and that sometimes he may even be subject to great privations.

Should it ever so happen that the labouring population readily submit to all the restrictions imposed upon them by the parish officers, and that this is found not to be owing to any transitory causes, such as a single year of distress or sickness, then, in my humble opinion, the time is arrived and no other remedy left to correct the evil than for the government to promote emigration. (p. 292.)

Mr. Tholoman states that,

Hitherto these institutions have had a salutary and beneficial effect on the nation, inasmuch as many thousand individuals have been prevented from strolling about as beggars, and many thousand children have received a good education, and have grown up to be useful and orderly citizens. Neither as yet have any remarkable symptoms of dissatisfaction appeared among the wealthier classes. But we cannot be without some apprehension for the future, since the poor-rates have been augmented to such a degree that it would be very difficult to collect larger contributions than those now paid. And as sufficient attention has not been paid to this circumstance, that the farmers are continually building small cottages, in which poor people establish themselves, since the government have been unwilling to throw any restraint on marriages between poor persons; there seems reason to fear, that in the lapse of another period of 20 years, the poor in many districts will to such a degree have multiplied their numbers, that the present system will yield no adequate means for their support.

In the towns much embarrassment is already felt, the poor having increased in them to a much greater extent than in the country.

All the taxes of a considerable merchant of Dram in Norway, who owns eight trading vessels actually employed, amounted during last year to not more than the school and poor-rates of one large farm in the heath district which you visited last year. (p. 279.)

M. N. N., a correspondent of Mr. Browne's, and the author of a very detailed account of the existing law, after stating that,

Benevolent as the Danish poor system will appear, it is generally objected to it that the too great facility of gaining admittance, particularly to the third class, encourages sloth and indolence, especially in the country, where the means are wanted to establish work-houses, the only sure way of controlling those supported :

And that,

It is further objected to the present system, that it already begins to fall too heavy on the contributors, and that in course of time, with the constant increase of population, it will go on to press still more severely on them, inasmuch as their number and means do not by any means increase in a ratio equal to the augmentation of the number wanting support. (p. 274):

Adds, in answer to more specific inquiries,

Before the introduction of the present poor law system, the distress was much greater, and begging of the most rapacious and importunate kind was quite common in the country. This was not only a heavy burthen on the peasantry, but was in other respects the cause of intolerable annoyance to them; for the beggars, when their demands were not satisfied, had recourse to insolence and threats, nay, even to acts of criminal vengeance. This is no longer the case, and in so far, therefore, the present system has been beneficial.

It is a fact that poverty now appears in less striking features than it did before the introduction of the poor law system. This may, however, proceed from causes with which that system has no connexion; for example, from the increased wealth of the country in general, from improvements in agriculture, from the large additions made to the quantity of arable land, which have been in a ratio greatly exceeding that of the increased population. If the clergyman, who is and will always be the leading member of the poor committee, was able to combine with his other heavy duties, a faithful observance of the rules prescribed for him in the management of the poor, I am of opinion that the system would neither be a tax on industry nor a premium on indolence. But it rarely happens that the clergyman can bestow the requisite attention on the discharge of this part of his duty; and therefore it is not to be denied that the present poor law (not from any defect inherent in the system, but merely from faulty management) does occasionally act as a tax on industry and a premium on idleness. (p. 275.)

On the other hand, Mr. Browne thus replies to the questions as to the effects of the poor laws on the, 1. industry, 2. frugality, 3. period of marriage, and 4. social affections of the labouring classes, and on the comparative condition of the pauper and the independent labourer: (pp. 266, 267.)

1. On the industry of the labourers?—On their industry, most injurious, involving the levelling principle to a very great degree, lowering the middleman to the poor man, and the poor man who labours to the pauper supported by the parish. It tends to harden the heart of the poor man, who demands with all that authority with which the legal right to provision invests him. There is no thankfulness for what is gotten, and what is given is afforded with dislike and reluctance.

2. On their frugality?—The poor laws greatly weaken the frugal principle.

3. On the age at which they marry?—Encourage early and thoughtless marriages. The children are brought up with the example of indolence and inactivity before their eyes, which must be most prejudicial in after-life. I have often remarked amongst the people, who are naturally soft, susceptible and sympathizing, an extraordinary insensibility towards those who voluntarily relieve them, even at the moment of relief, and no gratitude whatever afterwards. I can attribute this most undesirable state of feeling, so contrary to what might be expected from the natural character of the people, solely to the perpetual association of right to relief. Thus does the system always disturb and often destroy the moral and kindly relation which should subsist and which is natural, between the higher and lower orders. The poor man becomes stiff and sturdy; the rich man indifferent to the wants and sufferings of the poor one. He feels him a continual pressure, at moments inconvenient to relieve, and under circumstances where he would often withhold if he could, partly from dislike to the compulsory principle, and often not regarding the case as one of real charity, and disapproving, as he naturally may, of the whole system of poor laws' administration. From all I have observed I feel persuaded (and I have lived a good deal in the country, having had much connexion with the lower orders, and not having been indifferent to their condition either moral or physical) that a more mischievous system could not have been devised—that poverty has been greatly increased by weakening the springs of individual effort, and destroying independence of character—that the lower orders have become tricky, sturdy and unobliging, the higher orders cold and uncharitable; and in short, that ere long, unless some strenuous steps are taken, Denmark will drink deep of the bitter cup of which England, by a similar system, has been so long drinking to her grievous cost. Were there no other objection, the machinery is wanting to conduct so delicate and complicated a system. And were it the best possible, and had the managers no other occupation but the one, the ingenuity of idleness to escape from action is so great, that it would often, very often, defeat eyes less actively open to detect it. I have spoken with few who do not object to the system from first to last, or who do not press an opinion that the state of the population before the existence of the poor laws was more desirable by far than at present.

4. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—No doubt it materially disturbs the natural dependence and affection of parent and child. The latter feels his parent comparatively needless to him; he obtains support elsewhere; and the former feels the obligation to support the latter greatly diminished. In short, being comparatively independent of each other, the affections must inevitably become blunted.

5. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity: is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible?—Were I a Danish labourer, I would endeavour to live partly on my own labour and partly on the parish, and I feel persuaded that a labourer so living in Denmark will be better off than one who gets no help from the parish; that is, the former, from a knowledge that he may fall back on the parish, will spend all he earns at the time on coffee, spirits, tobacco, snuff, &c., whereas the latter, who certainly can live on his industry (except under extraordinary and occasional emergencies, sickness, &c.) is debarred from such gratifications. Under such circumstances, the poorer labourer is better off than the poor one.

1st. The dread of poverty is diminished, and he who is half-poor works less instead of more, so that he speedily becomes a complete pauper. Those who are young and capable of labour are less economical, always having the poor rate in view, as a resource against want; likewise marriages are contracted with much less forethought, or consideration as to consequences.

2d. The morality of the poor man suffers, for he looks upon his provision as a right, for which he, therefore, need not be thankful; and, 3d, the morality of the rich man suffers, for the natural moral relation between him and the poor man has become completely severed; there is no place left for the exercise of his benevolence; being obliged to give, he does it with reluctance, and thus is the highest principle of charitable action, Christian love, exposed to great danger of destruction.

4th. As the clergyman of the parish is the president of the poor committee, he becomes involved in transactions peculiarly unsuited to his sacred calling, sometimes even compelled to resort to the extremity of distraint to compel his own parishioners to pay the allotted proportions; and thus does the moral influence of him, who should be a picture of the God of love, become every day less and less powerful. (p. 276.)

We have entered into this full statement of the Danish poor laws, and of their administration, because they exhibit the most extensive experiment that has as yet been made in any considerable portion of the Continent of a system in many respects resembling our own.

MECKLENBURG.

The following passage, at the conclusion of M. Meyen's report, gives a short summary of the poor laws of Mecklenburg: (p. 424.)

BURG.

Every inhabitant is obliged to pay certain poor rates, with the exception of military men, up to a certain rank, students, clerks in counting-houses and shops, assistant artisans and servants.

When the crown lands are let, there is always a clause in the contract, to regulate what the farmer, the dairy farmer, the smith and the shepherd, are to give. A day labourer pays 8*d.* yearly. The inhabitants of higher situation and public officers pay voluntarily. They ought to pay one per cent. of their income. If any one pays too little, the overseers of the poor rates can oblige him to pay more. The overseers are chosen by the inhabitants of the district.

In the towns all inhabitants pay a voluntary subscription; it ought to be one per cent. of their income. If they pay too little, the overseers can demand more. The overseers are chosen by the magistrate.

With respect to estates belonging to private individuals, the subsistence of the poor falls entirely to the charge of the proprietor, who is entitled to levy a trifling tax from all the inhabitants of the estate, equal to a simple contribution amounting to 8*d.* for a day labourer per annum, and 4*d.* for a maid servant. Few proprietors, however, levy such a tax.

Every one has a legal claim to assistance, and there are to be distinguished,

- 1st. Able-bodied persons. Work and a dwelling must be provided for them; the former at the usual rate, in order not to render them quite destitute, if through chicane work should be denied to them.
- 2d. People, impotent through age, must perform such work as they are capable of, and so much must be given to them that they can live upon it, besides a dwelling and fuel.

PRUSSIA.

There is some difficulty in reconciling Mr. Abercromby's report and Mr. Gibsone's. The following is Mr. Abercromby's statement: (pp. 425, 426.)

PRUSSIA.

Throughout the whole kingdom of Prussia, the funds for the maintenance and support of the poor are raised from private charity. No law exists enabling either the government of the country, or the subordinate provincial regencies, to raise funds explicitly appropriated for the provision of the poor, and it is only when private charity does not suffice for the exigencies of the moment, that the government, or the regency, advance money for that purpose. But to enable them to do so, the amount must be taken from those funds which had been destined for other purposes, such as, for improvements in paving, lighting, or for the public buildings of a town, or for the construction of roads, or other public works.

In Prussia, each town, and each commune, is obliged to take charge of the poor that may happen to reside within them; and consequently there is no passing from one parish to another, or refusal to maintain an individual because he belongs to another parish.

In each town there is a deputation (called armen-direction) or society for the poor, who undertake the collection and distribution of funds raised by charity. In small towns, of under 3,500 inhabitants, exclusive of military, this society is composed of the burgomaster, together with the town deputies (forming the town senate) and burghers chosen from the various quarters of the town.

In large and middle-sized towns, including from 3,500 to 10,000 inhabitants, exclusive of military, to the afore-mentioned individuals is always added the syndic (or town accomptant), and if necessary, another magistrate. Clergymen and doctors are likewise included in the society; and where the police of the place has a separate jurisdiction from the magistrate, the president of the police has always a seat as a member of the society.

Under this armen-direction the care of the poor is confided to different sub-committees formed of the burghers, and for this purpose the town is divided into poor districts (or armenbezirke). In small and middle-sized towns, these districts are again divided into sub-districts, containing not above 1,000, or less than 400 souls. In large towns the sub-districts are to comprise not above 1,500, or less than 1,000 souls; and in these last towns several sub-districts may, if requisite, be united into one poor district or armenbezirke.

From each armenbezirke must be elected one or more of the town deputies, or burghers, according to necessity, for the management of the affairs of the poor; and it is also required that at least one of those elected should be a member of the society for the poor (or armen-direction), and these individuals are required to find out and verify the condition of the poor of their own district.

The direction of the affairs of the poor is therefore, as thus established, confided entirely to the burghers of the town, and the provision of the funds rests upon the charity and benevolence of the inhabitants.

As regards hospitals and public charities, one or more of the members of the armen-direction undertake to watch that the funds are expended according to the provisions made by the founders.

In the villages, the direction of the funds for the poor is confided to the mayor (or schûltze), assisted by individuals chosen for that purpose from amongst the principal inhabitants of the commune.

PRUSSIA.

This body is accountable to the councillor of the district (or land rath), who is in like manner under the jurisdiction of the provincial regency, and the whole is under the inspection of the 1st section of the home department.

I have now specified the authorities who control the maintenance for the poor, and who are likewise charged with the care of administering to their wants.

As regards the manner of obtaining the necessary funds, everything is done by donations and private charity. Each house proprietor, each inhabitant of a floor or apartment, is in his turn visited by some of the members of the sub-committee of the armenbezirke, who, in return for the donation, deliver a receipt for the amount.

The donations from residents are generally monthly, and vary in amount according to the number of individuals in the family, or to the feelings of generosity of the donor. No rate or calculated fixed table exists, regulating the sum to be given by each individual or head of a family.

Each town being governed by its own particular laws and customs with regard to the management of its poor, and each from accidental circumstances differing from its neighbour, it is impossible to particularize any other general principle that is followed, than the establishments of the armen-direction, and of the sub-committees; which detailed information I have extracted as above from the Städte Ordnung, or town laws, as revised in 1831.

As regards the practical working of this system, I have no hesitation in affirming, that it is found universally to succeed, that the effect upon the comfort, character and condition of the inhabitants, is, first, to afford speedy and sufficient means of relief when necessary; that it prevents in a great degree false applications, inasmuch as that the districts being small, the really needy are more easily discovered; and secondly, that as no tax is fixed for the maintenance of the poor, it renders all classes more willing and anxious to assist, according to their respective means, in sustaining the funds required for the support of the poor. (p. 426.)

On the other hand, the following is the statement of Mr. Gibsone: (pp. 460, 461. 463, 464.)

In general it is the duty of the police authority in every community, where any person in distress may come, to render him the needful assistance for the moment, which must be repaid,

- a) by the provincial pauper fund, if the person be a foreigner, or have no domicile; or,
- b) by the community, or owner of the estate (called the dominium), he belongs to, if a native of the country.

Destitute Able-bodied.

Every pretended needy person is duly examined by a medical man, whether he be bodily and mentally able to maintain himself (it is the same with families) by work, and in this case he is required by the police to do so, and to conduct himself properly. Any one who does not, is sent to the poor-and-workhouse (the work is compulsive) of the province, where he is taught to earn a livelihood. If the distress be temporary, the proprietor of the estate (called the dominium), or the community in which the indigent person has acquired a settlement, is bound to afford the requisite relief; yet having the right to claim restitution, upon the assisted person becoming able to make it. When this is not the case, and the relief has been afforded by a community, the members of it must bear the expense, if in a town, out of its general funds; if in the country, in the proportions they pay the land-tax to the king, called war-contribution. The support is rendered in giving a dwelling, (with a garden, if in the country), fuel, salt, money, &c., wholly or partly, sometimes by boarding the pauper, according to the necessity of the case.

There is in every province a poor-and-workhouse (the work compulsive), for receiving the following persons:

- a) such as have indeed a fixed place of abode in the country, yet seek their livelihood by begging, although able to work;
- b) actual paupers, who receive a fixed maintenance or aid from communities, benevolent institutions, &c., yet notwithstanding wander about the country begging;
- c) invalid soldiers, found begging, as every soldier who has been rendered invalid in war enjoys a pension from the state (a very small one);
- d) travelling handicraftsmen, as none are permitted to travel in their profession who have not the means of subsistence, or are above 30 years old;
- e) foreign vagabonds, until they can be transported over the borders;
- f) those who have been punished for crime, in the fortress or house of correction, and after expiration of their term of punishment, are unable to show how they can earn an honest livelihood;
- g) such as by particular sentences are, or by future laws may be, declared subjects for the compulsive workhouse.

It is left to every proprietor of an estate (called the dominium), to every town and village community, to provide and select, at their option, a livelihood for those individuals, having a settlement under their jurisdiction, who cannot procure such for themselves. Should a proprietor of an estate, or a community, not fulfil this obligation, it is compelled to do so, but which seldom is necessary.

It is to be observed, that when, from bad crops, inundations, &c., a general scarcity occurs in particular parts of the country, works of public utility, such as turnpike-roads, drains and the like, are ordered by government, in order to afford the inhabitants the means of subsistence, which work is paid for with money, grain, salt or other articles, as most suitable, according to circumstances.

No person, able-bodied or capable of earning a livelihood, has a legal claim for support, but he can only, when misfortune befalls him, receive a temporary aid in the way of an advance. For further answer to this question, see the preceding answers.

All children capable of going to school are obliged to attend it. Those whose parents are unable to pay the expense must be sent thither at the cost of the community to which they belong, which must also do the needful for clothing, feeding, educating and apprenticing them. Such children also frequently receive assistance from private benevolent societies and individuals.

Impotent through Age.

In the towns, the community must provide for all the absolute wants of the poor out of the municipal funds, and in every town a board is established for directing the management of these affairs.

In the country, the proprietors of the estates, or the village authorities, must provide for these wants, for which, in the latter case, the members of the village community must contribute in the proportions as they pay the taxes to the king, say the land-tax, called war contribution.

In Dantzic, the poor, besides being placed in the poor-house or otherwise assisted, receive alms at their homes from a charitable society of the citizens, whose funds arise partly from private contributions, partly from an annual supply out of the municipal funds. From this society about 1,000 persons yearly receive support, (about one-third males and two-thirds females), but not above about 3s. to 4s., and not under 1s. monthly, for the time the support is required. In winter, when severe, they get also firing, partly in fir-wood, but chiefly in turf. The sum thus disbursed is now considerably less than before, from the control on the part of the magistracy being much stricter. The whole annual expense of the society is about 1,200*l.* sterling.

Sick.

The law prescribes that every town and every village community must support its own members when in distress, provided there be no relations able to do so, and the owners of estates are under a similar obligation; hence the sick stand under the same regulations as the impotent through age.

Effects of the foregoing Institutions.

The regulations for the support of paupers operate beneficially on industry. Every proprietor of an estate, every community of a town or village, has unquestionably the most correct knowledge of the bodily condition, of the moral conduct, of the expertness, of the capability to earn a livelihood in whole or in part, and of the pecuniary circumstances, of the needy persons under their jurisdiction, whom they are bound to support, as well as of the circumstances of their relatives. The pauper knows that aid must always be given when necessary, and he applies to the proper authority for it, when not duly afforded; while he is, on the other hand, deterred from making exorbitant claims, by his situation being so thoroughly known in every respect, and from ungrounded demands not being complied with. In general, therefore, neither the party called upon for assistance, nor that requiring it, inclines to let the authority interpose, but an amicable arrangement usually takes place between them, according to existing circumstances. The pauper must perform what service or work he can for those who must assist him, or for himself, towards contributing to his own support as far as in his power; while those rendering assistance can seek only in themselves the means to do so, of course in the least expensive and most suitable manner. The paupers are employed at various kinds of work and service, accordingly as such is wanted and as they are able to perform it, and this as well for their supporters, privately, as in the public workhouses.

It is, in general, to be observed that the right of settlement of individuals is established in the following manner:

If any person acquires the right of citizenship in a town, or a possession (house or lying-ground) in the country, or if he is permitted by the local authority to form a regular domicile by becoming householder, he then is considered as an expressly accepted member of the community, and the obligation to support him, when reduced to want, immediately commences. So soon, therefore, as any person shows an intention to settle, or to become householder, in a place, it is the business of the community, or of those interested, to ascertain, through the medium of the proper local authority, whether or not the immigrant possesses sufficient means to maintain himself there. Should this not be the case, and he is evidently unable to earn a livelihood, then must the support of the individual (or family) be borne by the community where he has previously dwelt, and it is not advisable to permit the change of domicile. Thence is the rule justified, that upon any person being regularly received as member of a community, with the express consent of its magistracy, that community becomes bound to render him support, when his situation requires it. Minors belong to the community in which their parents were settled, even after the death of these. With regard to other inhabitants, only that town or village community is bound to maintain a pauper, where he last contributed to its public burthens.

PRUSSIA.

A person who is of age, and has resided three succeeding years in a place (for instance, as servant,) acquires by that the right of settlement, but which he again loses by leaving the place for one year. Privileged corporations, that possess a particular poor-fund, or raise among themselves, pursuant to their laws, the means to provide for their needy members, are specially bound to maintain them.

In conformity with the rules before stated, must also the wives, widows and destitute children of paupers be supported by the communities or corporations, or the owners of the estates.

Paupers for whom communities, corporations, proprietors of estates, or relatives, are not bound to provide, according to the foregoing rules, or when these are unable to do so, have to be maintained in provincial poor-and-workhouses. These are established at the expense of government, and supported by contributions from the whole province.

We are inclined to suspect that the practice corresponds with Mr. Abercromby's account, and the general law with Mr. Gibsone's, and that the pauper possesses a legal right to assistance, though that right is seldom enforced, because the impotent are voluntarily provided for, and the able-bodied would probably be sent to a penal workhouse. It is probable indeed that the law itself is vague as respects the relief of the able-bodied. The difficulty in framing a poor law, of either expressly admitting or expressly rejecting their claim, is such that almost all who have legislated on the subject have left their legal right undecided. Mr. Gibsone's statement that no person able-bodied or capable of earning a livelihood has a legal claim for support, is inconsistent with his general account of the law, unless we change or into and.

SAXONY.

SAXONY.

But little information has been received from Saxony.

Some of the modes in which relief is administered appear, as they are nakedly stated in the report, to be liable to great abuse. We are told that persons receive from the parishes to which they belong assistance in proportion to their inability to maintain themselves; that a sum is fixed as necessary to support a man, and that if he cannot earn the whole, the difference is given to him as relief; and that with respect to lodging, the parish interferes in cases where ejection takes place on account of non-payment of house-rent, and guarantees payment for a short time to those who agree to receive the houseless, (p. 479). These customs, as they are mentioned, resemble the worst forms of English mal-administration, allowance and payment of rent.

Mr. Forbes, however, states that more relief than is strictly necessary is never given, and that it has been the steady determination of every government to render the situation of those receiving parochial relief too irksome for it to proceed from any other than the merest necessity. It is probable, therefore, that a strict administration prevents the customs which have been mentioned from being sufficiently prevalent to produce what have been their consequences with us.

WURTEMBERG.

WURTEMBERG.

The information respecting Wurtemberg is remarkably full and precise, having been collected with great care by Sir Edward Disbrowe and Mr. Wellesley, assisted by the provincial authorities and the government.

The kingdom of Wurtemberg consists of about 8,000 square English miles, inhabited by 1,578,000 persons, being about 200 persons to a square mile. It is divided into 64 bailiwicks, which are subdivided into civil communities or parishes, containing each not less than 500 individuals. Each parish constitutes a separate corporation, and the parishes in each bailiwick also constitute one superior corporation.

A large proportion of the parishes appears to possess a fund called pium corpus, arising partly from voluntary contributions and other casual receipts, but principally from funds which previously to the Reformation had been employed for the purposes of the Roman-catholic worship, and instead of being confiscated by the government, as was the case in England, were directed to be employed for charitable purposes.

Many of them also have almshouses, or, as they are called in the reports, hospitals for the residence of the poor, and other endowments for their use; and almost all possess an estate called an allemand, which is the joint property of the persons for the time being having bürgerrecht, or the right of citizenship in the parish, and is, together with the pium corpus and endowments, the primary fund for

for the relief of the poor. Subject to the claims of the poor, the allemand is divided among the bürghers, without reference to their wealth or their wants, but apparently in equal proportion to each head of a family, and enjoyed in severalty, but inalienably, either for life or for a shorter period.

Sir E. Disbrowe states (p. 485) that the government of the parish is vested in the mayor and a certain number of counsellors for life, (who appear to be appointed by the government), and an equal number of representatives chosen by the burghers, half of whom go out by rotation every second year.

About nine-tenths of the population appear to be bürghers; the remainder are called beisitzers or settled non-freemen, and differ from the burghers by having no claim on the allemand, or vote in the election of the parochial authorities.

Bürgerrecht is obtained by inheritance, or by purchase at a sum regulated by law, but varying according to the allemand and the population of each parish.

It is lost by emigration or misconduct. 1st, A person who has lost his bürgerrecht is entitled to purchase that right in the parish in which he formerly possessed it: a person who never possessed that right is entitled to purchase it; 2dly, In the parish in which he spent the last five years. In default of this claim, 3dly, in the parish in which he obtained his marriage licence. 4thly, If unmarried, in the parish in which he was born; or 5thly, If he have none of these claims, in the parish to which the police thinks fit to assign him. If he cannot or will not pay the requisite purchase money, he is bound by payment of half the previous sum to constitute himself a beisitzer, and has similar claims to admission as a beisitzer. If he cannot pay this sum he is assigned by the police to a parish, as a beisitzer, without payment.

Having given this outline of the mode in which the population is distributed, we proceed to state from the report furnished by the government, the degree and mode in which the poor are relieved. (pp. 524, 525, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 517.)

39. He who cannot derive the necessities of life either from his property, his labour or his trade, nor be supported by his nearest relations and other persons bound to it by private right, has a claim on the support of the (political or civil) community in which he has the right of a burgher or of a beisitzer.

In times of particular distress, not only those who are absolutely poor, but those also who are indeed not without property, but, by the unfavourable circumstances of the times, are rendered incapable of providing the necessities of life for themselves and their children, have a right to require from the communities of which they are members, the necessary support. Thus in the year of scarcity in 1817, the spiritual and temporal overseers of the communities were expressly made responsible by the government, that none of those who were confided to their superintendence and care should be exposed to suffer want; with the threat, that if, for want of care on the part of the overseers, any person should perish, the guilty should be prosecuted with all the rigour of the law.

If a person belonging to one or more communities has need of public support, the share to be borne by each is determined by the government authorities, having respect to the merely personal or family connexion with the several communities.

Each of the three religious persuasions prevailing in the kingdom has the full enjoyment of its poor fund. Poor members of the community, however, who belong to a religious persuasion different to that which prevails in the place, cannot be denied the necessary relief from the poor fund of the place, on account of the difference of religion.

Of the Bailiwick Corporations.

40. If a community has so many poor, or is so limited in its resources, that it is not in a condition properly to support its poor, the other communities of the bailiwick, particularly the towns, so far as they are better able, and have few or no poor, are bound by the law to assist such a poor community with their alms. A general obligation of the bailiwick corporation to assist those communities of the bailiwicks which are not able to afford the necessary assistance to their poor inhabitants, is not ordained by the laws, unless such assistance is to the interest of the bailiwick corporation as such.

In the year 1817, however, the bailiwick corporations were enjoined, so long as the dearth lasted, and with reference to old laws, in case single communities should be unable sufficiently to provide for all the inhabitants, to give them credit so far as to answer either partly or entirely for the debt, but always with the reservation of repayment by the receivers of the aid. And with respect to the support of the poor, which are assigned to a community, it is expressly ordered, that if the assignment is founded on one of the titles to a right of settlement enumerated under 1, 2 and 3*, the community against which the right is established is to bear only one-third, and the whole of the bailiwick the other two-thirds;

* See above for the statement of the different grounds on which a man may claim the right to obtain a settlement in a parish.

WURTEMBERG.

thirds; but if the assignment is founded on one of the other titles, the whole bailiwick has to take upon itself this support. The expense which is hereby incurred by a bailiwick constitutes an object of what is called amtsvergleichung, and is imposed on the whole old and new rateable cadastre of the bailiwick.

Of the Duty of the State.

41. The public Exchequer affords, partly on account of the previous sequestration of the church property, and of some other funds and revenues destined for pious and charitable purposes, and partly without any such special legal ground, contributions for the foundation and support of various public beneficent institutions, and it sometimes assists single bailiwicks, communities and individuals in particular cases, by contributions for charitable purposes. But a general obligation of the public exchequer to intervene in case of the inability of the communities or bailiwicks, is nowhere enacted in the laws of Wurtemberg, and is also not recognised by the government, because too great liberality on its part, and the grant of a distinct head of expenditure for this purpose, as in general the transferring of local burthens to the public exchequer, might lead to very extensive consequences, and might gradually give rise to always increasing claims, which, in the impossibility of ranging single cases under general points of view, it might not be always possible successfully to meet.

Amount of Relief to the Poor.

42. What is necessary for a poor person or a poor family, and how much such a person or family may require for their necessary support, is not expressed in the laws of Wurtemberg; on the contrary, the answer to this question is left to the judgment of the magistrate in every particular case. In fact, it is not well susceptible of a general answer, because the wants of men are so very different, according to their constitutions and inclinations, and the means of satisfying these wants depend too much on personal, local and temporary circumstances.

Support and Employment of the Adult Poor.

Relief of the able-bodied out-doors.

75. With respect to the adult poor, it is enacted by our oldest laws, that such grown-up poor who would willingly work, but cannot find employment, shall, as far as possible, have means found them by the magistrates to earn a livelihood by their labour; but that lazy idlers who are strong and healthy shall be compelled to work; and according to a recent ordinance, the able-bodied who claim support from the public funds are bound to take any work for which they have adequate strength, whether it be public or private, which is assigned to them by the local overseers, receiving for it proportionate moderate wages. If they refuse to do the work assigned them, and cannot allege that they can earn something by other work or produce some other excuse, the overseer is authorized to employ towards them means of compulsion.

According to old laws, poor persons who still have a house and lands, or at least some little portions of land, and who have suffered by failure of the crops, frost, &c., or who cannot sow their lands, or are unable to dispose of them without great loss, but are still able to work, and have hopes of retrieving their losses in the harvest and autumn, shall be assisted by the communities, which, according as the case may be, shall lend to them from the public fund a sufficient sum, to be repaid as they may be able to do it in course of time, or shall at least give security for them.

The laws also order that in public works which the communities have executed by daily labourers, able-bodied who have a claim to support from the public funds shall be employed in preference.

In places where the hospitals have lands of their own, and farm them on their own account, poor persons are also employed in preference, at suitable wages.

Not only in the year of scarcity, 1817, and subsequently, many adult poor have been employed at suitable wages on the public account in other hard work, such as forest labours, planting trees, cultivating waste lands, turf-digging, working in the quarries, lime-pits, or excavating for antiquities, pulling down old buildings, cutting down avenues of old trees, levelling ground, laying out new public walks or churchyards, draining marshes, cleaning common sewers and streets, working at bridges, roads and canals, &c.

79. According to the ancient laws, the communities are bound to advance money on loan according to the ability of the poor fund and to the circumstances of the persons, to poor mechanics who cannot begin or carry on their trade, without assistance, which sum they are to repay as they may be able to do in time.

81. But the indirect support of the poor by employment and loans has, however, its limits.

The extraordinary expense incurred in 1817 for public works, was indeed justified at that time by the extraordinary distress; but for the constant prosecution of such works, there would be wanting in most places occasion and opportunity, and at all events the necessary means; nor could the communities well be expected, merely for the sake of employing the poor, to have such works done by them if they are not absolutely necessary, or at least urgently required at the moment, or if they could be performed at a cheaper rate by contract or by statute labour.

In many places there is not always an opportunity to obtain work for daily wages, with private persons, especially in winter and for women and children; or at least the wages at different times of the year, and for many kinds of work, are too small to support a family, and when public institutions for giving employment are in question, great prudence is necessary, that while one person is provided with work and wages, another may not find the

without the assistance of the magistrates.

But when due attention is paid to these very important considerations, it is extremely difficult, in Wurtemberg at least, to find means of employing the poor capable of work, by the intervention of the magistrates, when they are themselves not able to obtain suitable employment, and this difficulty must increase from year to year, in which the number and extent of the public institutions for employing children increase, and as the employment of the prisoners in the penal establishments (police and workhouses, and houses of correction) is extended.

On this account, there are indeed in the capital, and in some other places, where for the sake of the moral gain a small pecuniary sacrifice is not regarded, particular public establishments for employing the adult poor in spinning and other such work; but they nowhere extend to a whole bailiwick; wherever they still exist, though the poor in them are not fed and clothed, but only employed, their support requires considerable annual aid from public funds; and in most places the establishments formerly opened for the employment of the adult poor have been entirely broken up, with the exception of a part of the inhabitants of the poor-houses, (s. 91.)

Consequently, and especially till the new institutions for the better education of the youthful poor shall have been able to produce their entire effect, there will still remain in Wurtemberg a very considerable number, not only of poor unable or unwilling to work, but also of such as are both able and willing, who cannot be supported otherwise than directly.

82. In many places the local poor are, with this view, allowed themselves to collect gifts in money, food, &c. from the wealthier inhabitants of the place; but in most of these places this kind of collecting of such gifts is limited to the houses of certain of the richer inhabitants, who have given them express permission to do so, and to fixed days and hours, and it is likewise subject to the superintendence of the police; but as a general rule, the poor are prohibited from personal collecting of gifts, even in their own place of residence. On the other hand, those poor persons in whose cases the above described indirect means of relief are not applicable, or not sufficient for their necessary support, regularly receive everywhere out of the public funds of the community to which they belong, and under different names, such as alms, gratuity, pension, board, &c., partly weekly, monthly, quarterly or annually, partly without any fixed time, as need may be, gifts according to the wants of the individuals relieved and the ability of the community, sometimes amounting to only one or a few florins, sometimes to 20, 50, 70, and even 100 and more florins, for each person or family in a year. With respect to the extent of these gifts, there is nowhere any general, legal ordinance; but the question, how much is requisite for the necessary support of each individual or of each family, remains entirely for the consideration of the authorities which have to give the relief.

87. Adult poor who, on account of their great age, or of weakness, infirmity and sickness of body or mind, or on account of immoral conduct, cannot be left to themselves, and who have no relations legally bound and able to superintend and take care of them, and who consequently would not be sufficiently relieved merely by a present in money or in kind, are even now, especially in small towns, taken in by all the members of the community in their turn, from house to house, by the day or by the week, or else put out to board in a fixed private house at the expense of the local funds.

In-door relief.

But as nobody readily determines to admit such persons to his table and his house, particularly persons affected with the itch and other contagious disorders; and as even the most careful selection of such private boarding-houses, with the best superintendence which is possible in such cases, frequently answers neither the expectations of those who provide such accommodation, nor the wants of those intended to be provided, it is very fortunate that, partly so far back as the 14th and 15th centuries, partly in modern and very recent times, almost in every large and small town, and even in some villages, partly by particular endowments for the purpose, partly at the expense of the local funds, a distinct public poor-house, or even several such poor-houses, have been built, or purchased, or taken from debtors in lieu of payment, which were not precisely intended to provide for persons of the above description, but rather to receive foreign vagabonds, and also for fear of the leprosy, plague or cholera; which establishments, founded under various denominations, such as poor-house, beggars-house, hospital, lazaretto, infirmary, leprosy-house, cholera-house, &c. &c., now that the entrance of foreign vagrants is prevented, and the fear of plague, leprosy and cholera is past, can be made use of for the reception of the native poor belonging to the above classes.

Many of these houses can, indeed, accommodate only 10, 20, 30 or 40 persons, but many of them are calculated for a hundred or several hundred persons.

Formerly it was usual to receive also poor children, with or without their parents, into these houses, but latterly the children are otherwise disposed of, and only married persons, without children, or single adult poor, are admitted, who for the most part are, as far as possible, kept separate according to their sex, and partly according to other circumstances, especially as prescribed by existing ordinances. Separate rooms for insane and sick persons, particularly for those who have the venereal disease and the itch, are fitted up in these poor-houses, so as to answer, as much as possible, this particular object; and in some cases separate buildings are allotted for this purpose.

90. In many of these poor-houses, those who are admitted into them have only free
P.L. (F.) E lodging

WURTEMBERG. lodging and firing, and sometimes clothing; and to provide for their other wants, a weekly, monthly, annual allowance in money or in kind.

In others, they are directly provided with every thing; that is, they have in the house free lodging, candles, firing, bedding, clothes, food, and in case of sickness, medical care, medicine and attendance. In general, in this case, each of the two sexes, or a great number of such persons, nearly of the same class, have a common sleeping-room, and a common eating and working-room. Sometimes however only two, three or four poor persons together, and often even individual poor have their separate rooms.

In the common sleeping rooms, every person has his separate bed, generally feather beds, such as are usually found in poor independent families.

The clothing is mostly warmer and stronger, but not so good-looking and more old-fashioned than that of the poorer independent citizens.

The food consists generally in the morning of soup, at noon a farinaceous dish and vegetables, and once, twice, rarely three times in the week, of a quarter or half a pound of meat; in the evening of soup, together with milk or potatoes. There are, however, poor-houses where they get no breakfast in the morning; at dinner only farinaceous food or vegetables (not both together), and once a week only, or even but a few times in the year, on certain holidays, or even not at all, meat, and in the evening nothing but soup *. When this diet is furnished by contract, 5, 5½, 6, 7, 8 to 8½ kreutzer daily per head are at present paid for it; besides which, however, the contractor mostly has lodging and firing gratis and the use of a garden.

Besides this, every person receives in most of these houses, 3, 3½, 4, 5, 6 and even 7 pounds of bread weekly, and in some places a few kreutzer every week for snuff; wine is given only where there are special endowments for that purpose, mostly on certain holidays. The sick have better and lighter food and wine, as the physician thinks fit to prescribe in every case.

In some of these houses, more, and in others less, care is taken that the inmates of them do not unnecessarily go out, and that those who are able to do some work are not idle. Some hospitals have lands which they keep in their own hands, and in this case the inmates are employed as much as possible in assisting in the agricultural operations; where there is no land, they must at least prepare the necessary firewood, carry wood and water, help in washing, cooking and other domestic employments; they must spin, wind yarn, knit, sew, make clothes and shoes for the house, &c. In some poor-houses they are also employed in making wooden pegs for shoemakers and tilers, matches, &c.

On the whole, however, the employment of these people in the poor-houses does not produce much.

In the year 1817, and during the dearth which prevailed at that time, an old law which had fallen into desuetude was revived; according to which, the rich and opulent who, after having been previously applied to for voluntary contributions, should not come forward in a manner suitable to their property, are to be taxed by the magistrates in a sum conformable to their income, and according to all the circumstances of their situation.

The comparative situation of the pauper and the independent labourer is thus stated at the conclusion of the government report:—

If we now compare the situation of one of the poorest of the Wurtemberg poor who support themselves independently by their labour without external aid (see § 40.) with that of one of the more favoured of the Wurtemberg poor who lives by public charity, for instance, the inmate of an hospital, and even of a prison, it might certainly appear that the condition of the latter is preferable to that of the former.

In fact, we often see such hospital inmates, and even prisoners, attain the most advanced age, while many a poor day-labourer and artisan sinks at a much earlier age under the weight of his cares and the want of necessaries. In fact, many an inmate of an hospital and many a prisoner, even with bodily infirmities and sufferings, still seems to find his condition quite comfortable, and shows himself thankful for the good which he enjoys, while many a day-labourer or artisan in the enjoyment of good bodily health feels himself miserable and curses his existence; in fact, many a one seeks admission into the hospital who would be very well able to provide himself with necessaries by his work at home. In fact, the man often separates from his wife, or the wife from her husband or from the children, to be received into the hospital. In fact, many a one does not economize, but squanders what he has, and does not work in order to earn something, because he thinks that he always has the right of being received into the hospital as a last resource. In fact, in many places where there are rich hospitals and other foundations, the number of the poor is proportionably greater than in places where less is done for their support. In fact, many a one continues to beg and to steal who has already been frequently imprisoned for these offences, because he finds his situation in the workhouse very tolerable in comparison with the laborious life of a poor man at liberty.

However, the situation of the inmates of an hospital, even of those which are the most liberal to their inmates, is by no means so enviable as from the above comparison it might seem to be. Frequently their residence is embittered by their being obliged to live together

* The word "suppe" here and elsewhere translated by the word soup, has, however a far more general signification; the proper definition of it being "boiled fluid food, eaten alone, warm, with a spoon." Thus the Germans have water soup, beer soup, milk soup, bread soup, flour soup, wine soup, &c ther with rude, quarrelsome, mad, silly and disgusting persons. Many embitter their own lives by a discontentedness, which may either be natural to them or communicated by others. Many dislike the kind or the quantity of the work allotted to them, the restrictions with respect to the time of going out and returning home, which are prescribed by the regulations of the house. Prisoners, in particular, consider the loss of their freedom as an intolerable burden. Besides this, too, the treatment is by no means in general and in every poor-house so good as it is represented in the above comparison; hence it is not the case with all the poor received into a poor-house, that they have voluntarily sought admission there, or that they voluntarily and willingly remain in it; hence, too, the applications for admission to these houses are not everywhere equally pressing; hence the assertion that the existence of such houses increases the number of prodigals, idlers and poor, cannot be taken as generally correct.

At all events, the above comparison applies to the actual inmates of the hospital, rather than to those poor who are relieved only by money and commodities, or by finding them employment; for the relief which they receive in this manner is in most places dealt out with so scanty a measure, that their situation is little or not at all better than that of a healthy poor person, who maintains himself independently by the labour of his hands, without external assistance. The independent poor man always has the cheering consciousness of maintaining himself and his family by his own exertions, and of enjoying the respect of his fellow-citizens, which is always lost in a greater or less degree by the poor man who receives relief, to whom, in the eyes of the better classes, a kind of disgrace attaches, which must often fall on the idle, who is excluded from elections of the community, &c. restricted in marrying, &c.

And the authors go on to express a belief that pauperism is diminishing, and that the number of paupers, which in 1820 amounted to 64,896, does not now exceed 50,000, or about 1-30th of the whole population.

The preference which the government reporter appears to give to out-door relief is opposed to the preface to the rules of the Weinsberg House of Industry.

L'ancienne manière de pourvoir aux besoins des pauvres par des aumônes hebdomadaires en argent et en pain, et par des habillements, en les logeant dans une habitation resserrée, en payant aux uns leur loyer, aux autres leurs pensions, a entraîné, trop d'abus et a par cela même peu répondu à son but. En effet on manquait de la surveillance nécessaire sur une classe d'hommes en grande partie si déréglés et si corrompus. On n'avoit point fourni d'occupation à ceux qui étoient encore en état de travailler, et on n'avoit pu en aucune façon réprimer la mendicité et le vice. (p. 500.)

The object of this establishment is said to be,

Art. 1.—De former une habitation commune pour tous ceux qui ont besoin d'assistance, qu'ils soient malades ou en santé, et de leur donner des secours pour tout ce qui leur est nécessaire.

Art. 2.—De leur donner autant que possible de l'occupation selon leur plus ou moins grande capacité de travail.

Art. 3.—D'accorder cette occupation non seulement à ceux qui la recherchent volontairement, mais même d'obliger à travailler des hommes sans fortune et qui n'ont pas de métier fixe, mais qui veulent vivre aux dépens d'autrui, du moins tant qu'ils n'entrent pas au service d'une famille de bonne réputation.

II.—Conditions d'Admission.

Art. 6.—Les personnes qui ont besoin d'assistance sont à peu d'exceptions près des hommes qui autrefois ont été livrés au vice, ou qui ont été ou trop étourdis ou incapables de faire des épargnes et qui sont maintenant hors d'état de gagner leur vie. Les anciens secours consistoient, à payer leur loyer, à leur fournir du bois, en des aumônes hebdomadaires, en argent et en pain; mais on ne pouvoit pas penser avec confiance que ces personnes employaient bien ces dons. C'est pourquoi on n'admet dans cette maison de charité que des personnes dignes d'assistance; on les habille et les nourrit; car des gens honnêtes, même avec peu de talents, peuvent toujours gagner leur vie dans ce pays.

Cette admission a lieu à la demande des indigens, qui à cause de la faiblesse de l'âge, de l'incapacité de travail, ne sont plus en état de se nourrir.

Art. 7.—La direction de l'établissement ainsi que le président du comité de fondation, s'ils sont pleinement persuadés de la nécessité, peuvent ordonner l'admission des gens pauvres. Ceux-ci doivent s'engager par écrit à suivre les lois de l'établissement. Cette admission doit toujours être confirmée dans la prochaine séance du comité de fondation. Les mêmes conditions ont lieu pour l'admission des malades qui n'ont pas le moyen de se guérir et de se soigner.

Art. 8.—Mais dans aucun cas cette maison de charité ne doit servir de demeure périodique à des gens qui ne sont pas accoutumés à un métier fixe, ou qui ne veulent pas rester chez des maîtres, ni à des personnes qui voudroient y séjourner en hiver, temps où les affaires ordinaires languissent, ou qui en été, quand elles ont gagné quelque argent dans une journée, passent les deux jours suivants à ne rien faire et à vivre dans le libertinage.

WURTEMBERG.

Art. 9.—Quiconque donc est une fois admis entre dans l'établissement avec tout ce qu'il possède, et s'engage à y travailler et à y rester toujours.

Art. 10.—Dans tous les cas les volontaires aussi bien que ceux qu'on y force du moment qu'ils sont reçus sont regardés comme pauvres, et ce qu'ils possèdent entre dans la caisse de fondation.

Art. 11.—Dans le cas d'une conduite extraordinairement bonne de la part d'un pauvre et si l'on peut espérer avec fondement qu'il pourra se nourrir par lui-même, ou si l'on veut entrer au service d'une famille de bonne réputation, le conseil de fondation peut lui permettre de sortir de l'institut. Dans ce cas la fortune d'un tel individu lui est restituée, en retenant à des personnes capables de travail f. 58, et à celles qui en sont incapables f. 88; aux malades on retient autant qu'ils ont dépensé pendant leur séjour dans l'institut.

Tous les gens dès l'âge de 14 ans, qui ne peuvent pas prouver qu'ils sont au service d'une honnête famille, sont forcés d'y travailler.

Art. 12.—Toutes les grandes personnes des deux sexes qui sont hors d'état de se nourrir par eux-mêmes ni par le produit de leurs mains, et qui tombent à la charge des autres, peuvent y être admises. Elles doivent pourtant, avant que la police puisse exiger leur admission, avoir été punies trois fois, ou pour avoir mendié ou maraudé. (p. 501.)

Regulations of this severity prove that the able-bodied paupers at least are a small and degraded class, exciting little sympathy, for whom enough is supposed to be done if they are prevented from starving. As far indeed as can be collected from the Weinsberg regulations, the undeserving may be utterly refused relief, since it does not appear that relief is to be given out of the house, and the applications for admission by undeserving objects are to be rejected.

The actual working of the system may be best inferred from the detailed accounts supplied by Sir Edward Disbrowe of 18 parishes.

Of these, four, that is Obertürkheim, Osweil, Neckar Weihingen and Egolsheim, provide for their poor by rates levied on all the inhabitants. During each of four years, from 1829 to 1832 inclusive, the persons receiving relief in Obertürkheim were three out of a population of 842, at an annual expense of 5*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, or about 1½*d.* per head on the whole population. In Osweil the average number was eight, out of a population of 1,608; average annual expense, 25*l.*, or about 3½*d.* a head. In Neckar Weihingen, of which the population is 1,070, the persons relieved were, in 1829, one man; in 1830, one man and one woman; in 1831, one man and one woman; and the annual expense in 1829 was 5*l.*; and in each of the years 1830 and 1831, 4*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, or about 1*d.* a head. The number relieved in Egolsheim, of which the population is 618, is not stated; but it must have been very trifling, since the average annual expense is stated at 2*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, which is less than 1*d.* per head.

In those places in which the relief of the poor is wholly or principally supplied from endowments the annual expenditure is, as might have been expected, much larger. But even in these it seldom amounts to 1*s.* per head on the whole population, being about one-twelfth of the average expenditure in England. And in the whole bailiwick of Ludwigsberg, containing 29,068 inhabitants, in the year 1831 only 372 persons received regular, and 371 persons irregular, (and indeed merely medical) relief. The kingdom of Wurtemberg therefore appears to have been, as yet, eminently successful in reconciling a recognition of the right to relief with economy in its distribution.

BAVARIA.

BAVARIA.

With respect to the Bavarian institutions we have little information excepting the text of the law. The following extracts will show its general tendency: (pp. 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 562, 563.)

Poor Law authorities.

Each town, market and village, is to have an institution for the poor; but if several villages wish to unite in forming one of these institutions, it is not only to be permitted, but every facility is to be afforded it.

Each provincial district (landgericht) must have an institution of its own.

All the inhabitants of such district are obliged, according to their means, to contribute to that purpose; each person is, besides, bound to continue to support those poor relations whom the laws direct him to maintain.

The claims for relief are to be fixed according to the laws of their district (heimath gesetz.) Sometimes, in cases of great necessity, relief is allowed to strangers who do not belong to that parish.

The overseers consist (unless it is otherwise determined) of the directors, of the police, commissaries and magistrates.

In cases where medical aid is necessary, they are to be attended by physicians, who are appointed by the state.

In towns and larger market-towns, besides the above-named overseers, a council is to be be formed, consisting of the clergyman and the mayor and persons deputed by the magistrates and all classes of the people, in proportion to the number of inhabitants of each place.

In smaller market-towns the clergyman and deputies from the peasants form this council.

When several villages join together to form one of these institutions, a general committee is to be formed.

The members of the council for the institutions for the poor are to be elected in the same way as the magistrates and mayors (burgermeister).

When several parishes are joined together, a deputy is to be chosen from each, and again, several are elected from among these, who are to take immediate charge of the affairs. Each deputy is chosen for three years, and is obliged to perform his duties without remuneration; no inhabitant is allowed to refuse to perform his functions the first time he is elected; extraordinary merits in the service of the poor are to be publicly distinguished.

The public charge is brought into action in the following manner:

1st. By institutions for working.

2d. By institutions for taking care of people who are unable to work.

3d. By institutions for alms.

Mode of relief.

1. Materials and tools are to be distributed to those paupers (who, notwithstanding all inquiries and interference, cannot obtain the necessary work), to be used at their houses until the required situation can be obtained. If in larger towns the number of these is very great, houses are to be opened and maintained at the expense of the institution for the poor, in which the paupers who are unoccupied are to work.

1. Finding work.

The choice among the different sorts of work in these houses is settled according to the local circumstances, and chiefly according to the facility with which either orders from private persons can be received, or with which the material is obtained and worked; then accordingly as the material can be used for the wants of the poor or can be usefully employed for any other purpose.

The houses for the employment of the poor are always to retain their original destination, namely, an employment for the present of poor men who would otherwise be without work, and therefore do not admit any such persons whose names are not down on the above-named register. Therefore those persons are no longer allowed to work in this house after they have had an offer of work from any other quarter.

2. Houses of nourishment are to be erected for those poor who, besides having no fortune or means of obtaining their livelihood, are in an extraordinary degree helpless, namely, children, sick people, old persons and cripples.

2. In-door relief.

3. Poor people who do not require extraordinary care, and who are not fit to be admitted into the particular houses of nourishment, or cannot yet be received into them, but are unable to gain their livelihood, are to be assisted by alms, which, however, are not to be given without the most complete proof of want.

3. Money relief.

The alms are to be given in the form of gifts of money. These gifts are sometimes to be increased, according to the price of provisions; and from time to time a maximum is to be fixed, which is on no account to be exceeded.

These gifts of money may, either in part or entirely, be substituted by provisions, if this sort of aid is more easily afforded with regard to lodging, nourishment and clothing.

Relief by quartering on householders.

Their lodging is to be changed every day among the different members of the parish, but the poor who are lodged are obliged to repay this lodging by work. Where there are opportunities, rooms are to be warmed, to which the poor may bring their work.

The nourishment of the poor can be facilitated and insured by the equal division of them among the public, to be maintained in turn, being obliged to partake of the work of their host, or by voluntarily offered days for food, or lastly, by distribution of bread and other nourishment. Where circumstances permit, kitchens are to be erected on purpose for preparing nourishing soups, partly gratis, partly very cheap.

No pauper who partakes of the benefactions of the poor institutions may go away from his dwelling without the knowledge and leave of the head of the village, to stay for some time, or permanently in another village, even if it is in the same district.

Liabilities of pauper.

The same leave from the police direction is necessary when a pauper wishes, for some good reason, to go out of his police district; the leave is only to be given in both cases on well-grounded reasons, and on proofs that the poor will not be burdensome to other villages and districts; also he must give in a declaration to the same, in which, besides his name and village, and the duration of his absence, the villages to which he intends to go must be expressed.

Paupers who have been warned in vain concerning bad conduct and idleness, shall be proceeded against without favour, by the power of magistrates, and be punished accordingly.

The poor institutions can claim repayment from those hypocrites who, although they possess private means, embezzle and grasp at the gifts and assistance which are only intended for true poverty, which shall be fully repaid. The poor institutions can make the same claim from those persons who have renounced their duty of supporting those relations whom they are obliged to support, either by law or by contract.

No marriage between people without capital shall be allowed without the previous permission of the poor institutions.

BAVARIA.

Directors who do not follow these orders, nor pay attention to the Act of the 12th of July 1808 (Government Paper, page 1506), concerning marriages in the country, have to answer for the maintenance of the new families, should they not be able to maintain themselves. In the same manner, the priests and other churchmen shall be responsible for the support of such persons as they have married without leave from the authorities, besides other fines which are imposed on this breach of the rules of the marriage ceremony.

Besides the extraordinary sources, which consist partly in the restitution which hypocrites and relations who avoid their duty are obliged to make, and partly out of fines which are given to the poor fund, or may be hereafter given, are sources for charity from donations from the district fund, and from loans or from taxes.

Sources of fund.

The yearly produce of all charities belongs to the poor institutions, and is used for their purposes. With the establishments for the poor are united the already existing or still accumulating capitals of one or other of the poor institutions; the gain on mortgages or on those possessions whose owners cannot be discovered; the legacies for the poor, when by the will of the deceased they are to be laid out in a regular yearly income, and the fourth part of such legacies as are destined in general for pious purposes.

The voluntary donations consist of casual gifts in money and food which have been given by philanthropic persons of their own accord, for the use of the poor institutions, and in this manner are to be employed for their daily use. Besides these, are the legacies which are meant for immediate division among the poor, and those subscriptions which are collected either by single persons or by companies and corporations.

General and extraordinary collections, in the name of the institutions for the poor, are to be made monthly from house to house, when the members of the parish have bound themselves to a certain subscription; also in the churches on the great holidays, and in the public-houses by means of private poor-boxes; and lastly, on all important and joyful occasions of the state, or single companies.

According to the circumstances of the place, certain accidental funds can be appropriated to the uses of the poor institutions, which particularly on great joyful occasions, namely, great marriages in the taverns, the permission to have music, particularly past the stated times, processions of the apprentices, shooting matches, &c. &c., at shows, balls, masquerades, and so on.

When all the aforesaid sources do not suffice to cover the wants of the poor institutions, it will be supplied out of the funds of the district, or through loans, and then only when all these means cannot be put in practice, or do not suffice to cover their wants, compulsory contributions or poor-taxes are to be resorted to. The manner and amount of these are to be according to the calls of the villages and districts, and are only to be levied for a certain time. It is to be observed, however, that these taxes are to be imposed with the greatest equality, and without any exception among all classes.

The poor institutions and committees in such towns as have no police directors or commissaries, also in the market towns and parishes, are directly under the control of the district tribunal, and under their guidance and inspection.

The inspection of the poor institutions of the whole kingdom is given to the ministry for the interior, which is to receive regularly the report of the state of this branch of administration from the annual accounts and other proper sources, and which is to issue the necessary general orders and regulations, and is to judge of the proposals for the establishment, the arrangement and fitting up of workhouses, and others in which the poor are taken care of, for single districts, whole circles, or for the entire kingdom, which decides with the finance all proposals for allowing certain taxes and poor subscriptions, decides the complaints brought against the general circle and local commissaries, if such do not belong to the private council, and causes the election of certain poor directors where it may be found advisable.

It will be observed, that these institutions bear a considerable resemblance to those of Wurtemberg. Their effects are thus summed up by Lord Erskine:

Upon carefully examining and considering these poor laws of Bavaria, I have come to the conclusion in my own mind that they are useful, and well adapted to the purposes for which they were intended, because by the establishment of the poor institutions (as they are called), by districts over the whole kingdom of Bavaria, with sufficient power by law to carry their provisions into execution, the great and important object is attained of giving relief and support to the aged, helpless and sick, and finding work in workhouses or at their own homes, at a moderate payment, for those who cannot otherwise obtain it; for which purpose a register is to be kept by the guardians of the poor of all those persons who are in want of work, and who are therefore either a burthen upon the parish, or are likely to become so, as also a list of those who wish to employ workmen, in order to endeavour to arrange between them the terms of employment; and that this object may be the more easily attained, the directors are required to be in continual communication with the overseers of public works, the masters of manufactories, with individual proprietors, and societies; and that where there are a quantity of hands capable of work, they are to be passed into that part of the country where they are most wanted; but whenever it may happen, that notwithstanding all inquiries and exertions, the necessary work cannot be obtained, in such cases materials and tools are to be distributed to those paupers who may be in want of them, to be used at their own houses; and if in larger towns the number of those paupers should be very great, houses are to be opened and maintained at the expense of

of the institutions for the poor, in which the paupers who are out of work are to be employed; but the number of paupers to be so employed is always limited to those who have not had a reasonable offer of work from any other quarter. But the great cause why the number of the poor is kept so low in this country, arises from the prevention by law of marriages in cases in which it cannot be proved that the parties have reasonable means of subsistence; and this regulation is in all places and at all times strictly adhered to.

The effect of a constant and firm observance of this rule has, it is true, a considerable influence in keeping down the population of Bavaria, which is at present low for the extent of country, but it has a most salutary effect in averting extreme poverty and consequent misery. (p. 554.)

The last of the countries subject to a system of compulsory relief from which we have a return is the ancient part of the

CANTON DE BERNE.

It appears from that return that the inhabitants of that part of the Canton which is subject to the laws which we are going to describe consisted, in 1831, of 321,468 persons, divided into three classes, heimathloses, aubains and bourgeois.

The first class, which appears to be so small as to be inconsiderable, consists of foreign refugees or their descendants. The second comprises all those who have not a right to bourgeoisie in any commune: their number amounted, in 1780, to 3,482 persons. It is said to have subsequently increased, but it is not probable that it has more than doubled; and we believe that 10,000 persons, or less than 1-32d part of the whole population, exceeds the whole number of those who are not entitled to bourgeoisie; but it is to be observed that the word "aubain," though strictly meaning a person who has no settlement in the canton, is also applied to persons who, though bourgeois, are not entitled to bourgeoisie in the commune in which they reside. The support of the heimathloses and of the aubains, properly so called, that is, of those who have no right whatever to bourgeoisie, falls on the government.

The third class is composed of the descendants of those who, in the 16th century, were held entitled to the public property of each commune, and those who by themselves or their ancestors have purchased bourgeoisie in any commune. Bourgeoisie appears to be personal and hereditary. It is not gained by residence, or lost by absence; and may therefore in fact belong to persons having little other connexion with the commune.

At a period, of which the precise date is not stated, but which appears to belong to the 17th century, it became the law that every one was entitled to support from the commune of which he was bourgeois, and that the sums necessary were to be supplied from the public property of the commune; and so far as that was insufficient, from landed property, to whomever belonging, situated in the commune, and from the personal property of the bourgeois, whether resident or not.

To this hereditary bourgeoisie the raising and administration of the poor-fund was and still is confided; and apparently with most unfortunate results.

The following is the conclusion of the official answer of the government of Berne to the questions proposed by Mr. Morier: (p. 207.)

Quels sont les abus dont on a pu se plaindre dans l'administration?

Dérivent-ils du principe de la loi, ou bien du caractère et de la position sociale des administrateurs?

Quels sont les remèdes qu'on y a apportés?

Quels en ont été les résultats?

Les abus dans l'administration dérivent et du principe de la loi et du caractère et de la position sociale des administrateurs; de la loi, parcequ'elle abandonne toute l'administration aux communes; des administrateurs, parcequ'ils négligent des améliorations, qu'ils distribuent les secours sans discernement, sans examiner la véritable situation du pauvre, et que généralement ils n'ont en vue que les besoins du moment, sans songer à l'avenir. Les communes, prises spécialement, étant la plupart trop petites pour établir des maisons d'éducation et de travail, manquent de moyens coercitifs, et sont en général plus occupées à créer des ressources qu'à diminuer le nombre des pauvres, soit pour le tems actuel, soit pour les générations futures. D'ailleurs, beaucoup de communes, bien que la loi ne les y oblige pas, envoient des secours aux bourgeois domiciliés ailleurs, où elles ne peuvent surveiller leur conduite, pour prévenir leur retour dans la commune où leur présence est désagréable.

La loi abandonnant l'administration aux communes, l'ancien gouvernement a senti qu'on ne pouvait remédier à ces abus sans une nouvelle loi basée sur de tout autres principes, mais par une sollicitude mal entendue pour les pauvres, il a toujours hésité à prendre ce parti.

BERNE.

Quelle influence le système a-t-il eu sur les pauvres sous le rapport, 1^o statistique, 2^o moral ?

1^o. Le nombre en a-t-il augmenté, diminué, ou resté stationnaire ?

2^o. A-t-on trouvé qu'il encourage les mariages imprudents ou le commerce illicite des sexes ?

Les réponses aux derniers articles de la question sont renfermées dans celles plus haut. Le système existant favorise les mariages imprudens et le commerce illicite des sexes ; malgré cela il n'est pas probable qu'il fasse augmenter le nombre des enfans naturels dans sa proportion aux enfans légitimes, précisément parcequ'il favorise en même tems les mariages ; mais il en résulte, qu'il favorise d'une manière extraordinaire l'augmentation de la population pauvre.

Les abus qui sont résultés de ce système funeste sont immenses, et il serait trop long, sans doute, d'en tracer ici le tableau. Il est facile de concevoir, au reste, quelles suites a dû nécessairement entraîner un tel système dans les classes du peuple, où l'éducation, ou plutôt le manque d'éducation, n'a développé aucun sentiment d'honneur, et où l'on ne rougit pas de vivre de la bienfaisance publique au lieu du travail de ses bras. L'oisiveté, l'insouciance, les mariages imprudens et le commerce illicite des sexes, ont été favorisés par la perspective de pouvoir en faire supporter les suites aux autres. L'on a négligé tous les moyens, toutes les occasions de s'instruire, d'apprendre un état, d'exercer une industrie. De là non-seulement des charges toujours croissantes pour la société, mais des entraves au développement des facultés physiques et intellectuelles, au perfectionnement moral, en un mot, à l'avancement de la civilisation. L'expérience a clairement prouvé, que le nombre des pauvres s'accroît à mesure que l'on crée des ressources pour eux, et les communes qui ont le plus de biens et de revenus ont aussi en général la population bourgeoise la plus en arrière dans l'industrie, dans l'activité et dans les efforts de se rendre utile à la société.

Cet état de choses, surtout les charges toujours croissantes dans quelques contrées du pays, et la plainte des communes qui réclament la protection du gouvernement contre l'exigence et l'insolence des pauvres et prétendus pauvres, ont engagé le gouvernement de songer à des moyens de remédier au mal en remontant à sa source, et en cherchant à la faire tarir. L'on ignore encore quels principes serviront de base à la loi nouvelle sur l'administration des pauvres, dont le projet ou du moins les travaux préparatoires sont élaborés dans ce moment dans les bureaux du département de l'intérieur. Mais il est à peu près certain que l'assistance obligée sera, si non abolie, du moins restreinte aux pauvres qui sont incapables de travailler. En supprimant la taxe des pauvres il leur restera dans tous les cas les revenus des fonds qui sont destinés à leur entretien.

The same views are more fully developed in a long and very able supplement to these answers, which immediately follows them and bears the same official character : (pp. 220, 221, 222 & 225.)

L'administration n'était pas dûment contrôlée et vérifiée par les préposés de la commune ; elle était souvent et pendant une longue suite d'années entre les mains de la même famille ; ceux qui en étaient chargés n'avaient que peu ou point de salaire ; il était donc tout naturel et presque inévitable, qu'il s'y glissât des infidélités ou de l'arbitraire. La position et l'essence mêmes des contributions dûrent contribuer à ce désordre. Car les pauvres qui en étaient membres, étaient en droit d'exiger secours et assistance de ceux qui étaient plus à leur aise. Comment aurait-on pu exercer une surveillance exacte sur les pauvres, sur ceux qui demandaient du secours, s'ils demeuraient dans d'autres pays, avec les corporations desquels la leur n'avait pas conclu un concordat de réciprocité ? N'était-ce pas presque inévitable, que ces secours deviendraient une source et un germe de paresse, de licence et d'une impertinence empressée à les demander ?

Dans quelques endroits, dans les montagnes (districts de Siebenthal, de Grindelwald), les secours consistaient à la vérité en vivres, en terrain à cultiver, etc. ; mais à mesure que l'argent circula plus abondamment, le principal moyen de secours devint l'argent comptant ; c'était même l'unique que l'on pût faire tenir aux pauvres qui demeuraient ailleurs. La facilité que présentait ce moyen, à contenter sans travail ses desirs, et de soustraire à la surveillance, l'emploi, que l'on en faisait, en dût nécessairement favoriser le gaspillage, et engendrer, pour ainsi dire, la pauvreté.

Ces suites funestes se firent sentir plus vivement à mesure que le nombre des pauvres s'augmentait. Dans plusieurs endroits l'embarras toujours croissant donna lieu à de grands et louables efforts pour prendre des mesures efficaces contre le mal. On établit une plus grande régularité et un meilleur ordre dans cette branche de l'administration communale ; on créa des emplois exprès pour cet objet ; on établit des surveillans, etc. Dans quelques communes à la campagne on créa même des hôpitaux pour les pauvres, en faisant des efforts et des sacrifices, qui paraissaient au-dessus de leurs forces. Et cependant toutes ces belles institutions ne justifiaient pas les hautes espérances que l'on avait conçues en les fondant ; nous allons voir pourquoi.

Toutes ces nouvelles mesures et institutions étaient l'affaire de chaque bourgeoisie en particulier ; elles se trouvaient isolées ; de là précisément leur mauvais succès. Ce qu'une commune établissait d'utile à cet égard, n'était pas appuyé par les communes voisines, qui, en suivant leur vieille routine, y portaient au contraire obstacles et inimitié. La surveillance qui forme la base de l'entretien des pauvres, ne s'entendait pas au-delà des limites de la commune, et ne comprenait que que les pauvres de la commune ; cet important devoir étant ainsi négligé, ne pouvait donc jamais atteindre son but salutaire.

Depuis plus d'un demi-siècle, d'autres pays se sont acquis, relativement aux hopitaux des pauvres, des lumières et de l'expérience ; de ce dont ils ont profité, en adoptant pour leurs propres établissemens de ce genre, ce qu'ils trouvaient de bon et d'utile à ce sujet dans les autres pays. Les hôpitaux de notre pays manquèrent totalement ce but. Leurs institutions étaient défectueuses dès leur base ; elles étaient le produit d'un zèle philanthropique, qui voulait remédier entièrement à la misère humaine. Ces hôpitaux pour les pauvres prirent leur origine dans des villages ; ils n'avaient donc que l'étendue proportionnée aux besoins, que le village ressentait à cet égard ; les ressources et les forces n'étant pas proportionnées à ces besoins, ne permettaient pas de classer les pauvres suivant leur état, leur âge et le degré de leur misère, ce qui est cependant la condition fondamentale d'une bonne administration. Ici nous trouvons un local grand et spacieux ; eh bien ! nous y voyons entassés pêle et mêle, des enfans à côté de vieillards infirmes, des malades à côté de fainéans et de mendiants qui jouissent de la meilleure santé ; on y voit jusqu'à des familles entières ! partout enfin on y apperçoit, confondus et réunis dans un mélange diffus, le bien et le mal, l'utile et le nuisible, le malade et celui qui est en bonne santé ; la harmonie et la discordance. Il fallait donc que dans ces établissemens, les enfans fussent élevés, les malades traités et guéris, les vieillards et les infirmes soignés, et que les fainéans en bonne sante fussent tenus au travail. Toutes ces tâches exigeaient un traitement complètement différent, qui fût adapté aux individus suivant à laquelle de ces différentes classes qu'ils appartissent. A mesure que l'on perd de vue le principe de ces différentes classes, et qu'on les mélange entr'elles, on leur nuit à tous, et par là on manque le but que le traitement de chacune en particulier devait attendre. Dans ces établissemens, il fallait donc que ces différentes tâches soient remplies. Mais il était seul cet établissement, et comme tel il lui fallait aussi un seul système, une administration égale. Par conséquent la direction devait en être uniforme et il était impossible, qu'elle réunît les différens caractères et qualités, qui sont indispensables pour remplir les tâches imposées par les différentes classes de pauvres. Elle était en outre sujette à changer. Si déjà il était difficile de trouver des hommes capables pour remplir cette charge, il l'était encore bien plus de les engager à la conserver ; car d'abord ils étaient mal salariés, et en second lieu ils se trouvaient souvent dans des positions fâcheuses vis-à-vis des autorités des lieux avec qu'ils avaient toujours des difficultés plus ou moins désagréables. Ce changement fréquent dût naturellement devenir préjudiciable au bien-être et aux progrès de l'établissement. (p. 221.)

Quoique le jour sous lequel nous avons présenté ces établissemens soit isolé, défavorable insuffisant, obscur même ; la manière dont on traite les pauvres dans les autres parties du canton, nous présente un tableau d'un aspect plus sombre, et qui nous laisse une impression plus triste. Dans ces contrées, ainsi que partout ailleurs où une bonne surveillance manque, ce sont de vieux us, une routine vague, le grand besoin, qui règlent cet objet important, c'est le hasard qui lui fixe son but.

Il ne faut pas songer à y trouver une organisation régulière dans les manière de traiter les pauvres. Les moyens les plus usités, sont : les contributions en argent comptant et les frais des pensions ; dans quelques endroits, où les grandes propriétés et les biensfonds sont grévées des charges communales, (comme p. ex. des grandes fermes dans l'Emmenthal,) on leur fait porter le fardeau des pauvres de la commune, chacun à son tour ; de manière que le propriétaire est tenu à se charger pour quelque tems, et sans aucune bonification de la part qui lui aura été adjugée. Par la même raison, et par un même vieil usage, on envoie dans beaucoup d'endroits les pauvres de la corporation en tournee ; c. à d. que les bourgeois plus aisés sont tenus de les loger et de les nourrir, chacun à son tour, et que de cette manière ils sont quelquesfois repartis chez des gens qui eux-mêmes sont indigens et manquent du nécessaire.

Non moins triste et révoltant est le moyen dont quelques communes pauvres et sans jugement se servent pour se débarrasser de leurs pauvres, en les adjugeant à ceux qui demandent le moins de pension. L'autorité du lieu fait offrir publiquement une pension à l'habitant qui voudra se charger de tel ou tel pauvre ; cette pension est déjà bien minime ; mais elle a la valeur de l'argent comptant et par là elle se réduira à un montant encore moindre, à cause du grand nombre de concurrens. De cette manière, le pauvre victime tombe entre les mains de pères de familles avides, et qui sont eux-mêmes pauvres et nécessiteux. On peut se figurer la position déplorable, à laquelle ces malheureux sont pour la plupart réduits. Si cette position ne devenait parfois pas insupportable, il faut l'attribuer au sentiment de bienfaisance, qui n'était pas entièrement étouffé dans le cœur de notre peuple. On a même vu des exemples, que des propriétaires ont pu reveiller en eux l'amour du travail et qu'ils ont formé de leurs enfans d'excellens ouvriers ; en les faisant travailler pour leur propre compte. Mais toutes ces exceptions, ne rendent que plus sensible le mal général.

Les secours en argent, dont nous avons fait mention plus haut, et que les bourgeoisies donnent à leurs pauvres, ne sont pas d'un effet moins pernicieux. Ils sont, pour ainsi dire, une suite inévitable des rapports qui existent entre les riches et les pauvres d'une commune ; c. à d. que chaque famille qui est ou qui se croit dans le besoin, demande, appuyée par la loi, secours et assistance ; et comment faire pour le lui refuser ? De cette manière la bourgeoisie leur accorde des petits secours, tantôt pour payer le loyer, tantôt pour subvenir à d'autres besoins, soit qu'ils demeurent dans l'endroit même, soit ailleurs ; et cela sans aucune surveillance ! Quelles peuvent, quelles doivent en être les conséquences ? (p. 222.)

BERNE.

Il ne faut donc pas s'étonner, si sous de pareils auspices, le paupérisme est tombé dans le canton de Berne dans un état aussi fâcheux et aussi irrégulier. Il fallait qu'avec le tems les effets de cette séparation et repartition des habitans en plusieurs corporations ou bourgeoisies se fissent sentir peu à peu en se développant. Le principe invariable et fixe de ces liaisons héréditaires dût naturellement s'entrechoquer avec le principe de mobilité et de changement qui fait la base de la vie et de la relation sociales; l'intérêt du bien public dût céder à l'intérêt de quelques réunions particulières. Car les intérêts privés des corporations durent les rendre égoïstes et ennemies les unes des autres. On mit des obstacles au libre établissement de domicile, et on paralisa par là le développement des forces et de l'industrie des basses classes, et les conséquences de ces mesures durent naturellement retomber sur chaque corporation en particulier, qui était obligée à recueillir et à entretenir ses membres qui n'avaient aucun travail et qui par conséquent étaient sans courage. Il fallait bien aussi qu'avec le tems cette classe d'individus cherchât et trouvât un moyen d'existence, dans cette assistance même, qu'ils étaient en droit d'exiger; il était naturel qu'ils y prissent goût, en se livrant de cette manière à une vie oisive et à tous les vices qui en résultent. Nous pourrions citer, à l'appui de ce que nous venons d'avancer, de nombreux exemples de familles entières qui vivent en parasites, d'année en année, de génération en génération, à la charge de la commune, et qui ont trouvé un moyen d'existence dans cette ressource; tandis que nous ne voyons que fort peu d'exemples du contraire. (p. 225.)

The government appears to have been struggling with these evils ever since the beginning of this century. The first ordonnance which has been forwarded to us is that of the 22d December 1807.

The following are its most material enactments: (pp. 191, 192.)

Les communes et les bourgeoisies, à la ville et à la campagne, sont obligées comme par le passé, à accorder protection mutuelle, secours et assistance à leurs concitoyens nécessiteux.

Nul ne pourra prétendre à l'assistance de sa commune, à moins que ne possédant pas de fortune, des défauts physiques ne l'empêchent de travailler, ou qu'il soit dénué de tout travail, sans que cela ne provienne de sa faute.

La manière, dont les communes se sont servies jusqu'à présent pour régler et arrêter leurs comptes relativement aux pauvres, pourra à l'avenir être la même.

De même les communes pourront s'en tenir à telle manière, pour assister et maintenir leurs pauvres, qu'elles le jugeront convenable; soit par des secours d'argent régulièrement administrés, soit en les mettant en pension, soit en se partageant les enfans des pauvres, soit en les réunissant en un seul ménage, soit enfin en les plaçant dans des hôtels-dieu. Seulement il sera défendu, qu'à l'avenir quelqu'un des pauvres soit maintenu de maison en maison, à tour de rôle, à moins que des circonstances extraordinaires ne l'exigent; et que l'autorisation en ait été obtenue par les autorités du district.

La punition à infliger aux personnes qui seront arrêtées pour cause de mendicité, et conduites à la commune dont elles font partie, sera prononcée par les préposés de la commune, en en prévenant toutefois le juge du district; la punition pourra être de 8 jours au plus d'emprisonnement au pain et à l'eau, ou bien de 15 jours de travail domestique en tout genre, d'enchaînement au bloc, ou de travail aux champs, aux routes, aux digues, et aux fontaines.

Sont soumis aux mêmes mesures de rigueur tous ceux qui étant assistés par la commune, se montreraient récalcitrans ou donneraient d'autres sujets de plaintes fondées contr'eux; on peut de même leur défendre l'entrée des cabarets et auberges, et punir de la manière sus-dite ceux qui contreviendraient à cette défense.

Les communes ont encore le droit de faire surveiller par la voie de leurs préposés tous ceux qui par le luxe, l'ivrognerie, l'avidité des procès, et par une conduite déshonorante se mettent en danger de s'appauvrir; et de demander par voie légale, qu'on les mette sous tutelle. Tous les individus, qui se trouvent dans ce cas, pourront, sur la demande de la commune, et par un arrêt de défense du préfet, être empêchés pour un tems, plus ou moins long, de fréquenter les auberges.

Au cas qu'un pauvre assisté par sa commune parvienne à quelque fortune par voie d'héritage ou par d'autres événemens heureux, la commune pourra lui redemander le montant des secours qu'elle lui a fourni, sans y comprendre toutefois les intérêts. En cas que la commune ne fasse pas usage de ce droit du vivant de cet individu, elle pourra s'en servir auprès des héritiers de ce dernier, à moins qu'elle n'y renonce en leur faveur.

Aucun pauvre secouru ne pourra se marier sans le consentement de sa commune, et à moins qu'il n'ait remboursé les secours qu'il en a reçus. Cette loi est de même applicable aux veufs, qui, lors de leur premier mariage, auraient reçu pour eux ou pour leurs enfans des secours de la commune. On ne devra accorder des permissions de mariage à ceux, qui sont secourus à cause de maladie ou de défauts physiques, que par des raisons de force majeure. C'est pourquoi aucun ministre ne devra annoncer en chaire le mariage d'un individu, qu'il sait être secouru par sa commune, sans le consentement préalable de cette dernière.

Si l'oisiveté, la licence, la passion du jeu, ou l'abandon volontaire d'un père de famille sont la cause que ses enfans tombent tous ou en partie à la charge de la commune; s'il est avéré, qu'il pourrait les maintenir à lui seul, en menant une vie laborieuse et économique, et s'il n'a tenu aucun compte des avertissemens de ses supérieurs, l'aumônier aura le droit de le faire citer en justice pour la restitution des secours que ses enfans auront reçus; et au

cas qu'il ne paie pas, il pourra être condamné à être suspendu de ses droits civils et de bourgeoisie, ou à deux années au plus d'emprisonnement dans une maison de correction ; en cas de récidive il sera condamné à une punition plus sévère.

Une mère qui négligerait ses devoirs maternels en abandonnant méchamment ses enfans, sera reconduite dans sa commune ; elle y sera tenue au travail, et en cas qu'elle s'évaderait, ou qu'elle se montrerait récalcitrante, elle pourra, sur la demande de la commune et sous réserve de l'appel au conseil d'état, être condamnée à trois années au plus de réclusion dans une maison de correction.

Nul homme qui aura reçu ou recevrait encore des secours de sa commune, soit pour lui-même, soit pour ses enfans en bas âge, ne pourra siéger ni voter aux assemblées communales, à moins qu'il n'ait remboursé dûment ces secours, ou que la commune ne lui accorde par autorisation authentique le droit d'assister aux dites assemblées.

Si quelqu'un, étant en droit d'après cette ordonnance de réclamer secours et assistance de sa commune, n'en recevrait point du tout ou insuffisamment, il pourra porter plainte devant le préfet, qui entendra alors les raisons de la commune ; il prendra des informations exactes sur la position du plaignant, et au cas qu'il ait quelque doute sur l'existence effective des défauts physiques de ce dernier, il pourra le faire visiter par un médecin patenté ; ensuite il ordonnera ce qui lui paraîtra nécessaire ; le tout sans aucune retribution en argent. (p. 192.)

It appears, however, to have been unsuccessful ; for 12 years after, the government, after having in vain offered rewards for good advice on the subject (p. 225,) by an ordonnance dated the 14th April 1819, absolutely forbid the levying of rates higher than the average of those of the years 1813, 1814 and 1815. The failure of so coarse a remedy might have been predicted, and accordingly we find the present state of the country thus described in the official report : (p. 214.)

Il est évident, que relativement au paupérisme, le canton de Berne se trouve actuellement dans une position fâcheuse et désagréable au plus haut degré, qui prouve que ce mal est profondément enraciné. Car ce n'est pas un mal instantané ou partiel ; il ne provient pas de causes extérieures ; la source en est bien plutôt au cœur du pays. Un nombre assez considérable des habitans est atteint de ce fléau, qui par son étendue pèse ainsi sur toute la société, et qui mérite le nom de fléau social.

Il se peut que quelques districts, quelques classes d'habitans, aient moins à souffrir à cet égard que tant d'autres ; mais le mal n'en continue pas moins pour cela sa marche et son extension ; le fardeau des uns s'augmente à mesure que celui des autres diminue. Il est même évident que le mal se soutient et s'alimente de ses propres forces. Ce qui le prouve, ce n'est non seulement l'augmentation annuelle des pauvres, mais encore leur perversité toujours croissante ; l'excès de leur légèreté et de leur impertinence, mais surtout leur morale corrompue, font foi de la force croissante du mal ; et ces vices ne peuvent qu'empoisonner la bienfaisance publique, et engloutir avec une faim dévorante et insatiable les dons charitables, insuffisans alors pour subvenir à leurs besoins.

C'est ces raisons qui font que ce mal, contagieux de sa nature, s'étend au-delà des bornes de la classe pauvre, digne de pitié et de secours ; il envahit et détruit en même temps les classes de la population qui tiennent de près à celle-là. Car ceux qui seraient appelés à un travail journalier et assidu pour gagner leur vie, ainsi que ceux dont la petite fortune ou propriété devrait servir à entretenir leur famille, à satisfaire les créanciers et à contribuer aux secours donnés aux pauvres ; ceux-là même viennent augmenter le nombre des indigens, et grossir par là le fardeau qui pèse déjà sur ceux pour qui le secours des pauvres est obligatoire. (p. 214.)

We have now given a very brief outline of the institutions of those portions of the Continent which appear, from the returns, to have adopted the English principle of acknowledging in every person a right to be supported by the public. It will be observed that in no country, except, perhaps, the Canton de Berne, has compulsory relief produced evils resembling, either in intensity or in extent, those which we have experienced ; and that in the majority of the nations which have adopted it, the existing system appears to work well.

Causes favourable to the working of the above Institutions.

These opposite consequences from the adoption of the same principle, may be accounted for on several different grounds.

1. Among some of the nations in question villenage still exists. Now where slavery, in any of its forms, prevails, the right of the slave or villein to support, is a necessary and a safe consequence. It is necessary, because a person who is not a free agent cannot provide for himself. It is safe, because one of the principal evils of pauperism, improvidence, can scarcely exist among slaves, and the power of the master enables him to prevent idleness and fraud. The poor laws of Russia, therefore, if they can be called poor laws, are merely parts of her system of slavery.

1. Villenage.

Causes favourable to the working of the above Institutions.

2. Recency of the system.

3. Small number of persons wholly dependent on wages.

2. Among most of the other nations in question the compulsory system is in its infancy. Denmark has only lately got rid of slavery, and her poor laws date from 1798. Those of Sweden, on their present form, of Mecklenburg, Saxony, Wurtemberg and Bavaria, all bear the appearance of recency. In Wurtemberg assessments had been long obsolete, until they were re-introduced during the famine of 1817. The only country in which the compulsory system appears to have continued as long as it has in England, is that in which it has produced effects resembling those which have followed it with us, namely, the Canton de Berne.

3. Another circumstance which renders compulsory relief less dangerous in the countries which we have been considering than in our own, is the economical situation of their labouring population. In England the great mass of the people are day labourers, enjoying, where they have escaped the oppression of poor law abuses, high wages and steady employment, but possessed of little visible property, and seldom living under their master's roof. Such persons are not deterred from demanding relief by the fear of losing their property, since where they have any, it is capable of concealment; and they need not always even fear degradation, since the fact of their receiving it may often be concealed. There are many instances in the Poor Law Evidence in which the masters, and even the companions of paupers, were not aware of their receiving allowance. But the class of persons without visible property, which constitutes the bulk of English society, forms the small minority of that of the north of Europe. The Norwegian return states, (698 & 699) that at the last census in 1825, out of a population of 1,051,318 persons, there were 59,464 freeholders. As by 59,464 freeholders must be meant 59,464 heads of families, or about 300,000 individuals: the freeholders must form more than a fourth of the whole population. Mr. Macgregor states, (p. 300) that in Denmark, (by which Zealand and the adjoining islands are probably meant) out of a population of 926,110, the number of landed proprietors and farmers is 415,110, or nearly one-half. In Sleswick Holstein, out of a population of 604,085, it is 196,017, or about one-third. The proportion of proprietors and farmers to the whole population is not given in Sweden; but the Stockholm return estimates the average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation at from one to five acres (p. 375); and though the Gottenburg return gives a lower estimate, it adds, that the peasants possess much of the land, (p. 387.) In Wurtemberg we are told that more than two-thirds of the labouring population are the proprietors of their own habitations, and that almost all own at least a garden of from three-quarters of an acre to an acre and a half. (p. 511.)

And all the returns concur in stating the number of day labourers to be very small.

The Norwegian report states, that "by law servants should never be hired for a shorter period than a twelvemonth. Employing labourers by the day, though often done in and about towns, is consequently illegal," (p. 695.) Few day labourers are to be met with. (p. 698.) The Gottenburg, that "strictly speaking there are in Sweden few labourers on the same footing as in England." (p. 387.) The Russian, that "the labourers are almost all slaves," and that "the average quantity of land allowed by a proprietor to his slave is 15 acres." (p. 334.) The Danish report, that "the day labourers form in Zealand and the adjoining islands, less than one-fifth, and in Sleswick Holstein less than one-third of the agricultural population." (p. 300.) The Wurtemberg report states the labourers to amount to 41,913, (meaning of course heads of families, or about 210,000) individuals out of a population of 1,518,147, being in fact less than 1-7th. (p. 514.) The Bavarian, that "in the country there are very few day labourers, as almost every person has some ground of his own, and few are rich enough to hire labour. (p. 556.)

It is probable therefore that the class of persons who in the north of Europe and Germany would be exposed to the temptation of applying for public relief if it were granted on the same terms as in England, would be a small minority instead of a large majority, and would be perhaps a seventh, a fifth, or at most a third instead of three-fourths, or even a larger proportion of the whole community.

4. The situation of the pauper being made less eligible than that of the independent labourer.

4. But the conditions on which parochial assistance is afforded in the countries in question, form perhaps the principal difference between their systems and that which we have adopted. In England where the scale and the allowance system prevail, no condition whatever can be said to be imposed on the pauper. What he receives is a mere gratuitous addition to his income. Even where work is required, the hours are in general fewer, and the labour less severe than those of the independent labourer. And the workhouse, the most powerful of our instruments of repression, affords in general food, lodging, clothing and warmth better than can be found in the cottage, and may be quitted at a day's notice.

Causes favourable to the working of the above Institutions.

But in all the countries which we have been considering, except the Canton de Berne and perhaps Denmark, the great object of pauper legislation, that of rendering the situation of the pauper less agreeable than that of the independent labourer, has been effectually attained.

On recurring to the statements which we have extracted, it will be seen that he loses all right to property; that he becomes incapable of contracting marriage while receiving relief, and in many countries if he have once received relief cannot marry until he has reimbursed the parish, or has procured security that his future family shall not become chargeable, or till three years have elapsed since he last received relief. If married, he loses control over his children, he cannot choose his residence or his occupation, and if he once becomes the inmate of a workhouse he incurs the risk of imprisonment for life. When such are the terms offered by the public, it is easy to understand that none but the really destitute will accept them.

5. The prevalence of habits productive of pauperism is repressed by subjecting the whole labouring population to superintendence and restrictions, which we should consider vexatious. As they are in a great measure interwoven with the laws for the relief of the unemployed, and have been in general already stated, it is not necessary to repeat them.

5. Restraints imposed on the labouring classes.

6. In almost all the countries which have been mentioned, endeavours are made to prevent the existence of a redundant population, by throwing obstacles in the way of improvident marriages. Marriage on the part of persons in the actual receipt of relief, appears to be everywhere prohibited, and the marriage of those who are not likely to possess the means of independent support, is allowed by very few.

6. Prevention of improvident marriage.

Thus we are told that in Norway no one can marry without "showing, to the satisfaction of the clergyman, that he is permanently settled in such a manner as to offer a fair prospect that he can maintain a family." (p. 697.)

In Mecklenburg, that "marriages are delayed by conscription in the 22d year, and military service for six years; besides, the parties must have a dwelling, without which a clergyman is not permitted to marry them. The men marry at from 25 to 30, the women not much earlier, as both must first gain by service enough to establish themselves." (p. 423.)

In Saxony, that "a man may not marry before he is 21 years old, if liable to serve in the army. In Dresden, professionists, (by which word artizans are probably meant,) may not marry until they become masters in their trade." (p. 482.)

In Wurtemberg, that "no man is allowed to marry till his 25th year, on account of his military duties, unless permission be especially obtained or purchased: at that age he must also obtain permission, which is granted on proving that he and his wife would have together sufficient to maintain a family, or to establish themselves; in large towns, say from 800 to 1,000 florins, (from 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to 84*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*); in smaller, from 400 to 500 florins; in villages, 200 florins, (16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*) They must not be persons of disorderly or dissolute lives, drunkards, or under suspicion of crime, and they must not have received any assistance from their parish within the last three years." (p. 511.)

And we have seen that a similar law prevails and is strictly enforced in Bavaria.

7. Another means by which the extension of pauperism is opposed in the countries which we have described, is the care taken by the government to provide for the education of the labouring classes. We are told, (p. 695 & 698,) that in Norway their children have free access to the parish schools, and that the poor pay for the education of their children, and for religious teachers, nothing or nearly so. The general report from Russia states, (p. 332,) that every parish in every town has a school which is open to children of all classes, under the direction of the clergyman; and this is borne out by the consular return from Archangel (337.) The Gottenburg report states, (p. 385) that in Sweden gratuitous education is provided for the children of the indigent, and that it is asserted that there is not one person out of 1,000 who cannot at least read. The Danish reports state, (p. 264, 293) that the children of all poor persons are educated gratuitously: that the parish is taxed for the payment of the schoolmaster, the repairs of the school-house, books, papers, pens, ink, &c.; and that parents are bound under a penalty to send their children regularly to school until they have passed the age of 14, and been confirmed. Gratuitous education is also afforded in Mecklenburg,

7. Provision for the education of the labouring classes.

Causes favourable to the working of the above Institutions.

(p. 491), and in Prussia. Mr. Gibsone states, as the general law of the country, that "all children capable of going to school are obliged to attend it. Those whose parents are unable to pay the expense, must be sent thither at the cost of the community to which they belong (p. 460); the expense of school-money and religious instruction is about 1 s. 6 d. yearly for each child (p. 466.) In the detailed regulations for the relief of the poor in Berlin, (p. 455,) it is laid down that "the period of children's being sent to school regularly commences at the beginning of the child's seventh year, and terminates when the child, according to the testimony of the minister, has acquired the knowledge necessary for his station in life, which generally occurs on his attaining his 14th year. If parents allow their children to grow up without instruction, the commissioners for the relief of the poor are to remonstrate with them, and should this be of no avail, the commissary of police is to interfere." In Saxony, "the local poor commission supports free schools." (p. 480).

The care which has been bestowed on this subject in Wurtemberg is remarkable. The government report, after stating the recent introduction and success of infant schools, adds that—

For older children, from the age of 6 to 14, there has long existed in Wurtemberg in every, even the smallest community, supported chiefly at the expense of the local church estate and community fund, and of the parents, with the co-operation, however, of the public treasury, a German or elementary school, which all children of that age, both boys and girls, must attend, and in which, with the exception of short holidays during the time of haymaking, harvest and vintage, they receive throughout the year every day, with the exception of Sundays and holidays, in winter for five and in summer for at least two hours, instruction in religion, morality, singing, the German language, reading, writing, arithmetic and the elements of natural philosophy, natural history, geography and history. In summer, in consideration of the work in the fields, the instruction is given as much as possible in the morning; and at the season when the labours of the field are the most urgent, and in cases of great poverty, an exception is made in favour of those children, where it is required, who, on application, are excused two or three times a week from coming to school. With this exception, every illegal neglect of school is punished by a fine of two or three kreutzers, and if the neglect of attending is continued, from four to six kreutzers; and no child, even if it has completed the 14th year, is suffered to leave the elementary school till it has acquired sufficient knowledge of what is taught there. (p. 528.)

As, however, many poor children endeavour notwithstanding to avoid attending the elementary schools, and in all cases the instruction in these elementary schools occupies only the smaller portion of the day, so that those poor children who are not properly attended and employed by their parents have still plenty of time for idleness and beggary; attempts have latterly been made in some places to put such children under special superintendence, and, for instance, by appointing a guardian for each poor child in the person of an overseer or other public officer of the community, or of a neighbour, who has to observe it every where, at home, at work, at play; or by periodical general summons to the several parents; or by periodical visitations in the houses of poor families, especially of those who are suspected of not paying proper attention to the education of their children; or by the periodical exhibition of the work done at home; or by the public performance of some work as a specimen; or by gratuitously providing the poor children with tools and materials; by the distribution of rewards among the most diligent and skilful of the children; and by exhorting, summoning and punishing negligent parents; by these means to acquire the certainty that such children are kept to the constant attendance of the church and school, and to doing their tasks; that they are sufficiently employed in a suitable manner; that they are not ill-treated, either by being overworked or by unmerited corporal chastisement; that they are not neglected with respect to clothing and cleanliness; and that they are not abandoned to idleness, beggary and other vices, &c. (p. 529.)

Partly to retain, by practice, what they have learnt in the elementary schools, and partly to promote the further improvement of the grown-up youth, a Sunday School is kept in every community in Wurtemberg, in the common school-room, where every youth and girl above 14 years of age, in the Protestant places to their 18th, and in Catholic places to their 21st year, must go every Sunday, or where there is only one school-room the youths and girls every Sunday alternately, and attend the lessons for at least an hour and a half, on pain of paying four kreutzers, and if the neglect is of long continuance, six kreutzers, for every time that they remain away. It may be added, that, according to the existing laws, more care has been lately taken that young persons of this age, unless they are wanted to assist their parents in their domestic and field-work, particularly those who are educated at the public expense, and the poor girls and youths discharged from the penal establishments, do not remain at home with their families, or, out of love to a more unrestrained way of life, endeavour to gain a livelihood as Eigenbrödler,* as they are called, merely by sewing, knitting, &c., but that they try either to engage as servants or learn a trade. (p. 534.)

The Bavarian poor law enacts, that all the children of the poor shall, without favour and without regard to the usual pretexts, be kept to the practice of the public school and religious instructions, as also of frequenting the work and industry schools

* "Eigenbrödler," means one who endeavours to earn a livelihood independently.

schools and of learning a trade. The school money is to be paid from the poor institutions. (p. 559.)

Causes favourable to the working of the above Institutions.

Among all the Continental communities which recognise in the poor the right to relief, the only one which does not appear to provide the means of education, and to enforce their being made use of, is that in which pauperism has become absolutely intolerable, namely, the Canton de Berne; and even there any aubain (or person not entitled to bourgeoisie in the parish in which he resides,) may be summarily ejected, (unless possessed of landed property in it,) if it can be proved that he does not either send his children to school or provide otherwise for their education. (p. 199.)

8. Lastly, in most of the countries which have been considered, the local administration of the laws for the relief of the poor is controlled by a central superintending authority.

8. Central Superintendence.

The only countries, the reports from which state that this is not the case, are Sweden, Denmark and Berne; and we have seen both that these are the three countries in which the poor laws are the worst administered, and that in all of them the mal-administration which the reporters deplore is mainly attributed by them to the absence of a central control.

We now proceed to give a short outline of the institutions for the relief of the poor in those countries which do not appear, from the reports in this Appendix, to acknowledge a legal right in the applicant.

HANSEATIC TOWNS.

1. HAMBURGH.—The situation of Hamburgh, a large commercial town, with a small territory and few manufactures, exposes it to a considerable influx of foreign poor; and the number of charitable establishments appears to have fostered and still to encourage pauperism to an extent exceeding the average of the north of Europe. It appears, from the Consul-general's return, that besides many endowed schools, hospitals and almshouses, the city possesses a general institution for the poor, supported by the interest of its own capital and some voluntary contributions, and considerable advances from the treasury of the State. A report has been furnished of the proceedings of that institution during the year 1832.

HANSEATIC TOWNS.

Hamburgh.

It appears by that report (pp. 397, 398) that in 1832, 141,858 current dollars, or about 25,000 l. sterling, was distributed in money, by way of weekly relief among registered or regular poor, amounting at an average to 2,900 individuals or heads of families; the smallest weekly relief being 8 schillings or 7 d. sterling; the largest for an individual, 2 dollars or 7 s. sterling; and for a family, 3 dollars or 10 s. 6 d. Half of the adult paupers appear to have been foreigners. Besides the amount of money relief, considerable sums were expended in the distribution of soup, clothing, beds and bed clothing, and fuel, and in the education and maintenance of poor children, and in medical relief to the sick. Both the Consul's report and that of the institution, lament the absence of a workhouse. "Of those who are capable, but will not work," says the latter, "a great number to be sure will be found: the only help against this would perhaps be an institution, under a strict superintendence of the police, for compelling them to work; the want of which, from the undeniably increasing degeneration of our lowest class of people, is sensibly felt from year to year." (p. 402.) This statement is borne out by the progressive increase of the registered paupers, from 2,332 in May 1826 to 2,969 in May 1832, and by the large amount of the regular out-door relief in money, amounting, on a population of 130,000, to very nearly 4 s. a head. Further evidence of the extent of pauperism is afforded by the number of persons buried in 1832 at the expense of the institution, which was 459, or nearly one-tenth of the average number of deaths.

No means exist of forcing parents to educate their children; a defect deplored by the institution. (p. 403.)

2. BREMEN.—The poor institutions of Bremen seem to resemble those of Hamburgh; but the general enforcement of education, the use of a workhouse, and perhaps other circumstances not mentioned in the report, appear to have rendered their results more beneficial. The following answers to questions 3, 4, 5, 7 & 8 of the Commissioners' questions, give a short outline of the existing system:

Bremen.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There exists but one poor-house in

Bremen, in which the destitute able-bodied are received, to the number of 220, lodged, fed and clothed, for which they are bound to work, for the benefit of the institution, as far as they are able.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Independently of three houses for the lodging and partly providing for poor widows, free of expense, there are other buildings set apart for the reception of poor superannuated or helpless women; but chiefly a number of private institutions for the relief of poor deserving persons by testamentary bequests. Such are the Rheden, the Tiedemann, the Nonnen, the Von Bühren, &c. so called.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—This is done, but in a very limited degree, at the public expense, as those who have trades come under the care and superintendence of their respective guilds, whose duty and credit it is to prevent any of their fraternity coming upon the parish, and who can easily afford the means of providing them with work. Females, on application to the poor-house, may receive hemp and flax for spinning, and are remunerated accordingly.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—Those who are registered in the poor-house list, and thus come under the superintendence and control of the parish officers, receive, as long as they may require assistance,—1. A small monthly allowance in money. 2. Clothing for themselves and their families. 3. If necessary, bedding. 4. In the winter, during severe frost, fuel.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—Means are not only afforded to the poor for sending their children to school and for giving them religious instruction, but they are here compelled to do so, on pain of forfeiting all claim to parochial relief, or by other modes of punishment. That every child in the State, of whatever descent, shall be subjected to school discipline and tuition, is founded upon the principle, that no means so effectually obviates that general poverty, among the lower classes in particular, as an attention to the developement of their minds, by which they acquire that self-confidence that stimulates exertion, and that proper spirit of independence that keeps them above want, whilst by religious instruction they are impressed with a sense of the duties and advantages of good moral conduct through life. It has ever been the prevailing opinion in this Republic, that the principal duty of the State towards bettering the condition of its poorer classes, rests upon a due regard to this school discipline, and that it tends in its practice to prevent the frequent recurrence of application for relief in the same family; the descendants of which, without such control, would habitually and irrecoverably become, in their turn, dependants upon public charity. When such children have arrived at the age of 14 or 15 years, after having been taught reading, writing, arithmetic and any other acquirement consistent with their situation, books and other materials being furnished them by the poor-house, gratis; they are, after confirmation, generally put out to service, and thus prevented from returning to the idle habits of their parents. Girls are, in like manner, often provided for. They are taught reading, writing, knitting and needle-work. (p.p. 410, 411.)

Lubeck.

3. LUBECK.—If the statistical returns respecting Lubeck, which do not appear to rest on enumeration, can be depended on, the proportion of deaths, births and marriages to the whole population is less than in any other part of Europe. The deaths being stated to be 1 in 56; the births 1 in 53 $\frac{1}{2}$; and the marriages 1 in 177. And, what is perhaps the strongest indication of the general welfare of a community, the deaths under the age of one year are stated to be only 1 in 7. The following answers to questions 3, 4, 5, 7 & 8, may be compared with the corresponding answers from Bremen:

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—No other institution of this kind exists here but the work and poor-house, called the Cloister, into which, however, none are admitted but persons totally incapable of contributing to their own support, whether from drunkenness or other incapacitating causes.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—We have none such, but a collection is made in all our churches every Sunday for the poor; this, however, being a regular matter-of-course thing, yields comparatively small sums, which are privately distributed to poor persons by the churchwardens and deacons.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—or for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—Every able-bodied man is supposed capable of providing for himself, and no such work or relief is afforded him. In winter many poor women are supplied with a little work by the overseers of the workhouse, who give them flax to spin. The average annual quantity thus spun is about 6,000 to 6,500 pounds, the pay for which, amounting to about 130*l.* annually, relieves about 300 poor women. The linen yarn thus spun is disposed of by lottery among the wealthier classes. No work is is supplied at the public expense or by public institutions to able-bodied men, merely because they are destitute; they must seek and find it themselves, and are of course accepted and employed on public works, as far as there is a demand for them. Having no relief to expect elsewhere, they are of course spurred on to exertion, and if sober and of good character, it may be generally assumed that they find work, at least sufficient for their bare existence, since, if a man can earn but a few pence daily it will suffice to support him in this country.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—As above stated, no relief of this kind is afforded to able-bodied men; their families, if considered destitute, may perhaps obtain the relief afforded by the poor-board to the poor generally, by means of portions of cheap food daily during the five winter months, and four times a week during the other part of the year. About 230,000 such portions are distributed annually, and bread to the value of about 60*l*. Fuel is distributed during the severer part of the winter, but money is rarely given, and only in extreme cases, never exceeding one mark, or about 14*d*. sterling a week, to the same party. Clothing forms no part of the relief afforded. In Lubeck these various kinds of relief are partaken of by about 850 persons annually.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—Not only are all the children of the poor admitted into the poor-schools for instruction gratis, but when relief is afforded by the poor-board, it is on the positive condition that they shall send their children to such schools. Neither food, clothing nor any further provision is afforded them, in these schools, excepting in a very few extreme cases, in which the maintenance of very young children is undertaken by the poor-board. The number of children in our poor-schools averages about 300. (p. 415, 416.)

The allowance in our poor and workhouse for every individual, is—

Daily :—1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of coarse rye bread.

2 $\frac{1}{2}$ — vegetables or porridge such as potatoes, yellow peas, green peas, dried white beans, carrots, peeled barley, cabbage, &c. according to the season, and sometimes rice.

1 bottle of weak beer.

Monthly :—1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of meat, and $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of butter, lard or fat, to cook the food with. (p. 420.)

Marriages among the poor are delayed by the necessity a man is under, first, of previously proving that he is in a regular employ, work or profession that will enable him to maintain a wife; and secondly, of becoming a burgher and equipping himself in the uniform of the burgher guard, which, together, may cost him nearly 4*l*. (p. 419.)

The condition of the labouring classes living on their own earnings is considered by themselves to be far superior to that of the paupers maintained in our poor-house. The partial assistance afforded by the poor-board is chiefly directed towards aiding those who are not devoid of honest pride, and have some feelings of independence left, who consequently earn their own maintenance as far as they can, and are thus assisted in their endeavours to support themselves and keep out of the workhouse. The aid they receive is proportioned to their age and families, and is mostly granted to females; it is gratefully received, and no idea exists of ever thinking it a right. As a rule no persons fully able to work can receive assistance, they are therefore forced to seek out employment, and may be generally presumed to succeed. If they get but a moderate portion of work, very trifling earnings place them in a situation much more eligible than that of the pauper maintained in the poor-house. (p. 418.)

FRANKFORT ON THE MAIN.

The institutions for the relief of the poor in Frankfort do not appear to require much notice.

The most striking circumstance mentioned in the report is, that the orphans and deserted children brought up in the public establishments are so carefully and successfully educated, that on an average they turn out better than those merely kept to school and living at home. (p. 567.) Permission to marry is not granted to a person who cannot prove his ability to support a family.

HOLLAND.

As the Canton de Berne appears to be the portion of continental Europe in which the burthen of legal relief is most oppressive, Holland appears to be that in which pauperism, unaided by a legal claim, is the most rapidly advancing. The Appendix contains an official communication from the Dutch government, and answers from His Majesty's Consul in Amsterdam, to the Commissioners' questions.

The clearest general view of the mode in which relief is administered, is contained in the following extract from the Consul's report: (p. 581.)

HOLLAND.

The main support of the poor is derived from religious communities and charitable institutions. Every denomination of Christians, as well as the Jews, relieve their own members; and for this purpose have, for the most part, orphan and poor-houses and schools connected with them, which are supported by property belonging to them, and by voluntary contributions at the church doors, and collections at the houses of the members; the Jews being permitted occasionally to make a general collection throughout the city for their own purposes. These establishments, among the Protestants (the most numerous community), are called Deaconries; and they provide not only for the support of their indigent members, but also for their relief in sickness. The deacons, who have the immediate superintendence of the poor, limit the assistance given according to the exigency of the case, which they investigate very narrowly; and by becoming particularly acquainted with the situation of the applicants, are enabled to detect any imposition. The pecuniary relief afforded is very small, and can only be considered as in aid of the exertions of the poor to earn their own support, being limited to a few pence in the week; a weekly donation of 2 florins (or 40 d.) being looked upon as one of the largest. In winter, provisions, fuel and clothing are given in preference to money. The aged and infirm are admitted into the poor-houses, where, and at the schools, the children are educated, and afterwards put out to different trades, till they are able to provide for themselves. The deacons act gratuitously; and being of the most respectable class of citizens, elected by the churches to that office, the conscientious discharge of it is ensured, and in consequence malversations seldom take place. The general poor (being inhabitants), including persons who are and are not members of religious communities (Jews excepted), are relieved at their own houses from the revenue of property long since appropriated to that use, administered by commissioners appointed by the magistrates, and acting without emolument (as is the case with most similar offices in this country), and in aid of which public charitable collections at private houses are permitted, while any eventual deficiency is supplied from the funds of the city; but the relief afforded by these means is very small, and is confined chiefly to bread, with the addition of fuel in winter. Without other resources, therefore, or the assistance of private charity, the claimants could hardly subsist upon what they obtain in this way. By a decree passed in the year 1818*, it was enacted, that the domicile of a male pauper is the place of his birth, superseded by the place where he has resided four years and paid taxes; and that of a child, the residence of his father, or of his mother, if a widow. That the domicile of a stranger is the place where he has resided six years; of married women and widows, the place of their husbands' residence; of legitimate minors, that of their fathers', and of illegitimate, that of their mothers'. This decree, fixing the domicile of paupers for the purpose of obtaining relief, and a subsequent one, by which gratuitous legal advice is allowed them, if they apply for it, implies that they have a claim to support, which can be enforced at law; but as the funds from which this support must be obtained are uncertain, the amount of the relief that can be given depends upon their extent, and it is in fact left at the discretion of the overseers, who have the faculty of withholding it on the proof of bad conduct of the recipients, or when their children do not properly attend the school, or have been neglected to be vaccinated. Those not members of churches are, moreover, admonished to join some religious community, and must promise to do so the first opportunity. The decree above alluded to also regulates the proceedings of one town against another, and of religious and charitable institutions at the same place, in respect to paupers. There are at Amsterdam, besides, a variety of private establishments for the poor of different religious denominations, endowed by charitable persons, in which the poor are relieved in different ways, according to prescribed regulations. In general, the funds of all the public charitable institutions have greatly diminished, while the number of claimants has much increased, which causes frequent and urgent appeals to the public benevolence. In the country the same system prevails, and the deacons or office-bearers of the churches are often called upon during the winter to assist in the support of indigent labourers with families, till the return of spring enables them to find work; but there are few permanent poor there, except the old and infirm, who are generally boarded in poor-houses in the adjoining town. (p. 582.)

It will be observed that the Consul considers the law which fixes the domicile of a pauper, and entitles him to legal advice, as implying in him a legal right to relief. We understand, however, that no such right is in practice acknowledged. And as a large proportion of the fund for the relief of the poor arises from endowments, the law may fix the legal settlement of every person, that is, his right to participate in the endowments of a particular parish, and allow him legal assistance in establishing it, without giving to him that indefinite claim which exists in those countries in which every person has a right to receive from the public subsistence for himself and his family.

The official report contains the following details respecting the funds from which public relief is afforded: (pp. 573, 574, 575.)

The principle which invariably has been acted on is, that the charge of relieving the poor should in the first place rest on the overseers of the poor of the religious sects in each parish; but when the means of the administration of the poor are not sufficient, they can indiscriminately (without reference to the sect to which such poor belong) apply to the local local administration for relief, which, after due investigation, generally grants it, according to the means of the municipal administration, which is regulated by its direction.

Paupers, however, who are not members of any congregation, or any religious sect, in the place where they live and receive relief, or where no ecclesiastical charity for the poor exists, are supported by the municipal administration of the place where they live and obtain their support; for which purpose, in several cities and parishes a separate administration for the poor is established, responsible to the municipal administration; whereas in the remaining cities and parishes such relief is granted either by the burgomaster, or by an overseer of the poor nominated by him.

The hospitals, which in many cities exist, are for the greater part government establishments, which are administered on account of the local magistracy, by a number of directors appointed thereto, in which hospitals all inmates, without any distinction as to religion, are taken in; some of these hospitals are however separate foundations, which exist wholly or in part on their own revenues.

Amongst the orphan houses and charities for children and old people, there are several establishments which exist wholly or in part on their own revenues; whereas the remainder are generally the property of particular church administrations of the poor, which in great cities is almost generally the case in orphan houses or charities for children.

Foundlings and abandoned children, at the charge of the place in which they are abandoned, are provided for in the establishment for children of the society for charitable purposes, by which institution the beggars are also provided for in the establishments appropriated for that purpose, and acknowledged by the government, at the charge of the place where they have a claim for relief.

There exist three local workhouses, one at Amsterdam, one at Middleburgh, and one in the commonalty Nieuwe Pekel A., in the province of Groningen, in which paupers, generally those who apply of their own accord, are taken in, upon condition that they contribute to their support as much as possible by labour: further, there are in several places twenty-one charitable houses of industry, which procure work for paupers who are in immediate want of work, either in the houses of industry, or at their own dwellings.

Besides the before-mentioned institutions, there are also various places, unions and societies, the intentions of which are to grant relief in some way or other; namely, some for the relief of very indigent poor; others for granting relief to poor lying-in women; and the commissions or societies which during the winter distribute provisions and fuel.

For the twelve years from 1820 to 1831, the receipts of the administration for the established charity houses, and those of the hospitals, taken on an average for each year, amount together;

1. The revenues of properties and acknowledged rights	-	-	guilders.	2,461,883	26
2. Proceeds of collections	-	-	-	1,320,551	48
3. Subsidies granted by
a. The parishes	-	-	-	1,779,719	67
b. The provinces of the State	-	-	-	38,642	78
				1,818,362	45
Making - - - guilders				5,600,797	19

By which all the disbursements of these institutions are covered.

And if to the above-mentioned sum are added, for the same period of twelve years, the following; viz.

1. For the local workhouses and charitable houses of industry:
a. Revenues of properties	-	-	-	7,458	50
b. Collections	-	-	-	7,971	63
c. Subsidies of the parishes	-	-	-	99,083	87
2. For the new erected beggars' workhouses:
a. Daily wages paid by the parish for the beggars placed therein	-	-	-	41,090	40
b. Provincial subsidies	-	-	-	871	49
3. For the society for charitable purposes:
a. Contributions and voluntary donations by individuals	-	-	-	48,893	55
b. Monies for stipulated contracts	-	-	-	208,651	69
Consequently, the whole sum is - - - guilders				6,014,818	32

It appears from this statement that rather more than 6,000,000 guilders (equal at 20*d.* the guilder to 500,000 l. sterling) has on an average of the last 12 years been annually expended on the relief of the poor, being an expense per head, on an average population of 2,292,350, of about 4*s.* 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. An expenditure small compared with our own, but very large when compared with the average expenditure of Europe.

The official report does not state the progressive increase of the annual expenditure; but it contains a table of the progressive increase of the persons receiving relief, from which we extract the particulars of the 10 years ending with 1831. (p. 580.)

General Observations.—Although the persons who have only worked in or for the charitable work-places, and are not lodged or fed in them, are probably already included amongst the number of those who have been relieved by the direction of the Poor-house; it was however thought proper not to exclude them from this Table, because the expenses of procuring work belong likewise to these persons.

(d) This establishment was done away with on the 15th October, all the paupers in it were removed to the Ommerschans.

It appears from this table that the number of persons relieved has steadily increased from 202,015, the number in 1822, to 279,730, the number in 1831; and that the proportion of paupers to independent members of society has also increased from $9\frac{220}{1000}$ per cent., the proportion in 1822, or rather more than one-eleventh, to $11\frac{398}{1000}$ per cent., or rather more than one-ninth, the proportion in 1831: a proportion exceeding even that of England.

And it is to be observed that the greater part of this great positive and relative increase of pauperism has taken place during a period of profound peace, internal and external; only one of these years being subsequent to the Belgian revolution. It is probable that if the years 1832 and 1833 had been given, the comparison with the earlier period would have been still more unfavourable.

We have omitted in the statement of the expenditure for the relief of the poor a sum of 200,000 guilders, or about 16,666 l. sterling, annually employed on the gratuitous instruction of poor children: the number thus instructed in 1831 was 73,609. It does not appear, however, that any persons are compelled to attend to the education of their children, except by its being made (as is the general rule on the Continent of Europe) one of the conditions on which relief is granted: and the Consul states that the labourers in general think it beneath them to let their children go to school for nothing; and that some, when unable to pay, prefer keeping them at home.

It is remarkable that neither the official nor the consular report dwells on that portion of the Dutch poor institutions which has excited the greatest attention in Europe, namely, the Poor Colonies.

DUTCH

The following statements are extracted from the narrative of Count Arrivabene, who visited them in 1829: (pp. 610, 611, 612, 613, 614.)

La disette des années 1816 et 1817, et la misère qui s'ensuivit, furent les causes qui, pendant l'année 1818, donnèrent naissance, dans les Provinces Septentrionales du royaume des Pays-Bas, à une société de bienfaisance, dont le but était de mettre à exécution de nouveaux projets philanthropiques. Les membres de cette société s'obligèrent à payer chacun par semaine une sou, et cela pendant tout le temps qu'il leur conviendrait de faire partie de la société. Le nombre des souscripteurs s'éleva bientôt à vingt mille; et la société, au moyen d'administrateurs choisis dans son sein, conçut le projet de fonder des colonies destinées à servir d'asile à différentes espèces de pauvres, dans les bruyères dont le pays abonde: Colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, colonies d'indigents et de vétérans, colonies ordinaires ou libres, colonies de surveillants aux travaux de l'agriculture, colonies d'orphelins et d'enfants-trouvés, et enfin colonies d'industrie agricole.

Dans l'année même où la société prit naissance, elle établit avant tout une colonie ordinaire ou libre, sur les bruyères situées entre les provinces de Drenthe, de Frise et d'Over-Yssel: cette colonie fut nommée Frederiks-Oord. Elle se composait de cinquante-deux petites fermes, exploitées en partie auparavant par la société, d'un magasin pour les objets nécessaires aux colons, de plusieurs fabriques, d'une école, etc. Elle fut peuplée au moyen de familles indigentes, mais qui ne vivaient pas tout-à-fait d'aumônes. La dépense pour la fondation de cette colonie s'éleva à 68,000 flor.*, produit des souscriptions annuelles et des donations des membres, qui, pour assurer aux colons du travail pendant cette époque de l'année où la campagne n'en offre point les ressources, s'engagèrent à leur acheter vingt-six mille aunes de toile.

En 1819, la société offrit aux directeurs des institutions d'orphelins de tout le royaume, de se charger, moyennant une rétribution annuelle, d'un nombre d'orphelins de l'âge de 6 ans qu'ils voudraient bien lui confier, en leur laissant le droit d'exercer une juste surveillance. La société, pour faire face à cette nouvelle dépense, fit un emprunt de 280,000 flor. Elle plaça d'abord les orphelins dans de petites maisons séparées, à raison de six dans chacune, et deux personnes âgées pour leur servir de parents. Mais ensuite elle les réunit presque tous dans de grands édifices. Dans cette même année, le nombre des membres s'éleva à 22,500 et leurs souscriptions à 82,500 fl., ce qui permit à la société d'établir deux autres colonies ordinaires ou libres, et d'y placer cent cinquante familles.

En 1820, elle emprunta de nouveau 100,000 flor., qui, réunis à 78,000 fl. qui lui furent donnés, lui offrirent les moyens d'établir pendant cette année un même nombre de familles.

En 1821, elle réunit une somme de 421,000 flor., produit d'un emprunt de 300,000 flor., et de 121,000 fl. provenant des souscriptions; et elle possédait sept colonies ordinaires ou libres, composées de 500 petites fermes, et autres établissements dont nous avons parlé.

En 1822, elle fonda la première colonie pour réprimer la mendicité; et dans le mois de Novembre de la même année, elle s'engagea envers le gouvernement à recevoir et placer dans d'autres colonies 4,000 orphelins, 2,500 indigents, et 1,500 mendiants. Le gouvernement aurait à payer 45 flor. par an pour chaque orphelin, pendant 16 années, et rien pour les autres pauvres, ce qui faisait 22 fl. 50 cents pour chaque individu du nombre total. Mais jusqu'à présent la société n'a pu remplir qu'une partie de ses engagements. Elle établit néanmoins toutes les espèces de colonies que nous avons énumérées.

C'est

 POOR COLONIES.
 Frederiks-Oord.

C'est dans le courant du mois d'Août de l'année 1829, que nous avons visité toutes les colonies de la société. Celles de Frederiks-Oord s'étendent sur un espace de deux lieues, et les petites fermes sont placées le long de chemins bordés d'arbres, et le long de canaux qui coupent les colonies en différentes sections. Chaque maison est composée d'une grande chambre, dans les murailles de laquelle sont pratiquées des espèces de larges tiroirs où couche la famille, selon l'usage des paysans Hollandais; une étable, une grange, et tout ce qui est nécessaire à une famille d'agriculteurs, se trouve annexé à la ferme. Près de la maison est situé le jardin, puis les terres cultivables. Toutes les fermes ont trois bonniers et demi.*

Tout chef de famille, dès son entrée à la colonie, fait une déclaration par laquelle il s'oblige à en observer les réglemens, en ce qui concerne l'obéissance aux supérieurs, sa conduite religieuse ou morale, celle de sa famille, la manière dont les travaux doivent s'exécuter, l'habillement uniforme des colons, etc.

Lorsqu'une famille de huit individus s'établit dans une ferme (et c'est de ce nombre que l'on compose ordinairement les familles), la société lui ouvre un compte de 1,700 flor., répartis de la manière suivante:

Pour l'acquisition des 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ bonniers* de terre	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	fl. 100†
Pour les exploiter	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	400
Pour deux vaches et quelques moutons	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	150
Pour la maison	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	500
Pour les dépenses communes	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50
Pour meubles et habillemens	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	250
Pour un fonds de réserve destiné à entreprendre des travaux extraordinaires	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	250
									fl. 1,700‡

La somme donnée par anticipation pour les meubles et les habillemens est retenue dans la suite au colon sur ses propres gages; et aussitôt que la ferme est entièrement exploitée, le chef de la famille est débité de 60 flor. pour intérêts du restant du capital, et pour loyer de la ferme même.

Pendant trois ans au moins, les colons cultivent les terres en commun; leur travail est rétribué par des gages; et ils ne disposent nullement du produit de la ferme, mais de celui du jardin et des vaches. Les produits des fermes (et ils nous ont paru bien médiocres), qui consistent principalement en seigle, pommes de terre, sarrazin, etc., sont transportés dans les magasins de la société, où on les conserve pour les distribuer ensuite aux colons en à compte du prix de leur travail, partie en comestibles préparés, partie en simple nature.

Aussi long-temps qu'une famille ne parvient pas à se procurer par son travail tous les produits nécessaires à son entretien, elle reçoit journellement sa subsistance de la société; mais, lorsqu'elle gagne quatre florins par semaine, elle peut préparer sa subsistance dans l'intérieur de sa maison; et quant aux ustensiles qui lui sont nécessaires, le colon peut les acheter à la société ou ailleurs.

La société distribue trois sortes de médailles, les unes en cuivre, les autres en argent, les troisièmes en or. Les premières servent de récompense à ceux que distinguent un travail régulier et une bonne conduite; elles donnent, à ceux qui les ont obtenues, le droit de sortir de la colonie les Dimanches et jours de fête, sans en obtenir la permission des supérieurs. Les secondes récompensent ceux qui, par leur industrie active, gagnent par eux-mêmes tous les moyens de subsistance; elles donnent le droit de sortir de la colonie sans permission, non-seulement les Dimanches et jours de fêtes, mais tous les autres jours de la semaine, aux heures qui ne sont point consacrées au travail. Enfin les médailles d'or sont distribuées à ceux qui ont déjà obtenu celles en argent, dès que leurs fermes produisent annuellement pour une valeur de 250 fl., et, en les obtenant, le colon n'est plus soumis au régime colonial, et il ne diffère d'un fermier ordinaire que par certaines conditions qui lui sont imposées. De même que le colon obtient une médaille par sa bonne conduite, de même il la perd, pour un certain temps ou à jamais, et avec tous les privilèges qui y sont attachés, par sa mauvaise conduite. Les médailles sont solennellement distribuées et retirées tous les quinze jours.

Après un séjour de trois ans dans la colonie, les colons sont distribués en trois classes: 1^o. Celle des hommes laborieux qui ont reçu la médaille d'argent; ils peuvent, ou cultiver la ferme pour leur propre compte, en en payant le loyer à la société, et en acquittant les dettes qu'ils ont contractées à leur entrée; ou la cultiver en commun comme auparavant. 2^o. Celle des colons qui ont reçu la médaille de cuivre, et peuvent en conséquence, en cultivant leur ferme à part, disposer d'une partie des produits; mais l'autre partie doit être rapportée aux magasins de la société, en compensation du loyer de la ferme, des avances qui leur ont été faites, et pour créer un fonds commun. Cependant une partie de ce rapport leur est distribuée en pain. Si les colons, pendant l'année, ne recueillent pas sur leurs champs une quantité déterminée de pommes de terre, ou s'ils demandent à la société des secours extraordinaires, ils doivent restituer la médaille, et passer à la troisième classe. Cette dernière est composée de ceux qui n'ont obtenu aucune médaille, et qui en conséquence doivent verser dans les magasins de la société une plus grande quantité de produits, de sorte qu'ils en ont moins moins à administrer par eux-mêmes, tout en ayant à remplir les mêmes obligations que les autres.

Les colons cultivent en commun une certaine étendue de terrain, dont le produit est destiné à suppléer au déficit de récolte spéciale de chaque ferme, et à pourvoir aux dépenses occasionnées par l'école, l'hôpital, et l'administration. Chaque chef de famille est obligé d'y travailler trois jours par année, pour lesquels il reçoit un salaire. Les salaires en général sont payés au moyen d'un papier-monnaie, qui n'a cours que dans la colonie, et avec lequel les colons peuvent acheter tout ce que bon leur semble, à l'exception des boissons spiritueuses, dont l'usage et la vente sont prohibés. Il y a dans les colonies diverses boutiques, et le prix des objets est fixé par l'administration de la colonie.

Quelle que soit la durée du temps pendant lequel un colon ait résidé dans la colonie, il ne peut jamais devenir propriétaire de sa ferme. Il peut cependant acquérir la propriété des meubles, dont il dispose comme chose à lui, soit en les vendant, soit en les emportant, lorsqu'il quitte définitivement la colonie.

Il n'est pas permis au colon de se marier, à moins qu'il ne soit veuf, ou fils d'un veuf, et en possession d'une ferme ; et lorsque ses enfants sont parvenus à l'âge de 16 ou 18 ans, ils choisissent un état, avec le consentement de leurs parents et des supérieurs, état qu'ils peuvent exercer soit dans le sein de la colonie, soit ailleurs.

Il y a, par vingt-cinq fermes, un surveillant, qui les visite tous les jours, qui dirige les travaux, et les distribue entre les divers colons. Dans ce partage des 25 fermes et la distribution des familles qui les occupent, la société a soin de faire entrer des individus exerçant des métiers différents. En raison de la bonne conduite de chaque famille, la surveillance diminue de jour en jour, et elle cesse presque entièrement, lorsque le colon a restitué la valeur des avances qui lui ont été faites. Pour cent fermes, il y a un sous-directeur, qui donne ses instructions au surveillant, tient les registres, et dirige les manufactures.

Les colons paresseux et d'une conduite irrégulière sont traduits devant un conseil de surveillance, dont quelques colons font partie ; ce conseil les renvoie devant un autre, dit de Discipline, qui peut les faire transférer à Ommerschans (colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, dont nous parlerons ensuite), dans un endroit qui leur est particulièrement destiné. Ils y séjournent pendant un temps déterminé, soumis à un travail plus rigoureux que de coutume. Les colons laborieux et honnêtes sont commis à la surveillance des travaux dans les colonies pour réprimer la mendicité, et dans celles d'orphelins et d'indigents.

Dans ces colonies de Frederiks-Oord, la plupart des familles sont Protestantes ; il y en a cependant plusieurs Catholiques, et deux Juives.

La matinée du troisième jour, nous nous sommes rendus à Wateren, qui est à deux lieues de Frederiks-Oord. Wateren est la colonie d'industrie agricole, où sont envoyés les orphelins qui se distinguent le plus dans leurs colonies. Les orphelins, au nombre de soixante, y apprennent la théorie de l'agriculture, au moyen d'un maître, et la pratique, en cultivant une ferme de quarante-deux bonniers, partagés en champs cultivés, en pépinières, et en pâturages. Le même maître leur enseigne en outre l'arpentage, l'histoire naturelle, la botanique, les mathématiques, la chimie, l'histoire de la Hollande, leur explique la Bible, et leur fait faire des exercices gymnastiques. Ces orphelins sont destinés à devenir surveillants dans les colonies ordinaires ou libres. Ils sont mieux habillés que les autres, et portent un chapeau orné d'un ruban sur lequel est écrit le nom de la colonie privilégiée à laquelle ils appartiennent. Cette colonie gagne à la société à-peu-près 900 fl. par an.

Le même jour, après une course de trois lieues, nous arrivâmes à Veenhuisen, où il y a une colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, deux orphelins, une d'indigents et de vétérans, et une de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture. Deux grands édifices quarrés, à la distance d'un demi-mille l'un de l'autre, contiennent dans la partie qui donne sur les cours, le premier, des mendiants ; le second, des orphelins ; et tous deux, dans des chambres qui donnent à l'extérieur, des indigents et des vétérans. Un autre édifice pareil, à deux milles de distance, contient également ces trois classes d'individus ; et, entre ces trois édifices, sont situées deux églises, l'une Catholique et l'autre Protestante, vingt-quatre maisons formant une colonie de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture, et un même nombre de maisons habitées par les employés de ces colonies.

Les enfants ont ainsi été placés dans le voisinage des hommes, afin que les travaux de l'agriculture et ceux des arts et métiers pussent être distribués plus convenablement. Ces colonies sont aussi entrecoupées par des grands chemins, bordés d'arbres, et par des canaux, qui les mettent en communication avec la ville d'Amsterdam.

L'intérieur des trois grands édifices est partagé en deux ; d'un côté demeurent les hommes, de l'autre, les femmes : il se compose de grandes salles au rez-de-chaussée qui contiennent de 40 à 50 individus, et qui sont séparées l'une de l'autre par une cuisine.

Au-dessus du rez-de-chaussée, il n'y a que des greniers, qui servent de magasins.

Les individus de la colonie pour réprimer la mendicité reçoivent, à leur entrée, un habillement neuf, complet et uniforme, et, pendant quelque temps, sont entretenus en toutes choses, sans que l'on exige que, par leur travail, ils gagnent au prorata de ce qu'on leur a donnée. Ils travaillent, ou à l'extérieur, à la culture des champs, à la fabrication des briques, à l'exploitation des tourbières, ou à l'intérieur, dans les manufactures, et plus souvent à la tâche qu'à la journée. Le prix du travail est fixé par l'administration de la société.

Les terres de ces colonies sont partagées en fermes, de trente-deux bonniers chacune, moitié champs cultivés, moitié pâturages. A chacune de ces fermes sont attachés quarante ou cinquante colons, qui travaillent sous la direction d'un surveillant, instruit auparavant ravant par le sous directeur quant à la manière de les cultiver. Les dépenses annuelles pour l'exploitation de chacune de ces fermes sont fixées à 1,680 flor.

La comptabilité entre la société et les colons est tenue suivant le système militaire. Chaque colon est porteur d'un livret sur lequel sont inscrits la somme des travaux qu'il a exécutés chaque jour, celle des fournitures qui lui ont été faites, des dépenses générales auxquelles il doit prendre part, et tout ce qu'il a reçu en papier-monnaie.

Si les gains du colon excèdent les dépenses qui ont été faites pour lui, ce qui arrive, dit-on, communément, un tiers de cet excédant lui est donné en papier-monnaie, un second tiers est versé dans une caisse d'épargne, pour lui être rendu à sa sortie de la colonie, et le dernier tiers est retenu par la société pour faire face à des dépenses imprévues.

Des gardes à cheval, qui circulent autour de la colonie, des primes accordées à ceux qui reconduisent les colons qui ont tenté de s'échapper, un habillement uniforme, tels sont les moyens employés pour empêcher que la colonie ne soit désertée. Les colons y sont retenus pendant six ans, à moins que, dans un plus court espace de temps, ils n'aient épargné 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ flor. : ils sortent alors immédiatement.

Les orphelins sont conduits dans les colonies qui ont été fondées pour eux, dès qu'ils ont atteint l'âge de six ans. Une partie de la journée est employée par eux au travail dans les champs ou à l'intérieur ; l'autre partie est consacrée à l'instruction élémentaire, au dessin et au chant. Les orphelins sortent des colonies à l'âge de dix-huit ans, et la plupart prennent du service soit dans la marine, soit dans l'armée.

Les colonies d'indigents et de vétérans servent de lieux préparatoires avant de passer aux colonies ordinaires ou libres. Les vétérans et les indigents demeurent avec leurs familles dans les appartements extérieurs des grands édifices habités par les mendiants et les orphelins. De même que ceux-ci, ils sont considérés comme des journaliers, et sont payés en raison de leur travail.

Dans toutes ces colonies, les fournitures aussi bien que les gages varient en raison de la différence d'âge, de force, de sexe des individus. Les hommes sont divisés en cinq classes, et les femmes en sept. La première classe d'hommes doit gagner un florin 70 c. par semaine ; la seconde 1-35 ; la troisième 1-06 ; la quatrième, composée d'enfants de 8 à 16 ans, 1-01 ; la cinquième, composée d'enfants au-dessous de cet âge, 67 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. La première classe de femmes doit gagner par semaine 1 flor. 51 ; la seconde 1-26 ; la troisième 98 c. ; les quatrième et cinquième, composées d'enfants, 95 c. et 75 c. ; les sixième et septième, composées également d'enfants, mais plus jeunes, 63 c. et 55 c.

La matinée du quatrième jour, nous nous rendîmes à Ommerschans, qui est à sept lieues de Veenhuisen.

Ommerschans.

A Ommerschans il y a une colonie pour réprimer la mendicité et une d'indigents et de vétérans. La première est composée d'hommes et d'enfants ; et, dans un lieu séparé, sont placés les colons ordinaires ou libres, envoyées en expiation de quelque faute commise dans leurs propres colonies. L'édifice, qui peut contenir mille individus, ressemble sous plusieurs rapports à celui de Veenhuisen, si ce n'est que l'eau qui l'entourne, et les barreaux de fer aux fenêtres, lui donnent une bien plus grande apparence de prison que l'autre, et qu'au lieu d'un seul rez-de-chaussée, il est surmonté d'un étage. Sont également semblables les dispositions des salles, les occupations des colons, la discipline, etc. Au milieu de la cour, il y a des boutiques de serruriers, de menuisiers, et d'autres métiers, et des fabriques de fil et de toile. En dehors, se trouvent l'église qui sert aux cultes Catholique et Protestant, et d'école en même temps ; la maison du sous-directeur, l'hôpital, et d'autres locaux à l'usage des colonies ; et vingt maisons, éparses dans les terres, forment une colonie de surveillants aux travaux d'agriculture.

De cette colonie pour réprimer la mendicité, sortent tous les ans 150 individus à-peu-près.

On recurring to the official statement of the total number of persons relieved during the ten years ending 1831, it will be seen that in 1831 the population of the poor colonies consisted of 7,853, being an increase of 402 from the time of Count Arrivabene's visit, arising solely from an increased number placed in the repressive or most severe of the penal colonies. And that this population was thus distributed : 2,297 in the colony assigned to orphans and abandoned children ; 456 in the preparatory colony ; 2,694 in the colonies called free ; and 2,406 in the repressive or mendicity colonies.

The nature of these institutions appears to have been imperfectly understood in England. They are in fact large agricultural workhouses ; and superior to the previous workhouses only so far as they may be less expensive, or, without being oppressive, objects of greater aversion.

It is scarcely possible that they can be less expensive.

The employing persons taken indiscriminately from other occupations and trades, almost all of them the victims of idleness and misconduct, and little urged by the stimulus of individual interest in farming the worst land in the country, (land so worthless that the fee-simple of it is worth only 24 s. an acre,) at an expense for outfit, exclusively of the value of the land, of more than 130 l. per family, and under the management of a joint-stock company of more than 20,000 members, cannot but be a ruinous speculation.

Nor does the institution appear to have repressed pauperism by the disagreeableness ableness of the terms on which it offers relief : we have seen, on the contrary, that it has not prevented its steady increase. It will be shown subsequently that a similar establishment has signally failed in Belgium, and we cannot anticipate a different result in Holland.

HOLLAND.

M. Lebau, the Belgian Minister of Justice, has furnished a detailed report on the poor laws of Belgium, together with a considerable number of printed documents. Of the latter, we have printed only the regulations of the schools for the poor in Louvain, and of the out-door relief in Tournay ; the laws of August 1833, respecting the Dépôts de Mendicité ; and some statistical papers respecting the relief afforded in different manners in 1833, and in some of the preceding years. The others were too voluminous for this publication ; and though we have consulted them, (particularly the Code Administratif des Etablissements de Bienfaisance, M. Quetelet's statistical works on the Netherlands and Belgium, and M. Ducpétiaux's on Indigence,) with great advantage, we have been forced to omit them. Baron de Hochepeid Larpent and Mr. Fauche, His Majesty's Consuls in Antwerp and Ostend, have given valuable replies to the Commissioners' questions ; and Count Arrivabene a detailed account of the state of Gaesbeck, a village a few miles from Brussels. And we have inserted three reports as to the state of the Belgian poor colonies ; one from Count Arrivabene, who visited them in 1829, and one from M. Ducpétiaux, and another from Captain Brandreth, both dated in 1832.

BELGIUM AND FRANCE.

The union and subsequent separation of Belgium and France, and afterwards of Belgium and Holland, occasion the Belgian laws on this as on every other subject to be divisible into three heads :

First, those which she received when incorporated with France ; secondly, those which were made during the union with Holland ; and thirdly, those which have been passed since the revolution of 1830.

By far the largest portion of the Belgian poor laws is derived from the first of these sources.

The government of the Directory, by three laws passed in the autumn of 1796, established the system under which the principal portion of the relief afforded by the public is now regulated in most of the countries which constituted the French empire.

FRENCH POOR LAWS.

By the first of these, that of the 16 Vendémiaire, An v. (7th October 1796), the property belonging to the hospices (or almshouses) was restored to them, and their management was entrusted to a commission appointed by the municipal authorities.

Hospices and Bureaux de Bienfaisance.

By the second, that of the 23 Brumaire, An v. (13th November 1796), it was enacted, that all the revenues of the different hospices in one commune should be employed as one fund for their common support.

And by the third, that of the 7 Frimaire, An v. (25th November 1796), that in every commune there should be appointed one or more bureaux de bienfaisance, each bureau consisting of five members, to administer out-door relief ; and that the funds at the disposition of the bureau de bienfaisance should consist of one tenth of the receipts from all public exhibitions within its district, and of whatever voluntary contributions it could obtain. By the same law all able-bodied beggars were required, under pain of three months' imprisonment, to return to their place of birth, or of domicile, if they had subsequently acquired a domicile.

By the law of the 3 Frimaire, An vii. (23d November 1798), the additional sums necessary to provide for the hospices, and the secours à domicile (or out-door relief), of each commune, are directed to be raised by the local authorities in the same manner as the sums necessary for the other local expenses.

By that of the 4 Ventose, An ix. (23d February 1801), all rents belonging to the State, of which the payment had been interrupted, and all national property usurped by individuals, were declared the property of the nearest hospitals. By that of the 5 Prairial, An xi., the commissaires des hospices and bureaux de bienfaisance were authorized to make public collections in churches, and to establish poor-boxes in public places ; and by a train of subsequent legislation they were enabled to acquire property by testamentary dispositions.

It is to be observed that under these laws the members of the commissions des hospices and of the bureaux de bienfaisance are frequently, but not necessarily, the same persons. The maire (or principal civil officer) of each commune is a necessary member of every charitable board. The other members go out by lot, one every year, but are re-eligible.

BELGIUM AND FRANCE.

FRENCH
POOR LAWS.

By the law of the 16 Messidor, An vii., the inmates of the hospices were to be set to work, and two thirds of the produce of their work was to belong to the hospice, the other third to be given to them either periodically or when they quitted the hospice. We mention this enactment, because it has afforded a precedent for many similar regulations.

And partly for the purpose of increasing the funds for charitable purposes, and partly with a view to reduce the rate of interest in the mode of borrowing usually adopted by the poor, by two arrêtés of the 16 Pluviose and 24 Messidor, An xii. (6th February and 13th July 1804), all pawnbroking by individuals was prohibited, and public establishments for that purpose, under the name of Monts-de-Piété, were directed to be established and conducted for the benefit of the poor.

deserted Children.

The French legislation respecting foundlings and deserted children is of a very different kind, and appears to us to be the portion of their poor laws deserving least approbation.

A law of the 27 Frimaire, An v. (17 Dec. 1796), enacted, that all recently-born deserted children should be received gratuitously in all the hospices of the Republic, at the expense of the State so far as those hospices had not a sufficient revenue specially destined to that purpose; and an arrêté of the Directory, of the 30 Ventose, An v., (20th March 1791), founded on the previous law, directed that as soon as possible after children had been received in any hospice they should be sent out to be nursed, and brought up in the country until the age of 12; and then either left to those who had brought them up, if they chose to take charge of them, or apprenticed to farmers, artists or manufacturers, or, if the children wished it, to the sea service.

The law on this subject received nearly its present form from an Imperial decree of the 19th Jan. 1811.

By that decree, the children for whom the public became responsible were divided into three classes: 1. Enfans trouvés; 2. Enfans abandonnés; 3. Orphelins pauvres. The first class comprises children of unknown parents, found exposed, or placed in foundling hospitals. The second, children whose parents are known, but have abandoned them, and cannot be forced to support them. The third, children without father or mother, or means of subsistence. For the first class a hospice was directed to be appointed in every arrondissement, with a tour (or revolving slide) for their reception, without the detection of the person bringing them. All the three classes of children were to be put out to nurse until six years old, and then placed with landholders (cultivateurs) or artizans until 12, subject to any mode in which the Ministre de la Marine might dispose of them. If not wanted by him, they were at 12 to be apprenticed for periods not exceeding their attaining the age of 25.

The annual sum of four millions (160,000 l.) in the whole was to be contributed by the State towards these expenses. The remainder to be supplied by the hospices out of their own revenues or out of those of the communes.

Relatives claiming a foundling were to repay all that it had cost, as far as they had the means.

The last clause of this decree directs that those who make a custom of taking infants to hospitals shall be punished according to law. It is not easy to reconcile this clause with the rest of the decree. If taking an infant to a foundling hospital were an offence, it seems strange that the law should itself prescribe a contrivance (a tour), the object of which is to prevent the detection of the person committing the offence. In fact, however, no such punishment "according to law" seems to exist. If a nurse or other person entrusted with a child take it, in breach of duty, to a foundling hospital, the offence is punishable by the code pénal; but no punishment is denounced against a parent for doing so, however often the act may be repeated. Nor does the "making a custom of taking children to a hospital" appear as an offence in the detailed "Compte général de l'administration de la justice criminelle en France."

Mendicity and Vagrancy.

The following is an outline of the French regulations, as far as they affected Belgium, for the repression of mendicity and vagrancy. A decree of the Convention, 27 Vendémiaire, An ii. (15th Oct. 1793), fixed the settlement, or domicile de secours, of every person, 1st, in the place of his birth; 2d, of his residence for six months in any commune in which he should have married, or for one year in any in which he should have been registered as an inhabitant, or for two years in any in which he should have been hired by one or more masters. Every person found begging was to be sent to his place of domicile; if he could not prove any domicile he was to be imprisoned for a year in the maison de repression of the department, and at the end of his imprisonment, if his domicile were not then ascertained, to be transported to the colonies for not less than eight years. A person found again begging after having been removed to his domicile, was also to be imprisoned for a year: on a repetition of the offence the punishment was to be doubled. In the maison de repression he was to be set at work, and receive monthly one-sixth of the produce of his labour, and at the end of his imprisonment another sixth, the remaining two-thirds belonging to the establishment. On the third offence he also was to be transported. A transport was to work in the colonies for the benefit of the nation, at one-sixth of the average wages of the colony: one-half of that sixth to be paid to him weekly, and the other half on the expiration of his sentence. No person was to be transported except between the ages of 18 years and 60. Those under 18 were to be detained until they arrived at that age, and then transported; those above 60, to be imprisoned for life.

The local authorities were authorized to employ their able-bodied poor on public works, at three-fourths of the average wages of the canton. Every person convicted of having given to a beggar any species of relief whatever was to forfeit the value of two days' wages; to be doubled on the repetition of the offence.

The provisions of this law were, as might have been anticipated, far too severe for execution. After having remained, though inoperative, on the statute book for nearly 15 years, it was replaced by the Imperial decree of the 5th July 1808.

By that decree a depôt de mendicité was directed to be established in each department, at the expense partly of the nation and partly of the department. Within 15 days after its establishment, the Prefect of the department was to give public notice of its being opened, and all persons without means of subsistence were bound to proceed to it, and all persons found begging were to be arrested and taken to it.

By a subsequent arrêté of the 27th October 1808, it was ordered that all beggars should on their arrest be placed in the first instance in the maison d'arret of the district; and transferred from thence, if guilty of vagrancy, to the maison de detention, or prison; if not vagrants, to the depôt de mendicité. In the depôt they were to be clothed in the house dress, confined to regular and very early hours, the sexes separated, subject to severe punishments (rising to six months solitary imprisonment (cachot) on bread and water) for disobedience or other misconduct, or attempts to escape, deprived of all intercourse, except by open letters, with their relations or friends, and kept to work at wages to be regulated by the Prefect, two-thirds of which were to belong to the establishment, and the remaining third was to be paid to them on their quitting the depôt.

The conditions on which a person might obtain his release from a depôt de mendicité are not stated.

The provisions of the code pénal appear to leave that question to the discretion of the Executive.

Section 274 of that code enacts that every person found begging in a place containing a public establishment for the prevention of mendicity, shall be imprisoned for from three to six months, and then removed to the depôt de mendicité. Under section 275, if there be no such establishment in the place where he is found begging, his imprisonment is to last only from one to three months; if, however, he begs out of the canton in which he is domiciled, it is to last from six months to two years.

After having suffered his punishment, he is to remain (apparently in the depôt de mendicité) at the disposition of Government.

Such was the state of the law respecting purely charitable, and what may be called penal, relief at the time of the establishment of the kingdom of the Netherlands. We have stated these provisions at some length, because they form, with little material alteration, the existing law on the subject in France. No change of any importance appears to have been made by the late Government of the Netherlands, or by the present Belgian Government, with respect to the hospices or the bureaux de bienfaisance; but with respect to foundlings, an arrêté of the 2d June 1825, declared that the expense of their maintenance ought to be supplied by the hospices, and so far as these were unable to meet it, from the local revenues of the commune or the province in which they had been abandoned: a provision which has been the subject of much complaint, as imposing a heavy and peculiar burthen on the few towns which possess foundling hospitals. And with respect to monts-de-piété, an arrêté of the 31st October 1826, directed the local authorities of towns and communes to prepare regulations for the management of their respective monts-de-piété, their support, and the employment of the profits, subject to certain general rules; among which are,—

1. That the administration shall be gratuitous.
2. That the interest shall not exceed 5 l. per cent. per annum, and that no further charge shall be made on any pretext whatever.
3. That they shall be open every day.
4. That the pledges may be redeemed at any time before their actual sale.
5. That they shall not be sold until the expiration of 14 months from the time of the loan.

Mendicity.

The following are the most material alterations made in the laws respecting mendicity. By a law of the 28th November 1818, the period of residence necessary for acquiring a settlement or domicile de secours was extended to four years: and by a law of the 12th October 1819, the expense of supporting a person confined in a dépôt de mendicité was thrown on the commune in which he had his domicile de secours.

In 1823 the Belgian Société de Bienfaisance was established, on the model of that which existed in Holland, and contracted with the Government to receive in its colonies de repression 1,000 paupers at the annual sum of 35 florins (2 l. 18 s. 4 d.) per head. In consequence of this arrangement, all the regulations which required a beggar to be removed to a dépôt de mendicité were varied by the introduction of the words "or to a mendicity colony;" and by an arrêté of the 12th October 1825, the governors of the different provinces were directed to give notice that all persons in want of employment and subsistence would obtain them in the dépôts de mendicité or the mendicity colonies, and had only to apply to the local authorities in order to be directed to the one or the other; and that consequently no begging at any period of the year, or under any pretext whatever, could in future be tolerated. Persons arrested for begging were allowed on their own request, if their begging were not accompanied by aggravating circumstances, to be conducted to one or the other of these establishments without suffering the previous imprisonment inflicted by the penal code.

By another arrêté of the same date, the local authorities were directed to prepare new codes for the regulation of the different dépôts de mendicité, based on principles of which the following are the most material:

1. That the dépôts should be confined to the reception of those who, from age or infirmity, should be unfit for agricultural labour.
2. That all above the age of six, and under that of 70, and capable of working, should be kept to work, at average wages; that each person should be charged 17 cents (about 3 ½ d.) for his maintenance, being its average cost, and retain the remainder of his earnings; and be allowed nothing beyond strict necessities (mere bread is specified for food), if his earnings were under that sum.

That a portion of each person's surplus earnings should be reserved and paid over to him on leaving the house, and the other portion paid to him from time to time in a local paper money.

3. That cantines should be established in the house, to enable the inmates to spend their surplus earnings.

4. That those who had voluntarily offered themselves for reception should be at liberty to quit the house, after having repaid the expenses of their maintenance there.

5. That those arrested and sent thither as beggars should not be set free until, 1st. they had repaid all expenses; and 2dly, had fitted themselves to earn an independent livelihood, or been demanded by their commune or relatives, and security given for their future conduct.

6. That in each house there should be an ecclesiastic to perform divine service, and give moral and religious instruction frequently in private, and twice a week in public; and that, where the inmates should consist of Protestants and Catholics, there should be both a Catholic and a Protestant ecclesiastic.

7. That in each house there should be a daily school for the young, and a school for the adult, open for four hours on Sundays, and for an hour two evenings of the week. The attendance on these schools to be compulsory.

8. That so far as the confined paupers did not earn their own subsistence, each commune should pay the support of those having in it their domicile de secours, at the above-mentioned rate of 17 cents (3 ½ d.) per day, but be allowed a discount of 2 cents per day (reducing the daily payment to 3 d.) on prompt payment.

A decree of the 9th April 1831, by the Regent, abolished that discount, the sum of of 3*d.* a day having been found insufficient, except in the depôt of Bruges, in which the decree states that it covers every expense.

The existing Government has passed two very important laws, dated the 13th & 29th of August 1833.

The first of these enacts, that until the laws on mendicity shall have been revised, the daily charge for the subsistence of each detenu in the depôt de mendicité, instead of being fixed at 17 cents, shall be determined annually by the Government. The commune bound to repay the expense is to be assisted, if incapable of meeting it, by the province, the King deciding if the matter is disputed. If payment is not made, a personal remedy is given against the receiver of the commune.

By the second, a conseil d'inspection des dépôts de mendicité is to be elected in each province. Each conseil is to propose a scheme,—

1. For dividing the inmates of the dépôts into three classes, comprising, 1st, the infirm; 2d, the able-bodied who have voluntarily entered them; 3d, those sentenced to them as beggars or vagrants.

2. For obviating the abuses which might follow from the power given to the indigent of voluntarily entering the dépôts.

And as a general rule, a pauper who requests admission without any authority from his commune, may be received; but in that case his commune is to be immediately informed of what has occurred. If it offers to support him at home, he is to be sent back to it: if it refuses, he is to remain in the depôt at the expense of the commune: and the communes are to be informed that it depends on themselves to diminish the expense of supporting their poor in the dépôts, by the judicious distribution of out-door relief, by the organization of committees for the purpose of watching over the indigent, and inquiring into the causes of their distress; by the erection of asylums for lunatics, the deaf and dumb, the blind and the incurable; and by the establishment of houses of employment (d'ateliers libres de travail) in winter, and infant schools. For all which purposes they are recommended to assess themselves. M. Lebeau says in his report, "Enfin chez nous nul ne peut exiger de secours en vertu d'un droit." (p. 594.) But it must be admitted that these provisions, if not constituting a right in the pauper to relief, give at least a right to the managers of the dépôts to force the parishes to relieve, either at home or in the depôt, any pauper who presents himself: and M. Lebeau himself felt the danger to which the parishes are exposed. In his circular of the 13th September 1833, addressed to the provinces in which dépôts are established, he urges the importance of adopting regulations respecting the reception and dismissal of the poor voluntarily presenting themselves, which may preserve parishes from "the indefinite burthen which would follow the too easy admission of applicants." "These establishments," he adds, "must not be considered by the poor as places of gratuitous entertainment, (des hôtelleries gratuites). One of the best methods of preventing this will be, the strict execution of the law which prescribes work to all those who are not physically incapable of it; and for those who are incapable, the ordinary hospices and hospitals are the proper receptacles. It is true that in some dépôts work has been discontinued, because the results did not repay the expenditure; but this consideration ought not to prevail over the moral advantages which follow its exaction. Labour is the essential condition which must be imposed on the pauper; and if it require the sacrifice of some expenditure, that sacrifice must be made."

In a subsequent circular, dated the 4th July 1834, and addressed to the governors of the different provinces, M. Lebeau states, that one of the causes assigned for the prevalence of mendicity, is the facility with which persons obtain release from the dépôts. "I invite you, M. le Gouverneur," says the Minister, "when a pauper requests his release, to consider his previous history, to ascertain whether he has the means of subsistence, or the local authorities have engaged to provide for him; and to treat with great suspicion the solicitations of parishes, as they are always interested in obtaining the release of the paupers for whose maintenance they pay."

With respect to the general working of these institutions we have not much information. It appears from the report of M. Lebeau that there are in Belgium six dépôts de mendicité; one at Hoogstraten for the province of Antwerp, at Cambre for Brabant, at Bruges for the two Flanders, at Mons for Hainault, at Namur for Namur and Luxembourg, and at Reckheim for Limbourg and Liege; that the hospices for the old and impotent, and the hospitals for the sick, are very numerous, and that each commune possesses its bureau de bienfaisance for the distribution of out-door relief. In 1832 the annual income of the different bureaux de bienfaisance was estimated at 5,308,114 francs (equal to about 212,325 l. sterling), and that of the hospices at 4,145,876 francs (equal to about 165,835 l. sterling), altogether about 378,160 l. But the report contains no data from which the whole expenditure in public relief, or the whole number of persons relieved, or the general progress or diminution of pauperism, can be collected.

An important paper, however, is contained in the supplement to M. Lebeau's report, stating the number of foundlings, deserted children and orphans, in the nine provinces constituting the kingdom of Belgium, in the years 1832 and 1833; of which we subjoin a copy, having added to it the population of the different provinces, as given in the official statement of 1830.

It appears from this statement that in the provinces of Antwerp, Brabant and Hainault, containing a population of 1,514,072 persons, and possessing each two public receptacles for foundlings, the number of foundlings in 1833 was 5,404, or 1 in 278: that in Flandre Orientale and Namur, containing a population of 946,663, and possessing each a single public receptacle, the number of foundlings was 1,367, or 1 in 699; and that in Flandre Occidentale, Liege, Limbourg and Luxembourg, containing a population of 1,601,469, but having no such establishment, the number of foundlings was 98, or less than 1 in 16,000. Nor does this difference arise from an increase of the number of deserted children in those provinces in which foundling hospitals do not exist: on the contrary, the numbers in the second column, comprising both orphans and deserted children, in the four provinces in which no foundling hospitals exist, amount to 910, out of a population of 1,601,469, being 1 in 1,649, whereas those in Antwerp, Brabant and Hainault amount to 1,356, out of a population of 1,514,077, or 1 in 1,116; and when it is recollected that as the proportion of orphans can scarcely differ in the different provinces, and that in the second column they are mixed with the deserted children, the superiority of the four former provinces over the three latter will be found to be really much greater than it appears.

Nor does the difference arise from the prevalence of infanticide.

It appears from the statistique des tribunaux de la Belgique, that in the years 1826, 1827, 1828 and 1829, there were in the provinces of Antwerp, Brabant, Flandre Orientale, Hainault and Namur, containing 2,450,740 inhabitants, and possessing foundling establishments, 13 convictions for infanticide; and in Flandre Occidentale, Liege, Limbourg and Luxembourg, containing 1,601,469 inhabitants, and no such establishments, only nine convictions, being a proportion slightly inferior. So far, therefore, from foundling hospitals having had a tendency to prevent desertion of children or infanticide, it appears that their tendency is decidedly to promote the former, without preventing in any degree the latter. The real infanticides, strange as it may sound, are the founders and supporters of foundling hospitals. The average mortality in Europe of children during the first year does not exceed one in five, or 20 per cent. In England and Holland it is less: in Belgium it is $22\frac{49}{100}$ per cent. But in the foundling hospitals of Belgium (and their mortality is below the average of such establishments), it is 45 per cent*.

In the foundling hospital in Brussels it is now 66 per cent., having been from 1812 to 1817, 79 per cent.

Nor is the fate of those who escape from these receptacles much preferable to that of those who perish there. M. Ducpétiaux, the inspector of prisons, states that, small as is their number relative to the rest of the population, they form a considerable proportion of the inmates of gaols and prisons, and a still larger proportion of the prostitutes†.

Such having been the legislation, and such being its results, an attempt towards its improvement was made by a law, dated the 30th July 1834. That law enacts, that from the 1st of January 1835, the maintenance of foundlings and of deserted children whose place of settlement is not known shall be supplied one half by the communes in which they shall have been exposed or deserted, with the assistance of their bureaux de bienfaisance, and the other half by the province of which those communes form a part, and that an annual grant shall be made by the State in aid of this expenditure; and that the expense of maintaining deserted children whose place of settlement is known shall be supported by the hospices and bureaux de bienfaisance of their place of settlement, with the assistance of the commune.

The object of this law is stated in a circular from the Minister of Justice, dated the 23d January 1834.

He directs, in the first place, the local authorities to provide for the subsistence of the foundlings with whom they may be charged, without reference to the proposed annual grant, since neither the amount of that grant nor the mode of its distribution is laid down by the law; and urges them to prevent the increase of their own burthens by endeavouring to prevent the abandonment of children born within their jurisdictions, and the exposure within their jurisdictions of children born elsewhere; and for that purpose to procure the punishment by law of those convicted of having exposed infants or made a custom of taking them to hospitals. He admits, however, that the necessary investigations are matters of great delicacy; and he might have added that the punishment by law to which he refers does not exist, unless punishment by law means the arbitrary interference of the police, so much tolerated in continental Europe.

“These,

Foundlings.

“These,” he adds, “are the wishes of the Government and of the Chambers; and this declaration will enable you to understand the motives of the silent repeal of the law, directing the establishment of tours for the reception of foundlings. The Legislature could not at the same time prescribe measures intended to diminish the exposure of children, and an institution by which it is favoured and facilitated. It did not venture to pronounce the suppression of the existing tours; but the silence of the law on this subject is the expression of its earnest desire that this institution should be discontinued: the mode of discontinuing it is left to the local authorities. The Government will require from you an annual report on these subjects, before it decides on the distribution of the annual grant; and the favour shown to each district may depend on its endeavours to comply with these instructions.”

This circular is a curious instance of an attempt to undermine an institution which the Government and the Legislature disapprove, but which they do not venture directly to grapple with. All that the Legislature ventures directly to do is to express its earnest desire (desire formel), by the silence of the law. The Government however goes further, and holds out hints, though it does not venture to hint very clearly, that the fewer the foundlings in any district, the larger will be the share of that district in the government grant. Under the influence of these double motives we may expect the tours soon to be closed.

Monts-de-Piété.

We have also inserted (p. 607) a paper respecting the operations of the monts-de-piété, of which the following is the result:

Average of Nine Years from 1822 to 1830 inclusive.		1831.		1832.
Pledges.	Amount.	Pledges.	Amount.	Pledges.	Amount.
1,271,122	Francs. 3,778,286 or £. 151,131	1,185,834	Francs. 3,268,104 or £. 130,124	1,129,373	Francs. 3,939,219 or £. 157,548

The number of pledges redeemed is stated only for 1832, in which year 1,124,115 pledges, on which 3,162,399 francs, or 126,495 l. sterling, had been lent, were redeemed. It is to be observed that the pledges are for small sums, amounting on an average to about three francs, or less than half-a-crown per pledge; and that the amount of the redemption in 1832 nearly corresponds with the amount lent in 1831. On the whole, considering the low rate of interest exacted by the Belgian monts-de-piété, as compared with that taken by our pawnbrokers, the small aggregate amount of deposits, being about 150,000 l. for four millions of people, is a strong indication of the generally provident habits of the labouring population.

As further illustrations of the general working of the Belgian system, we extract the following particulars from the reports from Antwerp and Ostend. (pp. 627, 628, 629, 630. 634. 636, 637 & 639.)

ANTWERP.

Vagrants.

ANTWERP.
Population, 77,199.

Indigent travellers, foreigners or denizens, who pass through Antwerp, are received there at an establishment called St. Julien's Hospital, where they are lodged and boarded for three nights at the expense of the establishment, which provides their wants for the moment.

The foundation of this hospital, which yearly receives about 1,000 individuals, dates from the beginning of the 14th century. It subsists by itself, under the direction of a private charitable administration, by means of some fixed revenues, and also by the liberal donations of philanthropic persons.

The same poor travellers, when Belgians, receive at Antwerp an indemnity of 15 centimes, or 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling, per league per head for travelling expenses to the first town in the neighbourhood, where this relief is continued to them. These travelling expenses are at the charge of the town, and paid out of the municipal funds, in virtue of a Royal Act of the 10th May 1815.

Destitute Able-bodied.

Necessitous individuals of the labouring and indigent class, who do not attempt to go a begging, and who, for want of work, are without means of providing for the necessities of

of life, and also the members of their families, are provided for at their own dwellings, by the care of the bureau de bienfaisance, by the means or revenues of this establishment, and the subsidies which the town grants it yearly out of the municipal funds, in order to supply what may be necessary to continue its service. The amount of this grant varies annually, according to the real wants of the establishment, by reason of the circumstances that either augment or reduce its expenses.

The succours distributed by this establishment consist in money, bread, potatoes, fuel and clothing, &c.

Besides, there exists at Antwerp, under the direction of the same bureau de bienfaisance, a workhouse, where carpets of cow-hair and other articles are made. This workhouse is established especially to procure work to the indigent and working class who are without employ. The population of this establishment varies according to the different seasons and other circumstances. It is most frequented during the winter, when the navigation is interrupted, and the stagnation of several branches of industry cause the number of indigent to augment. Those who come to work in this establishment remain there the whole day, and receive their meals, besides a salary in cash, proportioned to the work they are employed at.

If, through the effects of a hard winter, the wants of the labouring and indigent class are excessive, there are formed at Antwerp private societies for relief, which, by means of donations, collections and voluntary subscriptions, efficaciously assist the unfortunate by distributions of money, food, fuel, &c.

The depôt of mendicity in the province of Antwerp is situated at Hoogstraeten, in an ancient manor bought for that purpose by the former department administration. It is a spacious establishment of agriculture, possessing a great number of acres of arable, pasture and wood land, and a still greater number of heath, (bruyère).

Those individuals who are destitute, and who desire to be admitted into this establishment, are received as free men; the vagrants are brought there by force. Both are employed there at sundry works of agriculture, of manufacture, or in the household establishment, according to their physical strength. The impotent and aged alone are kept without working in a separate place.

For several years the expense for the maintenance of individuals of the depôt at Hoogstraeten has not amounted to more than 32 centimes per individual, (or 3*d.* sterling.)

On the 1st January 1834 the number of persons entertained at the provincial depôt, on account of the city of Antwerp, was 153. The population of this establishment generally amounts to 250 or 300 individuals, all belonging to the province.

The children of the working class or indigent are received, without any distinction, in the public schools established gratis. Those children abandoned to the public charity, or of whom the parents are entirely unable to bring them up, and who request to be relieved of them from inability to maintain them, are sent to an hospital established for that purpose, or else placed in the country under the direction of the civil hospital, or the bureau de bienfaisance.

There are at Antwerp 26 private hospitals, founded and established for many centuries by charitable persons in favour of a stated number of aged persons, of both sexes, and of decent and respectable families; but in preference for the members of the founders' family, and which persons, without being entirely destitute, have, notwithstanding, no sufficient means to provide for their subsistence. Those persons inhabit a small house in the hospital, where they keep their own household separately, and subsist by what they can earn personally by any handwork, and by the weekly succour which they receive from the revenue of the foundation. These men and women reside in separate hospitals.

Destitute persons, of both sexes, who are impotent through age, but have not claims to be admitted into the before-mentioned private hospital, are maintained by the administrations of the poor, the sick, incurable and impotents, in the civil hospital, and the others in the country, where they are boarded with the farmers at the expenses of the public establishment of charity; that is to say, of the administration of the civil hospitals and bureau de bienfaisance. Besides, there is at Antwerp a special establishment as a refuge to the impotent through age, of decent and respectable families, who are without means of procuring a livelihood.

Sick.

In Belgium every town has its civil hospital for the maintenance of destitute sick. That of Antwerp is open to all the unfortunate, without distinction, whenever their social position does not afford them the means of being attended by a physician at their dwellings, who are deemed proper objects for admission.

Are also admitted, in a private room in this hospital, (upon payment of a small daily retribution), all individuals who, although not entirely destitute, prefer to be treated in the hospital rather than at their own houses; such as men and female servants, who are commonly sent there by the persons who have them in their employ.

BELGIUM.

Antwerp.

Indigent persons, born at Antwerp, are treated at the hospital at the expense of the establishment. Those who are not of the town, but are of the country, are treated there at the expense of the commune where they have their domicile de secours.

These expenses are fixed at the rate of 62 cents, or 1 franc 31 centimes (1 s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling) per diem, whatever may be the sickness. The expenses, for the treatment of those who have no domicile de secours, are repaid by government out of the treasury funds. The town provides for the insufficiency of the private revenue of this establishment, in the same manner as it does for the bureau de bienfaisance, by means of "subsidies in aid," paid out of the municipal funds. This amount of "subsidies" varies annually according to the wants of the administration of the hospital.

Persons of the indigent and necessitous class, whose sickness or complaint is not severe enough to require their entering the hospital, receive medical and surgical relief at their own homes. To that effect, there are several physicians and surgeons appointed and attached to the bureau de bienfaisance, who give their assistance to the sick who require it, every one in the district or section for which he is appointed. These physicians and surgeons, who receive a fixed salary from the administration of the poor, also receive at their domicile, at fixed hours of the day, indigent persons who want to consult them on the state of their health; and it is on a ticket delivered by them, that such sick persons are received at the civil hospital. The bureau de bienfaisance has a special pharmacy, situated in the centre of the town, where medicine is given gratis to the indigent, on a prescription signed by a physician of the poor establishment.

The indigent persons relieved by the bureau de bienfaisance receive only the strict necessities of life to feed and support their families, and no more, so that they have nothing to satisfy their private wants or fancies, nor can they procure themselves any luxuries or other comforts; and they always lead a life, that, although protected against the most pressing wants, is notwithstanding a very miserable one. It is thus the interest of those individuals that are able to work (and this they perfectly comprehend) to seek to maintain themselves. It is only those persons who are totally depraved, and who give themselves entirely up to drunkenness and every other excess, who feel assured that, after having wasted and spent the little they possess, and abandoned the work that maintained them, there always remains to them the resource of the distributions made by the administration of the poor.

In Antwerp, the situation of a workman, whatever may be the class he belongs to, and who maintains himself solely by his work, is by all means preferable and better than that of a person who only subsists by relief or public charity. The existence of those who reside in the dépôts of mendicity, excepting only the loss of their liberty, is even in many respects preferable to the situation of the latter, who are maintained by general charity.

OSTEND.

Destitute Able-bodied.

Ostend,
Population, 11,328.

The only legal mode of lodging the destitute able-bodied is to send them to the dépôt of mendicity, where they are treated as paupers. There existed formerly agricultural colonies on the same principles as those in Holland, to which the parishes could send their able-bodied, destitute and their families; it was found in vain to attempt making cultivators or proprietors of them.

The destitute able-bodied, but quite indigent, of the two Flanders, and the vagrants who have been tried as such, compose altogether a population of about 300 persons (the destitute able-bodied of Ghent excepted.) For each of these 300 poor, his parish pays a contribution of 32 centimes (3d.) per day (men and women equally.) The dépôt for both the Flanders established at Bruges, by the mildness of its administration, has gradually overcome the dread which it inspired at its origin. The directors have banished all rigour, not even enforcing work on the destitute; but as they are paid according to their industry, that inducement to work is found sufficient. This establishment is remarkably prosperous, having already saved fr. 80,000 (3,200 l.), all expenses paid. It is not found necessary to have any armed force in the neighbourhood to keep this large number of destitute in order, this being attained by gentleness and good usage. On any of the poor leaving the establishment, improved in their moral conduct, they receive a part of their own earnings, which enables them to seek some employment.

Besides this dépôt, there is at Ghent a workhouse where employment is given to the destitute, but without their being maintained. The number of labourers in this establishment, which was erected by voluntary subscription, has been as many as 1,900 in time of great distress.

Every church has its masters of the table of the poor, or distributors of assistance. Such funds proceed from collections made in the church, voluntary alms, and assignments from the "bureau de bienfaisance." Weekly distributions of bread or fuel, sometimes money or clothing, are made; but this assistance is generally discontinued in the summer months, on account of the abundance of work during that season. In the towns the relief consists principally in money (about 32 centimes per man and per day, or 3d. sterling.) In the country the rule is not to give money, but assistance in kind.

Generally their children may be educated gratuitously; but they take little advantage of it, as they prefer employing them in gathering up firewood, &c.; and, generally, there is felt a want of coercive measures to force the parents to send their children to school, and to allow them to be put out as apprentices.

Impotent through Age.

BELGIUM.

Ostend.

There are almshouses throughout the kingdom, where the impotent through age are maintained and taken care of. These institutions are so far profitable to the parishes, as that it would cost them more money to assist these persons separately. Some have been endowed by deeds of gift, others are supported by the inhabitants of the towns. The number of them is increasing in the country, and most towns are well provided in that respect.

The assistance afforded to those relieved at home is in clothing, bread, fuel twice a week, and 75 centimes in money (7*d.*) every Sunday.

There exists between the self-supporting labourers and the persons subsisting exclusively on alms or public charity, a very numerous intermediate class, consisting of those who live partly on relief and partly on labour, so that the two extremities only of the scale can be compared. An able-bodied but not labouring man receives only about the half what the last of those who do labour and are not assisted would earn; the legal relief being 32 centimes (3*d.*), and the lowest day's work more than 64 centimes (6*d.*) As to liberty, nobody is forced to work, not even at the depôt of mendicity; they are only not allowed to go out at will. Food is almost equally distributed, and many destitute poor prefer the depôt to free labour, when they are not sure of being employed every day; but in no other instance.

The grievances which result from this system arise from the neglect, the ignorance or the corruption of the local authorities, and although numerous, they are not very striking.

2dly. Grievances arise from the want of proper conditions with which lands or houses are bequeathed to the bureaux de bienfaisance. Wherever a revenue is bequeathed it is shared equally by the poor, even when they may be beyond need; for instance, a beggar will receive 1 fr. 50 c. (1*s.* 2*d.*) per day for her maintenance, which would not have cost more than the fifth part of that sum, if paid by the depôt of mendicity. To obviate this abuse, and to increase the power of useful charity, the revenue of the bureau de bienfaisance of each parish should be added to the sum principal of the province when the revenue of the bureau exceeds the wants of its locality. 3dly. Grievances arise from the liberty of parents to neglect their children and allowing them to beg alms for their own benefit. This last appears to be the root of the evil, and the great cause of the augmentation of pauperism in these towns.

Gaesbeck.

But the most interesting portion of the Belgian details is Count Arrivabene's account of Gaesbeck, a small village about nine miles from Brussels, containing about 857 acres, inhabited by 364 persons, forming 60 families, or separate menages; constituted of 13 comparatively large farmers, occupying each from 30 to 150 acres, 18 small proprietors or small farmers, 21 day labourers, and 8 artizans. The commune possesses a property producing an annual revenue of 556 francs, or nearly 23*l.* sterling, managed by its bureau de bienfaisance, of which the curé is the acting member. It expended in the year 1832, on the relief of the poor, (including the salary of the schoolmaster and clothing for the poor children who were to be confirmed), 625 francs, or about 25*l.* 2*s.*, being rather less than 1*s.* 4½*d.* per head. How the extra 2*l.* 2*s.* was obtained is not mentioned; but as the bureau is stated to have always nearly a year's revenue in hand, it was probably taken from the receipts of a previous year. The heaviest item of expense is the support of one old man, at the annual expense of 72 francs, (rather less than 3*l.*) Ten other individuals or heads of families appear to have received nearly regular relief, amounting in general to about 6*d.* a week; and four others, to have been assisted at times irregularly; the largest sum being 1*l.*, given to L. Maonens, "pour malheur." There has been only one illegitimate birth during the last five years. The average age of marriage is 27 for men, and 26 for women; the average number of births to a marriage, 3½. As these averages are taken for a period of 23 years, ending in 1832, during which the population has not increased, they may be relied on. Of the whole 60 families, only 11 are without land; all the others either possess some, or hire some from the proprietor. The quantity generally occupied by a day labourer is a bonnier, or about 2½ acres, for which he pays a rent of from 60 to 80 francs. With this land the labourers keep in general a cow, a pig, and poultry. To be without land is considered the extreme of poverty. The number of labourers is precisely equal to the demand for their services. Daily wages are 6*d.*, with some advantages equal to about 1*d.* more; and, as might be expected under a natural system, with no preference of the married to the unmarried. Labourers are generally hired by the year, and remain long in the same service. Crime is exceedingly rare: for the last 12 years no one has been committed to prison. Offences against the game laws are unknown. There are three houses of entertainment in the village, but they are not frequented by the labourers. "Are the labourers discontented; do they look on the farmers with envy?" asked the Count of his informant. "I do not believe,"

BELGIUM.

believe," was the answer, "that the labourers envy the farmers. I believe that the relation between the farmers and labourers is very friendly; that the labourers are perfectly contented in their situation, and feel regard and attachment for their employers." (p. 14.)

What a contrast is exhibited by this picture of moral, contented, and (if the term is permissible) prosperous poverty, supported by the frugality and providence of the labourers themselves, and that of the population of a pauperized English village, better fed indeed, better paid, better clothed, and better lodged, and, above all, receiving 10, or perhaps 20 times the amount of parochial alms, but depraved by profligacy, soured by discontent, their numbers swelled by head-money and preference of the married to double the demand for their labour, their frugality and providence punished by the refusal of employment, and their industry ruined by the scale; looking with envy and dislike on their masters, and with hatred on the dispensers of relief!

And it is to be observed, that the independence of the Belgian peasantry does not arise from any unwillingness to accept of relief. Out of the 60 families forming the population of the village, 19 appear to have received it in 1832; and a fact is related by Count Arrivabene, which shows that indiscriminate alms are as much coveted there as with us. In 1830 (the year of the revolution), many persons applied for charity at the gate of the castle of Gaesbeck, the residence of Marquis Arconati, and something was given to each. The next year the applications were renewed: the sum given to each applicant was fixed at 1 d., and a single day in the week was fixed for their distribution. On the first of these days there were 50 applicants; the second, 60. The sum given was reduced to $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to a man, and a farthing to a child; but towards the end of the season the weekly assemblage had risen to 300 and 400 persons; they came from 10 and 12 miles distance, and it became necessary to abolish the allowance, trifling as the amount appears.

Poor Colonies.

The last portion of the Belgian institutions requiring notice are the poor colonies. We have already stated, that in 1823 the Belgian Société de Bienfaisance was established on the model and for the purposes of that already existing in Holland. In the beginning of that year the society purchased 522 bonniers (rather less than 1,300 statute acres), at Wortel, for the establishment of two colonies, called free, and divided them into 125 farms, of $3\frac{1}{2}$ bonniers (about $7\frac{1}{2}$ statute acres) each; 70 in the colony No. 1, and 55 in the colony No. 2. In 1823 they purchased 516 bonniers (about 1,280 acres), at Mexplus and Ryckevorsel, for the establishment of a mendicity colony. The first estate cost 623 l., the second 554 l., or less than 10 s. an acre, from which the quality of the land may be inferred.

Families placed in the free colonies were provided each with a house, barn and stable, a couple of cows, sometimes sheep, furniture, clothes and other stock, of the estimated value, including the land, of 1,600 florins, (133 l. 6 s. 8 d. sterling), which was charged against them as a debt to the society. They were bound to work at wages fixed by the society, to wear the uniform, and conform to the rules of the colony, and not to quit its precincts without leave. A portion of their wages was retained to repay the original advance made by the society; a further portion to pay for the necessaries furnished to them from time to time, and the food for their cattle; and a portion paid to them in a base money of the colony, to be expended in shops established by the society within its limits.

At first each family of colonists worked on its own farm, and managed its own cattle, but it was found that the land was uncultivated, and the cattle died for want of attention or food; and in 1828 the society took back the cattle, and employed all the colonists indiscriminately in the general cultivation of the land of the colony. "From this time," says M. Ducpétiaux, (p. 624), "the situation of the colonist who is called free, but is in fact bound to the society by restrictions which take from him almost the whole of his liberty for the present, and deprive him of all hope of future enfranchisement, has resembled that of the serfs of the middle ages or of Russia. It is worse than that of the Irish cottiers, who, if they are fed like him on potatoes and coarse bread, have at least freedom of action and the power of changing their residence."

Those colonists who had obtained a gold or silver medal, as a testimony that they could support themselves out of the produce of their own farms, were excepted from this arrangement, and allowed to retain the management of their farms, paying a rent to the society: but at the date of M. Ducpétiaux's communication, (10th December 1832), the greater part even of them had been forced to renounce this advantage, and to fall back into the situation of ordinary colonists. Four families were all that then remained in this state of comparative emancipation.

The inhabitants of the mendicity colony were from the first subjected to the regulations ultimately imposed on the free colonists, with the additional restriction of being required to live in common on rations afforded by the society; the only respect in which, according to M. Ducpétiaux, they now differ from the free colonists.

Count Arrivabene visited these colonies in 1829, and then predicted their failure. The three years which elapsed between his visit and the report of M. Ducpétiaux, were sufficient to prove the accuracy of this prophecy.

It appears from the statement of M. Ducpétiaux (p. 621), that on the 1st of July 1832, the debts due from the society amounted to 776,021 florins (about 64,661 l. sterling); the whole value of its property, to 536,250 florins (about 44,698 l. sterling); leaving a deficit of 239,771 florins, or nearly 20,000 l. sterling. And this deficit was likely to increase every year; the expenses, as they had done from the beginning, greatly exceeding the receipts, a fact which is shown by the following table :

* During the four last months.

† These sums do not include many of the expenses of administration. They consist simply of the sums remitted to the director for current expenses.

‡ These sums include not only every species of net profit, but in fact the value of the gross produce.

M. Ducpétiaux's statement may be compared with that of Captain Brandreth, who visited the colonies at about the same period. (pp. 19, 20.)

Among the colonists there were a few whose previous habits and natural dispositions disposed them to avail themselves, to the best of their ability, of the benevolent provisions thus offered for their relief, and who had worked industriously, and conducted themselves well during their residence in the colony. Their land was cultivated to the extent of their means; and their dwelling-houses had assumed an appearance of greater comfort, order and civilization than the rest. But these were too few in number, and the result too trifling to offer the stimulus of emulation to others.

Those farms that I examined, with the above exceptions, were not encouraging examples; there were few evidences of thrift and providence, the interior of the dwellings being, in point of comfort, little, if at all removed from the humblest cottage of the most straitened condition of labourers in this country.

A clause in the regulations allows certain of the colonists, whose good conduct and industry have obtained them the privilege, to barter with the neighbouring towns for any article they may want.

The nearest towns to the establishment, of any note, are Hoogstraten and Tournhout; but on inquiry I could not find that any intercourse was maintained with them; and the country round offered no evidences of the existence of a thriving community in its centre, exercising an influence on its traffic or occupations. In the winter, I should think the roads to the colonies scarcely practicable for any description of carriages.

From what I saw of the social condition of the colonists, I am disposed to insist much on the inexpediency of assembling, in an isolated position especially, a large community of paupers for this experiment.

Admitting the physical difficulties to have been much less than they are, and the prospect of pecuniary advantage much greater and more certain, the moral objections to the system would outweigh them. Without the example of the better conditions of society, there can be no hope of such a community gradually acquiring those qualities that would fit the members of it for a better condition. One or two families established in the neighbourhood of an orderly and industrious community, would find the stimulus of shame as well as emulation acting on their moral qualities and exertions; but in the present case, where all are in a condition of equal debasement, both of those powerful stimuli are wanting. The reports of the progress of the Dutch free colonies up to the year 1828, are certainly encouraging; and as the same system has been adopted in the free colonies of Belgium as in Holland, and the experiment in both cases tried on similar soils, they might lead to the inference that some peculiar cause has operated in favour of the Dutch colonies, or against those of Belgium. Not having had an opportunity of visiting the Dutch colonies, I cannot offer an opinion on the subject; but reasoning from what I personally witnessed, I should be disposed to think, that either some greater encouragement has been granted in Holland, or some improvement of the system adopted; or that the habits, dispositions and character of the Dutch fit them better for this experiment.

The same authorities that I have quoted in the case of these colonies, speak favourably also of the Belgian colonies up to the same period; and on the part of the latter experiment it may be asserted, that the unsettled state of the country since that period ought very much to qualify any condemnation of its principle. But notwithstanding this disadvantage (which is much less, I fear, than has been insisted on) there would still have remained evidences of the probable success of the experiment. Those evidences were not satisfactory to my mind; and I may further observe, that while the people in general recommended the colonies to foreigners as especially worthy of their notice, I do not remember meeting with one individual who could point out any specific results, and few who would distinctly assert that there was any increasing and permanent benefit to the community from them.

It is probable that unless some great change is made in the present system, the colonies will be ultimately abandoned, or merge into the establishments for compulsory labour; in other words, the society will become the farmers, and the present colonists merely agricultural labourers, differing only from the ordinary labourer, inasmuch as they will work under the penalty of being treated as vagabonds in case of contumacy.

The observations I have hitherto made apply only to the free colonies. In the mendicity, or compulsory colonies, the poor are assembled in large establishments, and cultivate the ground, either by task or day-labour, and attend the cattle, &c. under the direction of certain officers; it is, in fact, a species of agricultural workhouse.

The number of deaths is very striking. It amounts to 502 in six years, or $83\frac{1}{3}$ per year, the average population during that time having consisted of 708 persons; so that the average annual mortality was nearly 12 per cent. The proportion of desertions appears also to have progressively increased, until in the last year 66 deserted out of 542.

On the whole the Belgian poor colonies appear to be valuable only as a warning.

FRANCE.

FRANCE.

The information contained in this Appendix respecting the poor laws of France, and their administration, consists of a paper by M. Frederic de Chateaufieux, on the comparative state of the poor in France and England (p. 21); a report by Mr. Majendie, from Normandy (p. 34); and reports by his Majesty's Consuls from Havre (p. 179), Brest (p. 724), Nantes (p. 171), Bourdeaux (p. 229), Bayonne (p. 260), and Marseilles (p. 185).

We have already stated (pp. 49-50-51) the general outline of the French establishments for the relief of the poor, consisting of hospices for the impotent, hospitals for the sick, dépôts de mendicité for vagrants and beggars, (constituting the in-doors' relief), and bureaux de bienfaisance for the secours à domicile, or out-doors' out-doors' relief. But this comprehensive and discriminative system of public relief appears to have been carried into effect in France with a far less approach to completeness than in Belgium. The number of hospices and hospitals is indeed large in the towns, and not inconsiderable in the country ; but of the dépôts de mendicité, of which the decree of 1808 ordered the establishment, very few were in fact organized, and of those the greater part have since been suppressed ; and the bureaux de bienfaisance are almost confined to the towns. As more than three-fourths of the population of France is agricultural, only a small portion of that population therefore is capable of participating in public or organized relief. M. de Chateaueux estimates that portion, or, in other words, the population of the towns possessing institutions for the relief of the poor, at 3,500,000 persons, and the value of the public relief annually afforded at 1,800,000 l. sterling, (p. 25.) If this approximation can be relied on, the expenditure per head in that portion of the French population nearly equals the expenditure per head in England.

The following are the most material portions of the consular reports :—

HAVRE.

The provisions for the relief of the poor in Havre may be collected from the following statement of the principal regulations of the hospitals, the bureau de bienfaisance, and the depot de mendicité for the department, which is situated in Rouen. (pp. 182, 183, 184, 185, 186.)

Hospital Regulations at Havre.

Aged persons of 60, without distinction of sex, are admitted into the hospital upon a certificate of indigence delivered by the mayor of their district, and a ticket of admission signed by one of the directors of the establishment.

The sick are admitted if they can produce a certificate of indigence from the mayor or curate of their parish, and every care is taken of them at the expense of the establishment.

Orphans, foundlings, or deserted children are admitted, provided they are under 12 years ; they are then engaged as servants or apprentices ; but should they get out of employment from no fault of their own, they are at liberty to return until the age of 21 years.

Regulations of the Establishment of the Bureau de Bienfaisance, of Havre.

1. None are admitted but those whose poverty is well known, and who have lived 12 months in the town. The number of persons to be relieved is fixed by the bureau, whose names must be entered in a register, stating their age, date of application, place of residence, number and age of their children.

2. There is a second register for such poor who, having resided one year in Havre, shall apply after the closing of the register mentioned in the above article. This inscription is made in order of their dates, and the paupers carried upon it will only be entitled to relief in turn, and as vacancies occur in the first list, by departures, deaths or discharge.

3. No poor of either sex can receive relief more than 15 years old, and under 50. This exclusion is not applicable to widows with young children, or with four children under 15 years. In all cases they must produce a certificate that their children attend the free school, and are diligent.

4. The inscription in the register mentioned in No. 2 can only take place after inquiry has been made respecting the claimant, and it has been authorized by the bureau, which meets for this purpose once a month.

5. No children can be admitted to the assistance of the bureau, nor into the classes of instruction and work, above the age of 15, or without having been vaccinated.

6. If the number of children attending the classes and work shall be too many, either on account of the size of the building or the attention of the instructors, preference will be given to the children whose parents are already on their lists, and who are known to require assistance for the education of their children.

7. Every year, at the period of the first communion, a certain number of children shall be clothed. But to be admitted to this assistance they must produce a certificate from the clergyman appointed to give religious instruction, or from the nuns of the convent, that they have been attentive and are deserving. The boys are clothed in brown cloth ; the girls in coloured calico.

8. Every year the sum of 653 fr. (26 l.) shall be given to the clergymen of the town, in tickets of 1 fr. (9 d.), and 50 c. (4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.), to be distributed where they think proper, of which only those who are past 60 or under 15 can participate.

9. Each person shall receive 3 lbs. of bread, two in the same family 6 lbs. of ditto, three to five persons in the same family, whose children are under 15, 12 lbs. of ditto, for 15 days. The number admitted to this relief to be regulated each year, so that the distribution shall not exceed 3,000 lbs. a month. These distributions will take place to the most needy each Monday and Friday, from 9 to 12 o'clock, after which no more will be given.

10. In the distribution of clothing, which will be made once a year, each individual will only be clothed once in two years.

11. When the establishment is enabled to give woollen clothing, it will only be to such as are above 60 years, or to children under seven years, and those the most destitute; this relief once in two years.

12. If any one who receives bread and clothing from the bureau sells or pawns the same, he shall be struck off.

13. All clothes given by the establishment shall be marked, so that they may be known.

14. Assistance to lying-in-women, new-born children and sick, will be rendered at their houses; these who are not on the lists cannot be assisted until their case is examined; money will not be given to women in labour but when absolutely necessary; soup is distributed on Mondays and Wednesdays, from two to three o'clock.

15. There is attached to the establishment a doctor, at 400 fr. (16*l.*), and two assistants, at 500 fr. (20*l.*) each per year, who attend such as are named by the bureau; and also women in extraordinary cases of labour.

16. A midwife is attached, at 200 fr. (8*l.*) a year, who attends all women designated by the bureau.

17. In hard weather, if it should be thought expedient to make a subscription, the poor who are upon the second list (article 2) will be relieved from it.

Art. 1^{er}. TOUTES les portes qui communiquent à l'extérieur resteront constamment fermées.

3. Le portier ne laissera entrer ni sortir, pendant le jour, aucun individu sans un permis ou laissez passer du directeur.

6. Il est défendu expressément et sous peine de destitution aux portiers de l'extérieur et de l'intérieur, ainsi qu'à tous autres préposés du dépôt, de favoriser, ou de permettre aucune commission, communication ni correspondance des reclus avec l'extérieur; les lettres des mendiants ne seront reçues ou expédiées qu'après avoir été communiquées au directeur, afin de prévenir toute atteinte au bon ordre et à la sûreté de l'établissement.

Titre 2. Portier de l'Intérieur.

Art. 3. Afin d'empêcher toute communication des mendiants des deux sexes et d'âges differens, il lui est enjoint de tenir fermées, aux heures prescrites, les portes des dortoirs, des ateliers, des cours de récreation et autres lieux occupés par les détenus aussitôt qu'ils les ont évacués.

4. Il tiendra la main conjointement avec les servants et surveillants, à ce que les reclus soient exactement renfermés dans leurs appartements respectifs; il fera des rondes pendant le jour, pour s'assurer de l'exécution de cette partie essentielle du règlement.

Titre 3. Dortoirs.

Art. 1^{er}. La cloche annoncera le reveil à quatre heures du matin, depuis le 1^{er} Mars jusqu'au 30 Sept^{re}, et à six heures depuis le 1^{er} Oct^{re} jusqu'au 28 Fev^{er}. Aussitôt les surveillants et servants des dortoirs tiendront la main à ce que les reclus s'élèvent avec décence et tranquillité.

3. La prière finie à six heures en été et à sept heures dans l'hiver, les reclus se rendront accompagnés des surveillants dans leurs ateliers respectifs pour se livrer au travail; les dortoirs seront fermés après avoir été balayés et nettoyés par deux reclus désignés tour à tour dans chaque dortoir pour cet emploi.

4. A neuf heures du soir, en toute saison, la cloche sonnera le coucher. Les reclus se rendront aussitôt dans leurs dortoirs respectifs; le surveillant fera l'appel nominal, et l'on entendra avec recueillement la prière, qui ne durera qu'un quart d'heure; après la prière chacun se couchera tranquillement et le plus profond silence regnera dans les dortoirs.

Titre 6. Ateliers.

Art. 1^{er}. Les surveillans attachés aux ateliers veilleront à ce que chaque ouvrier s'occupe assidûment et ne perde pas son temps.

2. Les ateliers seront fermés pendant le travail, afin que les reclus n'en sortent que pour leurs besoins et aux heures indiquées.

3. Les reclus valides devront être imposés à une tâche de travail proportionnée à leur force et à leur aptitude; tout ouvrier qui ne fera pas sa tâche journalière ne sera payé qu'en raison de la quantité qu'il aura faite; il sera mis au pain sec et restera dans l'atelier pour travailler pendant les heures de récréation.

4. Tout ouvrier qui pendant trois jours consecutifs manquerait à faire sa tâche, restera durant les heures de repas et de récréation et pendant la nuit enfermé dans la loge de discipline, au pain sec de punition et à l'eau jusqu'à ce qu'il ait atteint la tâche qui lui est imposée.

5. Tout ouvrier qui par négligence ou par méchanceté gâterait les matières, outils, et ustensiles confiés à ses soins, payera les dommages sur son tiers de réserve et sera puni en outre selon l'exigence du cas.

6. Tout ouvrier soigneux de son travail et qui fera plus que sa tâche ordinaire aura à son profit, indépendamment du tiers de réserve, les deux tiers de l'excédent de sa tâche, à titre de récompense et d'encouragement.

7. Tout reclus qui aura encouru la peine d'emprisonnement, subira sur le produit, de son tiers de réserve, une retenue de cinq centimes pour chaque jour de prison.

Le montant de ces retenus joint au produit des autres rétributions de l'oratoire, amendes, etc. formera un fonds de réserve qui sera reparté deux fois en forme de prime d'encouragement, aux reclus qui par leur bonne conduite et leur travail se seront fait distinguer parmi leurs camarades.

Titre 7. Oratoire.

Art. 1^{er}. Conformément au règlement général, il y aura instruction de religion et de morale deux fois par semaine dans la chapelle les Jeudis et Dimanches, à sept heures du soir.

Tout les reclus valides sont tenus d'y assister dans le silence et le recueillement, sous l'inspection de leurs surveillans respectifs.

Les Dimanches et jours de fête maintenus par le concordat, tous les reclus et les employés du dépôt assisteront à la messe, qui se dira à huit heures et demi du matin, et aux vêpres, qui se diront à une heure et demi après midi.

2. Indépendamment de ces exercices religieux il y aura, aux époques déterminées par l'autorité ecclésiastique, une instruction particulière pour les enfans destinés à faire leur première communion; cette instruction durera deux mois.

7. En cas d'infraction au présent règlement il en sera référé par les surveillans et préposés à Monsieur le Directeur du dépôt, qui prononcera suivant les cas les peines encourues par les reclus.

Mr. Perrier's report from Brest, and Mr. Newman's from Nantes, give a very interesting account of the state of Brittany. We will begin by Mr. Perrier's, as the more general view. (pp. 728, 729.)

BRITTANY.

It is extremely difficult to obtain any statistical information in Brittany, all inquiries being received with distrust, not only by the authorities, but also by the inhabitants. This has been the principal cause of my delay in replying to the series of questions. The answers, imperfect as they may appear, are the result of patient and persevering inquiry.

The state of society in Brittany, and its institutions, differ so widely from those of any other civilized country, that few of the questions are applicable. In order, therefore, to convey the information which they are intended to elicit, it is necessary to enter into a description of the population, which I shall endeavour to do as briefly as possible.

The population of Brittany may be classed under the following heads:

Old noblesse, possessing a portion of the land.

Proprietors, retired merchants and others, who have vested their money in landed property.

Peasants, owners of the ground they till.

Farmers.

Daily labourers and beggars.

The abolition of the right of primogeniture causes a daily diminution of the two first classes. As property, at the demise of the owner, must be divided equally amongst his children, who can seldom agree about the territorial division, it is put up for sale, purchased by speculators, and resold in small lots to suit the peasantry. Farmers having amassed sufficient to pay a part, generally one half, of the purchase-money of a lot, buy it, giving a mortgage at five or six per cent. for the remainder. Thus petty proprietors increase, and large proprietors and farmers decrease.

A man, industrious enough to work all the year, can easily get a farm.

Brittany.

Farms are small. Their average size in Lower Brittany does not exceed 14 acres. Some are so small as two acres, and there are many of from four to eight. The largest in the neighbourhood of Brest is 36 acres. The average rate of rent is 1 l. 5 s. per acre for good land, and 8 s. for poor land (partly under broom and furze).

The farmers are very poor, and live miserably; yet, their wants being few and easily satisfied, they are comparatively happy. Their food consists of barley bread, butter, buck wheat (made into puddings, porridge and cakes). Soup, composed of cabbage water, a little grease or butter and salt poured on bread. Potatoes; meat twice a week (always salt pork.)

A family of 12, including servants and children, consumes annually about 700 lbs. of pork and 100 lbs. of cow beef; the latter only on festivals.

The class of daily labourers can only be said to exist in towns. In the country they are almost unknown.

The inmates of each farm, consisting of the farmer's family, and one, two, or three males, and as many female servants (according to the size of the farm), paid annually, and who live with the family, suffice for the general work. At harvest some additional hands are employed. These are generally people who work two or three months in the year, and beg during the remainder. Daily labourers and beggars may, therefore, in the country, be classed under the same head.

Farmers' servants are orphans or children of unfortunate farmers.

The conditions of the poorer farmers, daily labourers and beggars, are so near akin, that the passage from one state to another is very frequent.

Mendicity is not considered disgraceful in Brittany. Farmers allow their children to beg along the roads. On saints' days, especially the festivals of celebrated saints, whose shrines attract numerous votaries (all of whom give something, be it ever so little, to the poor), the aged, infirm and children of poor farmers and labourers, turn out. Some small hamlets are even totally abandoned by their inhabitants for two or three days. All attend the festival, to beg.

The Bretons are hospitable. Charity and hospitality are considered religious duties. Food and shelter for a night are never refused.

Several attempts to suppress mendicity have been unsuccessful. District asylums were established. No sooner were they filled than the vacancies in the beggar stands were immediately replenished by fresh subjects from the country; it being a general feeling, that it is much easier and more comfortable to live by alms than by labour.

In towns where the police is well regulated, the only mendicants permitted to sojourn are paupers belonging to the parish. They are known by a tin badge, for which they pay at the police office.

No such thing is known as a legal claim for assistance from public or private charities.

In towns, destitute workmen or other persons in distress must be authorized by the municipality previous to soliciting public or private assistance. To this effect, the pauper makes known his case to the commissary of police of the quarter he inhabits, who makes inquiry among the neighbours. Should the destitute case of the applicant be established, the mayor grants him a certificate of indigence, which authorizes him to apply for relief to the public institutions, and to solicit private charity. It also exempts him (or rather causes his exemption) from the payment of taxes.

The principal cause of misery is inebriety; its frequency among the lower orders keeps them in poverty. The "cabaret" (wine and brandy shop) absorbs a great portion of their earnings. This vice is not confined to men; the women partake of it. It has decreased within the last five or six years, but is still considerable.

We now proceed to give some extracts from the more detailed report of Mr. Newman, who writes, it must be recollected, from Nantes. (pp. 171, 172, 173, 174, 178, 175, 176, 177.

LOIRE INFÉRIEURE.

NANTES.

Vagrants.

In the department Loire Inférieure there is no asylum for mendicants; but Nantes has a species of workhouse, "St. Joseph's House," supported entirely by private subscriptions. To this house the tribunals often send vagabonds, in virtue of the 274th article of the Penal Code, although the directors of the establishment have contested, and still contest, the right assumed by the judges to do so; and they never receive any person so sent as a criminal to be detained a certain number of days at labour as if in a prison, but merely give him a refuge as an act of charity, and liberty to leave the place, if he likes to go before the time expires. The number of vagrants that formerly infested Nantes (strangers to the department as well as to the city) have decreased to about a tenth part since begging in the streets was prohibited, and the paupers sent to this establishment.

The hospitals of Nantes receive all workmen, travellers, and needy strangers, that fall sick in the city (if foreigners, at the charge to their consuls of 1 s. 3 d. sterling per day for men, and 10 d. for women.) If a man, (and his family also,) being destitute, wishes to return to his native place, and has not rendered himself liable to be committed as a vagrant, the préfet has the power to give a passport to him for that place; on the production of which at the mairie of the commune from which he sets out he receives from the public funds of the department three halfpence per league for the distance from thence to the next place he he is to be relieved at, and so on to the end of his journey, each place he has to stop at being set down on his passport; if he deviates from the route designated, he is arrested as a vagabond.

There is in France throughout the whole country a general union for each of several trades, the carpenters, bakers, masons, tailors, &c. In each city or town of consequence, each society has a member who is called "the mother," who receives the weekly contributions of those who reside in that place, affords relief to all of its members passing through it, and is obliged to procure work for the applicant, or support him at a fixed rate, established by their bye-laws, until a situation be provided for him there or elsewhere. Those unions sometimes assume a very dangerous power, by compelling masters to hire all their members that are without work, before they engage one man who does not belong to them.

Destitute Able-bodied.

In times of political commotion, of unforeseen events, of rigorous seasons, when the usual courses of labour are stopped, the civil administrations create temporary workshops, furnish tools, &c., to the labourers, and enter into contracts for repairs to the streets, quays, bridges, roads, &c., from which a large city, as well as the country parishes, can always draw some advantages for the money so distributed to employ those persons who would otherwise be supported without work by the same funds. The money required on those occasions is furnished by the treasury of the city or commune, assisted by private subscriptions from nearly all persons in easy circumstances. The want of regular or parish workhouses for labourers, unemployed, is in some measure supplied by private charities, for a great number of wealthy families, and others of the middling class, give employment to old men, women and children, in spinning, and in weaving of coarse linen, at prices far beyond those that the articles can be purchased at in the shops; but this plan is adopted to prevent a disposition to idleness, although at a greater sacrifice, perhaps, than would be made by most of the promoters of it, in a public subscription.

The bureau de bienfaisance distributes annually about 80,000 fr.; the chief part, or very nearly the whole, to poor families at their homes, in clothes, food, fuel, and sometimes money; but of the latter as little as possible. Les dames de charité (ladies of the first families, who are appointed annually to visit and give relief to the poor, each having a fixed district) distribute about three-fourths of that sum, which would be insufficient for the indigent if it were not assisted by distributions made by the priests of the different parishes and other persons employed to do so by private families, who give their alms in that manner, and not at their own residences. It is generally supposed that, in the whole, not less than 250,000 fr. are so distributed annually in the city of Nantes. In making this distribution care is always taken to prefer invalids to those in health.

Impotent through Age.

In the city of Nantes there is a general hospital, called the "Sanitat," for the reception of the old and impotent; at present it contains about 800; it answers to an English workhouse; the inmates are lodged, fed, clothed, and are taken care of in every way: they are employed about trifling work, but the average gain by it does not exceed 20 fr. per annum for each. The average cost appears to be about 11 to 12 sous per day for each person. The establishment of St. Joseph's, already alluded to, is, in fact, a sort of assistant to the Sanitat (although supported by private charity) for the 100 to 120 old people it contains. The Sanitat has a ward for dangerous as well as ordinary lunatics; is under the same board and direction as the Hôtel Dieu (the general hospital for the sick); but each is supported by its own funds, arising from bequests and donations from private persons, and from the city funds; yet if either hospital should require any assistance, the money wanted would be voted by the city treasury.

The general council for the department votes about 1,200 to 1,250 fr. annually to the Sanitat from the departmental funds.

Sick.

Nantes has a general hospital (Hôtel Dieu) for the sick, containing 600 beds, 300 of which are reserved for the indigent of the city. The expense of this establishment is about a franc to 25 sous per day to each person. The military are received at 20 sous per man per day, which is paid by the government. It is supported by its own funds, arising from bequests and donations, and grants made from time to time by the city; is under the same board and direction as the Sanitat. If a poor person becomes sick in the country, he is either relieved by the curé of the parish or by some of the more wealthy neighbours, or he comes into Nantes and resides there for a week or ten days before he makes an application to the mayor to be admitted into the hospital; he is then sent there as an inhabitant of the city. The authorities in the country have not the right to send a patient to the Hôtel Dieu, yet a great number arrive at the hospital, sent by country practitioners, who have not the skill, or perhaps the leisure or inclination, to attend to them; and they are always received, if it be possible to take them in. The students at the hospital are ever ready to admit any difficult cases or fractures from the country, for their own improvement.

There are also hospitals for the sick at the following places in the Loire Inférieure: Ancenis, for the town and commune; Chateaubriand, Paimbœuf, Savenay and Clisson, for the towns only.

FRANCE.

LOIRE

Nantes.

Besides the succour afforded to the poor at their homes by the bureau de bienfaisance, there are three dispensaries supported by that establishment, for administering relief to the sick, who are attended at their homes, if necessary, by the nuns of St. Vincent de Paule, 12 or 14 of whom are kept in the pay of, and are wholly supported by the bureau. They carry to them soup and other victuals, remedies, &c., and lend them linen and clothes, if wanted. There are a number of young men, who are either studying, or have just completed their study of medicine, who are anxious to give their assistance gratis, and who are in constant attendance on those who are receiving relief from the dispensaries. It is impossible to state the extent to which such relief is given. The nuns are paid by the bureau de bienfaisance, which also pays for the medicines, &c. they distribute; but the sum that is thus expended bears but a small proportion to the amount that is distributed by the hands of those sisters, who, from the accurate knowledge they possess of the real situation and condition of each person they visit, are employed by numerous wealthy persons to distribute privately such charities as they feel disposed to give; and can thus be well applied in providing those little comforts for the invalids, as cannot be sent from the bureau to all those who require them, although the funds are increased from time to time by the proceeds of representations at the theatre, public concerts, &c. given for that purpose.

Independent of the foregoing, there are several tradesmen's societies on the plan of benefit societies in England, the members of which pay five or six sous per week, and receive, in case of sickness, all necessary assistance in medicines, &c., besides an indemnity of a franc to a franc and a half per day during the time they are unable to work.

Orphans, Foundlings or Deserted Children.

The law requires an establishment (a tour) in each department, for the secret reception of children. Every arrival is particularly noted and described in a register kept for that purpose, that the infant may be recognised if it should be claimed. The children, after having received all necessary assistance and baptism, are confided to women in the country, (a regulation of this department only), to dry-nurse them, (au biberon); they are paid eight francs per month for the first year, seven for the second and third, six until the ninth year, and four francs per month from that time until the child is 12 years old; when the nurse who has taken care of one from its birth to that age, receives a present of 50 fr. for her attention. A basket of requisite linen is given with the child, and a new suit of clothes annually for seven years. These regulations are observed for orphans and foundlings. The registers for the last 20 years give an average of 360 to 370 admissions annually; more than one half of them die under one year old; therefore, with the deaths at other ages, and the claims that are made for some of them before they attain 12 years, the establishment has seldom at its charge more than from 1,200 to 1,300, of all ages from 0 to 12.

The parents being unknown when they place their infants in the "tour," cannot be traced afterwards, unless they acknowledge themselves; they are, however, as has been observed before, liable for the expenses of their offspring; and whenever they are discovered, whether by claiming their children or otherwise, the right to make them repay the costs they have occasioned is always maintained, and they are compelled to pay the whole, or as much as their finances will admit of.

Deserted children of the city, or the children of poor persons, who cannot support them, are received and treated in a similar manner, without being placed in the "tour;" they are admitted according to the state of the finances appropriated to such branch of the establishment, which in general permits from 80 to 100 to be on it. Certificates are required that the parents are dead, the child abandoned, or that the mother is totally unable to support it, or that she has a number of young children. Independent of the 1,400 children thus received by the Hôtel Dieu, the bureau de bienfaisance supports 200 legitimate children, and the société maternelle from 60 to 80, until they attain the age of 18 years.

The number of deaths in 1832, was 11,999; the number under one year old, 1,970, or one in $6\frac{12}{107}$. Chateaufort states, for all France, 33 deaths, under one year old, out of every hundred births, which is nearly double the number of deaths of that description for this department; but the mortality is much greater amongst the orphans, foundlings and deserted children of this city received at the hospital. An account, made up to the year 1828, gave an average of 52 deaths, under one year old, of every hundred children received there; and since that date it has increased considerably.

There are women in the city who make it their business to place infants in the "tour," and who afterwards attend the delivery of them to the country nurses, and thus, knowing where certain children are placed, give notice to the parents, who can visit them without being discovered. Children thus recognised are frequently demanded by their parents for servants, in the ordinary way; and by this plan they screen themselves from the payment of the child's support.

Effects of these

There can be no doubt that the prospect of an asylum for the indigent creates amongst the working class a disposition to idleness and debauchery, whilst at the same time there are those who look down with disgust on their miserable brothers who are compelled to accept a public charitable support; and the shame which they consider attaches to a man who does it stimulates them to avoid the doors of an hospital, by industry and sobriety. The number of these however is very small, whilst the applications for admittance to the Sanitat and to St. Joseph's are so very numerous, so far beyond the accommodation that can be granted, that after the name of an applicant is registered he has (frequently) to wait 18 to 24 months for his turn. For the sick, however, at the Hôtel Dieu it is not so; for arrangements are made that no delay takes place with any case requiring immediate relief or treatment.

The shades between the healthy labourers of the lowest class that support themselves and those who obtain relief from charitable institutions, are so slight, that it is almost impossible to state the difference in their conditions. No man has a legal claim upon any of the charities; in the distribution of which, however, there is but one fixed rule that governs the distributors, and that is, to compel the applicants for relief to work to their utmost power, and to give such relief only in each individual case as they suppose to be necessary with the wages he can or ought to earn, according to the demand for labourers at the time.

According to the price of lodgings, victuals and clothing in Nantes, a steady labourer at the highest rate of his wages, 1 s. 3 d. per day, supposing he had 300 days' employment in the year, is considered to be able to support a wife and three young children; if he has a larger family, is out of employ, or is at a lower rate of wages, without his wife and children being able to gain a little, he is regarded as indigent, and in need of succour. A labourer, his wife, and three children consume in the day from 8 to 10 lbs. of bread, which is their chief food, and will cost him 240 fr.; his cabbages and other vegetables, butter or fat for his soup, 90 fr.; his room, 50 fr.; leaving 70 fr. or 2 l. 18 s. 4 d. for clothes, fuel, &c.; which make up the sum of his wages for 300 days at 1 ½ fr., or 1 s. 3 d. per day. The wife in general adds a little to the husband's earnings by spinning, and sometimes weaving; but it is not much when the family is young.

To prevent the increase and lessen the present state of disorder into which the greater part of the labouring class and mechanics of Nantes has fallen, a number of master tradesmen and proprietors of factories will not employ those men who do not agree to allow a certain sum weekly to be retained from their wages for the use of the wife and family. The example spreads, and will no doubt become more general; but this circumstance shows forth, in strong colours, the immoral state of the working class in France.

There are no cottages for labourers, as are seen in England: the chief part of the work on farms in this part of France is done by servants in the house of the farmer, or by married labourers, to whom an acre or two, sometimes as high as 10, according to the quality, is fenced off from the estate for the use of the man and his family; for which he has to give a certain number of days' work. If such patch of land requires to be ploughed, the farmer does it for him for an additional number of days' work. Besides those, there are an immense number of little proprietors, having from an acre and a half to 10 or 15 acres; and they give their labour also to the farmers of larger estates, receiving in return either assistance with oxen, carts, ploughs, &c., or an equivalent in some produce which they do not raise on their own land. Very little money, if any, passes between them. These little properties have sprung up from labourers and others fencing in small patches of commons or waste lands. Nearly all the vineyards in the Loire Inférieure are cultivated by labourers, who have a small spot of ground partitioned off from the main estate; it is for married men only that ground is so divided; the single men live with their families in the villages, or in public-houses, but generally in the latter. In regard to these questions, it must be observed that almost every farmer who hires an estate takes such a one as will just sustain his family, without the aid, or with the assistance only of a man or a man and woman servants, and that therefore very few daily labourers find employment. Few estates run to 200 acres, and, if so large, a daily labourer is only hired during harvest, so wretchedly is the husbandry of the country managed.

The cottages or houses in villages for labourers are in general the property of the owners of the large estates in the neighbourhood, as well as those that are built on the patches of land for the use of those who are married; some of the latter, however, are built at the joint expense of the farmer and labourer. A cottage or cottages in a detached place from a village, or a house in such a situation, with a little plot of ground for a garden for each apartment, lets for about 20 to 30 francs a year per room, whether the building consists of one or of four rooms. In the villages the rent is a little higher, from 30 to 50, and sometimes as high as 80, if the garden be large to a cottage with only one room. These buildings are so seldom on sale, that the price cannot be stated with accuracy.

BOURDEAUX. (p. 229, 230, 231, 232, 233. 235.)

THERE are no houses of industry in this department for the destitute able-bodied, except that known as the Depôt de Mendicité.

This institution was first established in the year 1827, with a view to suppress the great number of professed beggars who infested the streets and public walks, taking advantage of any defect of conformation, &c. to attract the notice of passengers. By law all persons found begging in the streets are liable to be taken up and imprisoned; but instead of imprisonment, those arrested are conveyed to the Depôt de Mendicité, where, if able, they are made to work. The good effects of this institution are visible; for instead of the number of professed beggars amounting to 800, which it did before the institution of the establishment, it does not now amount to above 150 or 200.

This institution is supported by private contribution. The King and the town contribute a certain portion to make up what may be wanting. The average number of the population of the dépôt amounts to 350 souls.

Generally speaking, owing to the want of population, employment is to be found in commerce, trade or agriculture. The high price of wages in the towns and the country proves that work is always to be found.

When any unforeseen circumstances have arisen to interrupt the common order of things, the local authorities have come to the assistance of the population, by giving work to those out of employment. Public subscriptions are also resorted to on these occasions.

All indigent families, and in which there are those capable of working, but who are not able to obtain it, or whose numbers are so great that all cannot be subsisted, are relieved by the Bureaux de Charité.

The same relief is given to those who, having a habitation, are unable of themselves, through age or infirmity, to support themselves.

The mode of obtaining this relief is by petition, signed by some credible person, and attested by the priest or protestant clergyman. It is proportioned to the number of the family, and to the number of those able to work, and whose wages go to the maintenance of the family. The relief consists in bread, soup, wood for fuel, and sometimes, though rarely, blankets and woollen clothing; medicines for the sick, and broth.

Generally speaking, these distributions of food would be insufficient; but most indigent families are assisted by private persons, so that, on the whole, they have wherewithal to sustain life.

The annual distribution à domicile (domiciliary relief) amounts to the sum of 100,000 francs, (4,000*l.*)

3,520 families are relieved. The number of impotent in these families, father and mother included, though able to work, amounts to 9,634, or less than a franc per head per month.

It is in proportion to these numbers that the relief is given, but it is greater in winter than the other parts of the year.

As to the medicines and broth, whenever there are sick in these families a sufficiency is given. Physicians are attached to each auxiliary bureau of every district, who visit the sick, prescribe the remedies, &c., all of which are distributed by the Sœurs de Charité (Sisters of Charity, an order of nuns who devote themselves to the care of the poor and sick, and who undertake, gratuitously, the elementary education of their children). It is a most respectable and praiseworthy institution.

The same Sisters receive in their houses the little girls of these families who are old enough to learn to read. Books are supplied by the instructors.

In extraordinary cases, recourse is had to subscriptions and collections, which increase the means of the Bureaux de Charité; so that during long and hard winters, more clothing, &c. is distributed. It seldom happens that money is given.

There are, however, no positive regulations on these points. The whole is in the hands of the directors of this establishment. A responsible receiver is attached to it, whose accounts are submitted to the examination of the Cour des Comptes (audit-office). Thus, though the distributions are left to the judgment of the directors, they are subjected to control.

The above details relate to the city of Bordeaux. There are, however, proportionate institutions in most of the larger towns of the department, but in the poorer parishes and rural districts the Bureaux de Charité are merely nominal. These parishes being without a revenue, are unable to assist their poor, who subsist on the alms they may receive at the different dwelling-houses, and who when ill, if possible, come to the nearest hospital, generally to that of Bordeaux.

In this department there are no schools in which indigent children are received to be fed and clothed gratuitously, but there are those in which they receive a certain degree of instruction.

For Boys.—The institution of Frères des Ecoles Chrétiennes (Brothers of the Christian Schools), and two Lancastrian schools, which have been lately instituted.

For Girls.—A Lancastrian school, a few boarding schools, in which a certain number of indigent girls are taught gratuitously; and also the Sisters of Charity attached to the administration of the Bureaux de Charité.

The Ecoles Chrétiennes are at the charge of the town. The sum appropriated to those establishments amounts annually to about 14,000 francs (560*l.*). Admissions are granted by the town. The number of children instructed in reading, writing and a little arithmetic, amounts to about 1,800 for the town. At the Lancastrian school, the instruction is on a more extended scale. Grammar, drawing and surveying are taught, in addition to what is taught at the Ecoles Chrétiennes.

There are at present in these latter schools 300 boys and 150 girls in all.

The department pays the expenses of these schools.

The girls received in the private boarding schools, where they learn to read, to write and to sew, amount to the number of about 600. This is entirely a private act of charity.

The number of girls received by the Sisters of Charity amounts to about 900.

There

There has also been established within the last year a model infant school, founded by private subscriptions, for the children of labourers and journeymen artisans. At present, however, it is so little known, that it is of very little importance.

Impotent through Age.

Bordeaux is the only town of the department which possesses any establishments of this kind, viz. the Hospital of Incurables (Hospice des Incurables), and that of the old people (Hospice des Vieillards).

These two establishments support 300 old people. This number falls very short of that which the population requires. The requisite qualifications for admission are, to have passed the age of 60, and to prove that the candidate has no means of subsistence.

It may be added, that at Bordeaux the number of old people who are candidates for admittance to these hospitals amounts to 300, and that on an average a vacancy occurs for each at the end of four years at the Hospital des Incurables, and two years at the Hospice des Vieillards, and that all these claimants find either in their families the Secours à Domicile, or private charity, means of subsistence.

Sick.

The department possesses, for the reception of the sick, a small hospital at Bazas; one at St. Macaire, and one at La Réole; a more extensive one at Blaye and Libourne, and the great hospital at Bordeaux.

The great hospital of Bordeaux contains always from 600 to 650 sick. The daily admittances average 30; the discharges, 28, and the deaths two.

No distinction is made as to country, &c., either in admittance, treatment or discharge.

The inmates of this hospital are generally composed of inhabitants of the town, who are too poor to be treated at home, or who prefer the care that is taken of them there to that which they would experience at home; of workmen, &c. from the neighbouring departments employed in the town, and who have nowhere else to go to; of peasants, even in easy circumstances, who, from illness or accidents, have not the same resources at home.

Bordeaux possesses a Hospice de la Maternité, or Lying-in Hospital, and a society, founded by private benefactions, for the same purpose.

The Lying-in Hospital is an asylum in which any woman who presents herself in the ninth month of her pregnancy, whatever may be her state, her country or condition, is admitted without difficulty, without question or inquiry, under the name she pleases, and in such a manner, that the fear of being known or discovered may not prevent those who wish to remain unknown from benefiting by the institution.

Women admitted at the ninth month remain in the establishment till they have completely recovered their lying-in. (p. 231.)

The number of those women, either lying-in or subsisted in the hospital, varies from 35 to 60, and their stay is about 30 days. The births amount annually from 400 to 450; upon this number, 30 or 40 at most are kept and suckled by their mothers; the rest are abandoned and sent to the Foundling Hospital.

Among these inmates, about one-fifth is composed of married women, who have no means of being confined at home; two-fifths of young girls of the town, chiefly servants; the rest of peasants, who leave their homes in order not to be discovered.

Illegitimate children deserted by their parents, and which are deposited at the Foundling Hospital, are clothed and nourished by women in the institution, till a nurse out of it can be procured.

These children, after being suckled, remain with their nurses till the age of 12 years. At this age, if the individuals who have brought them up do not wish to keep them gratuitously till their majority and give them a trade, they return to the hospital, and they then cease to be at the charge of the special funds. The establishment itself provides for their expenses; and until they can be placed as apprentices, they receive, in the Bordeaux hospital, the rudiments of reading and writing, and they are taught some trade.

Once placed as apprentices, they remain with the master till the age of 21, when they are to shift for themselves.

Those that cannot be placed, or are infirm, remain in the hospital, and form a sort of permanent population there.

Children whose parents are known, and who are living, but have either disappeared or are confined, are received in the same way as foundlings, the mode of admission differing only. This must be granted by the prefect after an inquest. For the remainder, they enjoy the same advantages as the foundlings.

As to orphans, they are also admitted into the Foundling Hospital, upon the order of the administrative commission, after information as to the state of the family. At Bordeaux the orphans of the town alone are received. Those of the rest of the department remain at the charge of their parishes, and generally live by alms. The orphans received into the hospital enjoy the same privileges as the foundlings and deserted children.

The annual exposal of children amounts at Bordeaux to 900, comprising all those abandoned done at the Lying-in Hospital, those of the town, and those sent from various parts of the department, as well as from the neighbouring departments.

From 10 to 15 deserted children, and the same number of orphans, are annually admitted.

The population of the hospital amounts generally to 40 new-born infants, waiting to be sent to nurse; 150 children beginning their apprenticeships, and waiting to be placed; about 150 infirm of all ages forming the permanent part of the population.

The number of children from the age of one month to that of 12 years, amounts to 3,600; and that of children above 12 and below 21 apprenticed out, amounts to about 1,500.

The expenditure of the hospital, comprising the clothing for the children brought up out of the establishment, amounts to 110,000 francs per annum (4,400*l.*) That for the nurses or board in the country, to 240,000 francs (9,600*l.*), of which 104,000 fr. (4,160*l.*) is given by the government upon the common departmental fund.

27,000 fr. (1,080*l.*) taken from the revenue of the town of Bordeaux.

49,000 fr. (1,960*l.*) on the revenue of the other parishes of the department.

Owing to the extreme carelessness and entire absence of frugality on the part of the peasantry and other classes of labourers, it is impossible to give an accurate account of their expenditure. They live entirely from hand to mouth; and nine-tenths are in debt for the common necessities of life. The men are addicted to gambling, and the women spend the greater part of what they earn in useless articles of dress. As to the expenditure for schooling and religious teaching, no provision is thought of.

BASSES PYRENEES.

BAYONNE.

On recurring to the statistical statements respecting this department, it will be seen that it supports its population with a smaller number of deaths, births and marriages than any other extensive district in Europe. Compared with the countries which have been lately considered, its provisions for public charity are trifling, as will appear by the following extracts from Mr. Harvey's report (p. 260, 261, 262.)

Vagrants.

Mendicity, under the head of vagrancy, is not prevalent in the department of the Lower Pyrenees; the relief afforded to French subjects passing through the department, seeking work (which seldom occurs), or returning to their native places, is at the rate of three sols per league, or $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per mile; but this relief is more frequently granted to foreigners in distress, and is paid by the several mayors at certain stations or towns on their route. There is no public relief granted to vagrants living by begging.

Destitute Able-bodied.

There are no public or private establishments or relief afforded to the destitute able-bodied or their families; but this description of pauper is seldom or ever to be met with in this department.

Impotent through Age.

There are no public or religious institutions or regulations for the relief of the poor in general; they subsist by begging; and when no longer able to do so, they receive a trifling relief from "The Ladies of Charity," (Dames de la Charité), who make quarterly collections from the respectable inhabitants, which these ladies distribute in food, fuel or money, to the pauvres honteux, or infirm, as the case may be; but this private voluntary subscription is very inadequate.

The inhabitants of Bayonne (and it is hoped and expected that the example will be followed in other places) are now occupied in forming, by voluntary annual subscriptions, an establishment for the relief of the poor; a commission of gentlemen has been appointed, and there is every prospect that this charitable undertaking will be crowned with success.

Sick.

In the towns there are public hospitals for the sick and wounded; but when convalescent, they are obliged immediately to quit the hospital, destitute or not.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

Illegitimate children (infants only) are received into the hospitals established by the famous St. Vincent de Paul, but where the parents have no communication with or control over them; these children are placed out to nurse in the country at about 5*s.* a month, and are are afterwards provided for by the hospital, if in the course of seven years they are not claimed by the parents.

When not deposited in the hospitals, the mothers have invariably been found to bestow upon their infants the most scrupulous care and attention, the natural consequence of having had the firmness and humanity not to abandon their offspring, notwithstanding the facility of concealment held out to them by the hospital.

Orphans or Deserted Children.

There are no public or private institutions or regulations for orphans.

Deserted Children.—There are no public or private regulations or institutions under this head; but I have not heard of a case in question in this department.

Cripples, Deaf and Dumb, and Blind.

Cripples.—Obliged to beg if destitute, there being no public or private institutions or regulations for cripples.

The deaf and dumb, if poor and destitute, are obliged to beg; there are excellent establishments in the large towns for their instruction, for those who have the means.

Blind.—Obliged to beg, there are no public or private institutions for them.

Idiots and Lunatics.

There are no public or private institutions for idiots.

There is an institution (Maison de Force) for the admission of lunatics at the Chef Lieu of the department only (at Pau).

The questions relative to hired country labourers are not altogether applicable to this department, which is invariably divided into small farms, not exceeding from 20 to 30 English acres each, the families on each farm sufficing for the cultivation thereof, the proprietors or the farmers being themselves the labourers of the soil, the neighbours assisting each other in time of harvest; consequently it seldom occurs that a hired labourer is called in; but when employed they are paid at the rate of about 1 s. per diem, without food. The women, and the children from the age of 10 years, constantly work on the land. The children generally receive a primary education at the village day-schools, where there is always a schoolmaster or mistress appointed by the authorities; price of education, 2 francs (about 1 s. 7 d.) per month. At these schools the children are prepared for their first communion; they learn reading, writing and calculation. The food of the proprietor or farmer labourer chiefly consists in vegetable soups, potatoes, salt fish, pork, bacon, &c., and seldom or ever butcher's meat, and invariably Indian corn bread, homebaked. These persons (who are generally the owners of the soil) procure for themselves a comfortable subsistence, but they are seldom able to lay by anything. The equal division of the land prevents in a great measure mendicity. The families on each farm in the whole department consist on an average of about five persons.

It is calculated that persons attain a more advanced age in this department than in any other in France.

BOUCHES DU RHONE.

MARSEILLES.

Vagrants.

It has been calculated that the average number of beggars in this department (the Mouths of the Rhone) is 1,060, whereof 900 are natives and 105 strangers, besides 240 who traverse the department. The calculation having been made some years ago, the numbers may have increased with the population, which was then 313,000, and is now 359,000.

The only relief granted to the poor travelling is by giving them a "passport d'indigent," furnished by the local authorities, in which their exact route is designated, and not to be deviated from; they receive, as they pass through each commune, three sous for every league of distance, equal to a halfpenny per mile, and lodging for the night: beggars have no relief but private charity.

Destitute Able-bodied.

The principal establishment at Marseilles for their relief is the bureau de bienfaisance, whose revenues, arising partly from the remnant property of some charitable institutions existing before the Revolution, partly from an annual allowance granted by the budget of the commune, partly by a tax on theatrical admissions, and from private subscriptions, amount altogether to about 140,000 francs, or 5,600 l., of which the major part is distributed in money to the "pauvres honteux" (those who have seen better days), and in providing necessaries and medical assistance to the poor in general, by five directors, and at their sole discretion. Similar establishments exist in the other arrondissements of this department, but, with the exception of Aix, with very small means, principally dependent on the communal budgets, which in many cases furnish nothing. I am informed that in this commune, with a population of 140,000 inhabitants, the bureau relieves, more or less, 800 families of "pauvres honteux," and 4,000 families of indigent poor. There is also at Marseilles a société de bienfaisance, supported principally by private charity, whose chief object is the establishment of soup kitchens and dispensaries for the relief of the poor, and a school for the education of their children from four to nine years of age. No relief is ever given in money. Their annual revenue is about 40,000 francs, or 1,600 £.; and in times of great distress the local administration increases its funds, and supplies the poor with soup through its means.

The number of children received in the school above mentioned is about 200: they receive two meals a day and sleep at home; they are taught various trades, and apprenticed at the expense of the commune; there are also several gratuitous day-schools for children of the age of seven years and upwards, and who bring their own food.

Impotent through Age.

The only public establishment for the reception of this class is that called "La Charité," in which those are admitted who have attained the age of 70, and none before; the number of those individuals at present is about 350; they are there boarded, clothed and fed.

Sick.

There are no district institutions for the reception of the sick, except the general hospitals. The average number of sick in the hospital of Marseilles may be about 450.

Children.

One large branch of the administration of hospitals of Marseilles is "La Charité," which receives, as before mentioned, old men, and also all children under 12 years of age, whether illegitimate, orphans, foundlings or deserted; they are there received, and, when infants, principally nursed in the country. At this time there are 2,240 infants in this situation, and on their return they are boarded, lodged and educated.

SARDINIAN

SARDINIAN STATES.

The information respecting the Sardinian States consists of answers from Piedmont, Genoa and Savoy, obtained by Sir Augustus Foster from the Minister of the Interior, from M. de Vignet, a Senator of Chambery, from Marquis Brignole Sale, Syndic of Genoa, and from the Marquis Cavour, Syndic of Turin, and his son, Count Camille Cavour.

The following extracts comprise their most material contents. (pp. 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 659, 660, 661, 662.)

The general system appears to resemble that of France, except that in Piedmont mendicity is not an offence.

PIEDMONT.

Mendians.

La mendicité n'est point défendue par les lois: toute personne qui est censée être dans l'impossibilité de se procurer, par son travail, de quoi se maintenir lui et sa famille, peut s'établir dans les rues, et demander l'aumône aux passans. Le gouvernement et les autorités des différentes localités ont plusieurs fois vainement tenté de réprimer les abus sans nombre qui naissent de cette faculté illimitée. Les réglemens qui ont été fait dans ce but, n'ont jamais pu être exécutés d'une manière efficace. Ils sont tous restés sans effet. On applique toutefois assez souvent la loi qui défend aux pauvres de mendier hors de leurs communes. Lorsque, dans une ville, les mendiants étrangers affluent en grande abondance, les autorités municipales les en expulsent en masse, laissant le soin à la gendarmerie de leur faire regagner leur pays natal, ou le lieu où ils sont censés avoir un domicile. Mais comme il n'y a aucune peine correctionnelle pour sanctionner cette loi, ils ne tardent pas à la violer de nouveau, en s'éloignant de chez eux, s'ils trouvent une trop grande difficulté à vivre.

Il n'existe aucun document qui puisse servir à fixer, même approximativement, le nombre total des mendiants. Il dépend d'ailleurs en partie de plusieurs causes qui varient continuellement; telles que l'abondance des récoltes, la rigueur des saisons, les vicissitudes de certaines industries qui occupent un grand nombre de bras.

La mendicité est répandue, quoique à des degrés différens, dans tout le pays. Elle existe à peine dans les vallées des Alpes; au contraire, dans les vallées des Appenins, le nombre des mendiants est fort considérable; comme il l'est en général dans tous les endroits où les châtaignes sont la nourriture ordinaire des classes inférieures.

Si un ouvrier, étranger au pays qu'il habite, vient, par suite d'accident ou de maladie, à se trouver dans l'impossibilité de gagner sa vie en travaillant, et qu'il soit hors d'état de s'en retourner chez lui sans secours, les autorités municipales de l'endroit, et successivement celles de tous les pays qui se trouvent sur la route, sont tenues de lui fournir des moyens de transport. A Turin, on donne quelques légers secours pécuniaires à tous les ouvriers qui s'en retournent chez eux: cet usage n'est pas général.

Pauvres

Piedmont.

*Pauvres bien-portans.*SARDINIAN STATES.Piedmont.

Y-a-t-il des établissemens pour les pauvres bien-portans, et leurs familles, où on les fasse travailler en leur fournissant de la nourriture et des habillemens ?—Il n'en existe pas. Le seul essai de ce genre qu'on a tenté il y a quelques années à Raconis a complètement échoué dès le commencement devant d'immenses obstacles, et des inconveniens de tous les genres. Il existe bien près de Turin un établissement, qui s'appelle l'Ergastolo, où l'on retire les jeunes vagabonds, et où on les soumet à un travail continuel : mais quoiqu'il suffise d'un simple ordre de la police pour y être renfermé, sans aucune forme de procès, on le considère plutôt comme une maison de correction, que comme une maison de travail.

Il y a toujours des couvens où l'on distribue à la porte des soupes, du pain et autres objets alimentaires. Cependant cet usage déplorable est maintenant trop restreint pour produire sur la population pauvre un effet sensible, si ce n'est peut-être dans quelque parties de la rivièrre de Gênes, où les ordres mendiens sont les plus nombreux, et la misère la plus grande.

Plusieurs institutions charitables ont des noms et des formes religieuses ; mais elles ne s'occupent que rarement des pauvres valides ; leur objet principal est de soigner les malades et les infirmes.

Lorsqu'il y a beaucoup de misère à cause de l'insufficence des récoltes, ou de la rigueur des saisons, les autorités municipales, soit spontanément, soit sur l'invitation et avec l'aide du gouvernement, entreprennent pendant l'hiver des travaux d'utilité publique pour procurer de l'ouvrage à tous les pauvres valides. Cela a lieu surtout dans les grandes villes, comme Turin et Gênes.

Jusqu'à quel point leur distribue-t-on des secours en nature et en argent ?—Ils ne reçoivent jamais, ni du gouvernement, ni des municipalités, aucun secours ; mais ils sont entièrement abandonnés à la charité privée. Dans les occasions solennelles cependant, telles que l'anniversaire de la restauration de la monarchie, ou la célébration de la fête du Roi, un certain nombre de distributions gratuites de comestibles et d'habillemens ont toujours lieu aux familles les plus nécessiteuses.

Il existe dans un grand nombre de villes des monts-de-piété, qui prêtent sur gâge à six pour cent d'intérêt. Ces établissemens ont des réglemens fort rigoureux. Le malheureux emprunteur, s'il ne peut pas libérer avant le terme fixé l'objet engagé, on le met en vente quelle que soit souvent sa valeur comparée avec le montant de sa dette. Malgré cela, le nombre des personnes qui y ont recours est immense ; et je ne crois exagérer en disant, qu'il n'y a que bien peu de pauvres ménagers qui n'aient quelques meubles, ou quelques hardes, parmi les dépôts des monts-de-piété.

1. Y-a-t-il des hospices pour recevoir ceux que l'âge a mis dans l'impossibilité de gagner leur vie en travaillant ?—Il n'existe aucun établissement dans ce but ; cependant comme il y a plusieurs hospices destinés aux incurables, on parvient quelquefois à y faire recevoir des pauvres gens dont la seule maladie est l'affaiblissement causé par un âge avancé.

2. Leur donne-t-on des secours à domicile, en nature, et en argent ?—Le Gouvernement et les autorités municipales n'en donnent jamais ; mais il y a plusieurs institutions charitables qui distribuent des secours à domicile. A Turin, par exemple, la congrégation de St. Paul a de très-grandes ressources. La loi établit en outre, que dans chaque commune il doit y avoir une congrégation de charité. Dans le fait, il n'en existe que dans un certain nombre de villages et de villes, presque toutes les communes rurales en étant privées. Là, où elles existent, leurs ressources se composent des revenus de fondations particulières, du produit de certaines quêtes, faites à diverses époques de l'année, soit dans les maisons, soit dans les églises, des dons faits par des personnes charitables. Ces congrégations font certainement beaucoup de bien ; mais n'étant pas soumises à un réglemant uniforme, et à une direction centrale, il s'ensuit une grande diversité, et une grande irregularité, dans la manière dont chacune d'elles s'administre : source d'immenses abus, que, dans l'état actuel des choses, il est impossible non seulement de réprimer, mais même de constater.

Il se fait aussi une grande quantité d'aumônes par les mains des curés. Ce sont, sans aucun doute, les mieux distribuées et les plus efficaces ; un grand nombre en est consacré aux vieillards impotens.

Des Malades.

Dans toutes les villes, et même dans un grand nombre de gros bourgs, il y a des hôpitaux ; ainsi tout individu atteint d'une maladie aigue, ou ayant subi un accident grave qui nécessite une opération chirurgicale, est sûr de trouver un établissement public où il sera soigné jusqu'à son entière guérison. Il n'en est pas de même pour les maladies chroniques ou incurables : celles-ci ne sont pas traitées que dans un petit nombre d'hospices, ou il n'est possible de retirer qu'une bien faible portion des individus qui en sont atteints. La plus part de ces malheureux sont abandonnées aux soins de la charité privée. Les conditions d'admission varient beaucoup suivant les différens hôpitaux ; dans le plus grand nombre c'est la fièvre qui constitue la maladie aigue.

SARDINIAN

Les hôpitaux ont presque tous des revenus en fond de terre, ou des capitaux sur les fonds de l'état, ou prêtés à des particuliers. Ils reçoivent en outre, lorsque ces revenus sont insuffisans, des subventions sur les deniers des communes et des provinces, et de nombreuses aumônes des personnes charitables. L'administration des hôpitaux n'est pas uniforme; elle varie suivant les endroits; en général cependant c'est le Gouvernement qui y exerce, plus ou moins directement, une influence prépondérante. Dans quelques villes, l'autorité ecclésiastique, et les chapîtres de chanoines, ont une part dans l'administration des hôpitaux; c'est ordinairement là qu'il y a le moins d'ordre et plus d'abus.

Dans le plus grand nombre des communes, il y a des médecins et des chirurgiens que reçoivent une subvention annuelle, soit des autorités municipales, soit des institutions de charité, avec l'obligation de donner gratuitement leurs soins à tous les malades trop pauvres pour les payer. A Turin, et dans quelques autres endroits, il y a en outre des pharmacies où l'on distribue gratis un certain nombre de remèdes les plus usuels et les plus nécessaires, à tous ceux qui sont munis d'un certificat de pauvreté du curé de leur paroisse, toutes les fois que les médecins l'ordonnent. En général les malades qui ne peuvent pas être admis dans les hôpitaux, sont dans un état pitoyable de misère et de dénuement.

DES ENFANS :

Illégitimes.

Si une fille a eu en enfant d'un homme non marié, elle a recours devant le tribunal ecclésiastique, c'est-à-dire l'officialité de son diocèse, pour forcer le seducteur à l'épouser. Si elle parvient à établir sa bonne conduite antérieure, et à prouver qu'il a été usé envers elle de promesses ou d'autres moyens de séduction, le tribunal ordonne le mariage. Le défendeur peut s'y refuser; mais alors la cause est portée devant les juges civils, qui, admettant comme constaté, sans besoin de preuves ultérieures, le fait de la séduction, arbitrent une indemnité en faveur de la fille, proportionnée aux circonstances particulières du cas.

Quant à l'enfant, la loi déclare qu'il a droit à une pension alimentaire, et qu'il peut la réclamer tant de son père que de sa mère.

Il faut d'ailleurs observer que, grâce à la disposition constante des tribunaux ecclésiastiques à accueillir favorablement les réclamations des filles séduites dans le but de réparer par le mariage le mal qui a été fait, et à la grande facilité de se débarrasser des enfans illégitimes en les portant dans les hospices pour les enfans trouvés, le nombre des bâtards élevés dans les maisons particulières est extrêmement limité, même dans les plus basses classes de la société.

Si le seducteur est fils de famille, et se trouve sous la domination paternelle, lors de sa liaison avec la fille qu'il a rendu mère, celle-ci a recours contre ses parens pour en obtenir l'indemnité voulue par la loi. De même, le fils naturel peut réclamer la pension alimentaire à laquelle il a droit, soit de son aïeul paternel, soit de l'hoirie paternelle ou maternelle, si son père et sa mère sont morts sans faire de provisions en sa faveur.

Dans plusieurs villes, il y a des hospices où l'on reçoit tous les enfans en bas âge, sans rechercher ni leur origine ni leur nom. Les parens peuvent demeurer parfaitement inconnus; pour cela ils n'ont qu'à déposer, à la nuit close, leur enfant dans une roue qui dans tous ces hospices communique de la rue dans l'intérieur de la maison, à sonner la cloche pour avertir la personne de garde, et à s'en aller. La roue tourne, on en retire l'enfant, on le reçoit dans l'hospice, en l'inscrivant suivant un numero d'ordre, et il ne reste plus de traces de la manière dont il y est entré.

Des Orphélins, des Enfans trouvés, et des Enfans abandonnés.

Dans les hospices, on ne reçoit que les enfans en bas âge qu'on y apporte.

Il y a des établissemens destinés pour les orphélins; il y en a un à Gênes, tenu avec beaucoup de luxe; et un autre à Turin, où les filles seules sont admises. Ils sont bien loin de suffire à cette classe nombreuse d'êtres aussi intéressans que malheureux.

Hors de ces établissemens, il n'y a aucun secours public pour les orphélins et les enfans abandonnés; ils sont entièrement à la charge de la charité privée.

Des Boiteux, des Sourds et Muets, et des Aveugles.

Il n'y a aucun établissement pour les personnes estropiées ou difformes. Dans les hôpitaux même où l'on traite les maladies chirurgicales, dès qu'un individu cesse d'avoir besoin des secours de l'art, on le renvoie, quant il aurait perdu même l'usage de tous ses membres.

Il y a à Gênes un établissement pour les sourds et muets, qui jouit d'une juste célébrité; on y admet gratuitement les enfans pauvres qui satisfont à de certaines conditions.

Il n'y a aucune institution pour les aveugles.

Hors des établissemens publics, le Gouvernement n'intervient jamais à faveur de ces malheureux; ils sont laissés à la charité publique.

*Des Idiots et des Fous.*SARDINIAN STATES.Piedmont.

Il y a deux grands établissemens pour les fous ; l'un est à Turin, l'autre est à Gênes. Dans tous les deux on paie une modique pension. Ceux qui sont hors de cas de le faire, sont admis tout de même, mais c'est leur commune ou leur province qui paie pour eux. Dans quelques cas rares, on reçoit sans rétribution des individus aliénés.

Il y a dans quelques pays de montagnes, dans la vallée d'Aoste surtout, un grand nombre d'idiots, qu'on appelle vulgairement Crétins. Ils sont pour la plupart doux et inoffensifs ; aussi sont-ils l'objet de la commisération et de la pitié de tous leurs concitoyens. Il y a une telle émulation à les secourir et à leur fournir ce dont ils ont besoin, qu'il n'arrive jamais qu'on soit obligé de retirer un de ces malheureux dans un hospice. On sait d'ailleurs par une touchante croyance populaire, que la protection du Ciel est attachée à la maison habitée par un crétin.

Ce n'est point aux encouragemens que donne la charité publique, qu'il faut imputer le grand nombre de mariages précoces et imprévoyans qui se contractent. Si on en excepte ceux qui ont lieu entre des mendiants de profession, ils sont dûs, pour la plupart, d'abord à la disposition bien naturelle à des gens grossiers et ignorans à se livrer aux impulsions des passions du moment, sans s'inquiéter des conséquences de l'avenir ; et ensuite au zèle aveugle que le clergé, et les personnes dévotes, mettent à encourager toutes espèces de mariages, dans le but erroné de parer aux désordres de mœurs et aux scandales des liaisons illégitimes.

tions de la Charité.

Les rapports de famille ne sont nullement affectés par les institutions de charité. Telles qu'elles sont, l'homme pauvre regardera toujours ses parens comme son unique soutien contre l'adversité. D'ailleurs la loi Romaine sur l'autorité paternelle existant dans toute sa plénitude, les unions de familles sont plus faciles et plus communes que partout ailleurs.

On ne peut pas comparer le prix du travail du journalier honnête et indépendant, avec le gain des mendiants : il y a une si immense différence entre l'existence honorable de l'un, et l'humiliation, l'avilissement, la dégradation morale de l'autre, que, quoiqu'il fut possible que certains individus, habiles à exploiter la pitié du public, gagnassent beaucoup au de là de ce que rapporte un travail ordinaire, néanmoins leur sort ne serait pas comparable.

GENOA.

Genoa.

1. La mendicité publique, n'étant pas actuellement défendue, il est difficile de connoître et d'établir le nombre des individus qui se livrent à cet état. On peut cependant conjecturer qu'il existe au moins deux cent mendiants dans la ville de Gênes, ce qui, en ajoutant leurs familles, ou du moins ceux des membres de leurs familles qui vivent sur le produit de leur quête, peut en porter le nombre de six à sept cent *.

2. Les pauvres non mendiants, et sans emploi, sont secourus à domicile par le magistrat de miséricorde, par les dames de miséricorde, et par d'autres administrateurs charitables, qui leur distribuent le revenu de beaucoup de legs pieux qu'elles sont chargées d'administrer.

3. Les enfans des pauvres, à quelque classe qu'ils appartiennent, sont instruits gratuitement dans les écoles publiques primaires, administrées par l'autorité municipale. Six de ces écoles sont destinées aux garçons, et deux aux jeunes filles.

4. Il y a à Gênes un mont de piété, où les pauvres peuvent emprunter sur gage, à l'intérêt de huit pour cent.

5. Les pauvres de tout âge depuis la première enfance, natifs de la ville de Gênes, sont reçus, logés, et nourris gratuitement, dans l'hospice des pauvres, jusqu'à la concurrence des moyens de cet établissement. On y reçoit aussi les autres pauvres du Duché, moyennant une rétribution modique.

6. Deux grands hopitaux existent à Gênes ; l'un destiné au traitement des maladies aiguës, l'autre aux incurables, et aux aliénés. On vient de commencer la construction d'un nouvel hôpital pour ces derniers. Il existe en outre, dans un des faubourgs de la ville, un petit établissement pour la lèpre et autres maladies de la peau.

7. Le conservatoire des sœurs de S. Joseph fournit, conformément à ses statuts, aux pauvres malades honteux, le médecin, le chirurgien, et les médicamens. Une association pieuse, sous le titre de N. D. de la Providence, a été érigée à Gênes il y a peu d'années dans le même but.

8. Les femmes en couche pauvres, nées dans la ville, ou y domiciliées depuis trois ans, sont admises et traitées gratuitement, au grand Hôpital dit de Pammatone.

9. Les enfans illégitimes, et ceux qui sont abandonnés par leurs parens, sont reçus gratuitement à l'Hôpital de Pammatone, pourvu qu'on les place secrètement dans le tour qui y est établi à cet effet. Ces enfans trouvés restent à la charge de l'administration de l'hôpital, SAVOY.

Savoy.

1. La mendicité est fort commune dans les environs de Chambéry et dans la haute Tarentaise. Dans les autres provinces, elle n'est pas plus repandue qu'en France, et bien moins qu'en Italie. Le nombre total des mendiants était de 3,688 en l'année 1789. Il s'éleva sous le régime Français à 4,360. Dès lors la mendicité est beaucoup diminuée, soit par suite de l'abaissement des charges publiques, soit à cause de la cessation des expropriations forcées qui étaient journellement poursuivies par le fisc Français contre les parens des conscrits refractaires, et par les prêteurs d'argent Gênois contre leurs debiteurs. On ne peut maintenant évaluer le nombre des mendiants à plus de 2,500.

2. La mendicité errante étant prohibée par les lois, les mendiants n'ont droit à aucun secours. La ville de Chambéry renferme un dépôt de mendicité, où cent indigens sont recueillis, et où l'on essaye de les occuper à divers travaux.

Ces secours sont distribués dans la ville de Chambéry d'après un système très-simple, et qui est peut-être ce qu'on peut trouver de mieux dans ce genre. Les pauvres sont classés en 24 quartiers, dont chacun est confié à la direction de trois dames de charité, dont la plupart appartiennent à la plus haute classe de la société. Chacun de ces bureaux recherche, enregistre, et surveille les besoins des indigens; donne de secours secrettement aux familles pour qui la publicité de leur situation serait un deshonneur; et retire les bienfaits de la charité à ceux qui s'en rendent indignes par leur immoralité. Cette œuvre n'a d'autres ressources que le 10^{me} du prix des billets de théâtre, qui se prélève en faveur des pauvres; le produit des grandes quêtes de Noël et de Pâques, et quelques dons particuliers et secrets. Si elle était assez riche pour pouvoir fournir du travail dans l'intérieur des familles indigentes, cette institution serait bien supérieure à tous les autres établissemens de charité.

Ce que nous venons ci dire ne se rapporte qu'aux indigens en général, car lorsque la pauvreté est jointe à quelque circonstance particulière, elle est recueillie, et secourue dans plusieurs institutions. L'Hospice de Charité de Chambéry a 171 places destinées aux vieillards, aux orphélins, et aux personnes infirmes. L'Asyle de St. Benoît est aussi consacré, dans la même ville, aux vieillards des deux sexes, appartenans à la classe aisée de la société, qui n'ont plus de moyens d'existence, et la maison de orphélins y est destinée à recevoir les jeunes filles sans fortune de la classe moyenne, et des artisans, et à leur donner une éducation, qui puisse leur assurer un sort indépendant.

5. Il n'existe pas de mont-de-piété en Savoye.

7. Chambéry renferme un Hôtel-Dieu de 80 lits, qui sont constamment occupés. Il y existe en outre des institutions spéciales pour les maladies incurables, ou contagieuses, et pour les voyageurs malades. Les autres localités du Duché où il se trouve des hôpitaux pour les malades sont Annecy, Thonon, St. Jean-de-Maurienne, Montmelian, Moutiers, Yenne, la Roche, la Motte-Servolex, et Thônes.

8. Plusieurs établissemens des sœurs de charité ont été fondés, soit par les communes, soit par de riches propriétaires, pour secourir les malades à domicile. Mais on a été forcé, de renoncer à soulager de cette manière la portion la plus misérable des indigens qui ne prenaient pas les médicamens, ou les rendaient mortels par leur imprudence. Ce genre de secours n'est utile qu'aux personnes qui sont au-dessus des habitudes de la pauvreté et de la misère.

9. Parmi les nombreux établissemens de bienfaisance de la ville de Chambéry, il y existe un hospice, dit de la Maternité, spécialement destiné à recevoir les femmes en couche mariées ou non mariées.

10. L'hospice des enfans trouvés de Chambéry, et celui de Thonon, étant destinées à recevoir tous les enfans abandonnés, qui peuvent même y être déposés clandestinement, la plupart des enfans illégitimes y est portée la première nuit après leur naissance, soit que leurs parens soient riches ou pauvres. Ceux qui naissent dans les provinces éloignées de ces deux villes, sont ordinairement élevés par leur mère, et partagent leur fortune, ou leur indigence.

11. Il existe à quelque distance de Chambéry un hospice pour 60 aliénés qui y sont gratuitement gratuitement soignés. Mais jusqu'ici cette institution ne renfermait qu'une vingtaine de places, et comme elle était insuffisante les autres aliénés étaient à la charge de leur commune.

La classe des journaliers, telle qu'elle existe en Angleterre, est très-peu nombreuse en Savoye, où la population presque entière est composée de propriétaires. Sur 102,000 familles que contient le Duché, on compte 85,000 chefs de familles propriétaires d'une portion quelconque du sol, dont 80,000 environ sont cultivateurs. Les journaliers ne peuvent par conséquent être beaucoup employés. Aussi les recensements faits en 1789 et en 1801 ne portent que neuf à dix mille personnes, des deux sexes, soit artisans, soit ouvriers de campagne, travaillants à la journée, dans la partie de la Savoye qui formait, depuis 1789, le département du Mont Blanc, et qui donnerait un total de 14 à 15,000 pour tout le Duché. Généralement les journaliers prennent à bail, de quelque petit propriétaire, une portion de chaumière et un demi acre, ou un acre de terres labourables, au prix de 60 à 100 f. qu'ils payent en journées.

Les épargnes sont une chose presque inconnue en Savoye. Chez les gens riches, comme chez ceux qui ne le sont pas, chez le gentilhomme comme chez les paysan, il est insolite et étrange de faire servir les revenus à un autre usage que celui de les dépenser. Quelques gens d'affaires et les usuriers sont les seuls qui songent à augmenter leur patrimoine. On voit aussi quelques négocians et artisans économiser leurs profits; mais dans l'intention seulement d'acquiescer une maison de campagne, à laquelle ils consacrent toutes leurs épargnes subséquentes.

Les indigens ne s'adressent jamais à l'autorité, mais à la charité particulière, qui est inépuisable, car (excepté pendant la famine de 1817,) il n'est jamais arrivé qu'un homme soit mort de faim. Lorsque la conduite des indigens est suspecte, et qu'ils peuvent être considérés comme vagabonds, l'autorité les renvoie dans leurs communes, ou les chasse du pays, s'ils sont étrangers.

VENICE.

Mr. Money's report from Venice is so concise that we insert the whole (663, 634.) We cannot perfectly reconcile the statement at the beginning, that there is no compulsory legal provision for the poor; and that at the end, that every commune is bound to support the poor and indigent within its limits. Perhaps Mr. Money uses the word "bound" in a moral, not a legal sense.

STATES.

Savoy.

VENICE.

Population about
104,000.

1. Is there any compulsory legal provision for the poor in Venice?—None.

2. In what manner are the funds arising from voluntary donations collected in Venice?—There is a commission of public charity, composed of the laity of the first rank and consideration in Venice, at the head of which is the patriarch.

All sums destined for the relief of the poor and the indigent, from whatever source, are placed at the disposal of this commission.

These funds arise from bequests, which are numerous, from voluntary contributions, from collections made by lay associations in each of the 30 parishes, which hold their meetings either at the church or at the house of the priest; sometimes from the produce of a lottery; and by a singular contrivance of the late patriarch, to render an old custom of complimentary visits on New Year's-day contributory to the purposes of charity, he had it announced, that all who would subscribe to the funds of the commission of public charity should have their names published, and be exempted from the costly ceremony above adverted to.

3. By what authority are they distributed?—By that of the same commission, which receives the reports of the state of the poor in the several parishes, and particularly inquires into the circumstances of every case.

4. What constitutes a claim to relief, and how is that claim investigated?—Among the lower classes, extreme poverty without the means of obtaining subsistence, or incapability from age or sickness to labour for it, This is certified by the parish priest to the association mentioned in answer to query No. 2, which makes itself acquainted with every case of distress. But there is great distress to be relieved among those who once constituted the higher classes of society, but whose families, since the fall of the Republic, have, from various causes, fallen into decay; these make their application direct to the commission, and are relieved according to their necessities and the state of their funds.

5. What is the amount of relief usually given in each case, and for what length of time is it usually continued?—The amount of relief given, according to the class and circumstances of the distressed, is from 10 cents. to 65 cents. per head per day (or from 3 s. 4 d. to 5 s. 4 d. sterling.)—[Sic in orig.]

These alms are continued as long as the parish priest certifies the need of those of the lower classes, or the commission, through its inquiries, are satisfied of the necessities of the others.

6. Is relief given by taking the poor into almshouses or houses of industry, or by giving them relief at home; and in the latter case, is it given in money or in food and clothing?—There are no almshouses in Venice, but there are houses of industry, where work of various descriptions is provided for those who are able to work. Relief is given to many at home, but to most upon their personal appearance before some of the members of the commission.

VENICE.

In winter relief is afforded by the commission, both in food and clothing.

7. What is the number of persons in Venice usually receiving relief, and what is the least and greatest number known during the last 10 years?—The number usually receiving relief, and which is the least number during the last 10 years, is about 47,000; the greatest number in the last 10 years was about 50,000. The last year 42,705 received relief, either at home or by personal application to the commission, and the number in houses of industry and hospitals 4,667*.

8. Is there much difficulty in procuring sufficient funds for the support of the poor in times of distress, or is the supply so large as at all to diminish the industry and providence of the working classes?—It has been found impossible to procure sufficient funds for the support of the poor at Venice, and there never was so large a supply as at all to diminish the industry and providence of the working classes. When the funds prove insufficient, the commune contribute, and after their contributions, whatever is sufficient is supplied by the Government.

9. Do cases of death by starvation ever occur?—Do the poorer classes afford much assistance to one another in time of sickness or want of employment?—Cases of death by starvation never occur. Even during the great distress caused by the blockade in 1813, and the famine in 1817, no occurrence of this kind was known. In fact, the more urgent the circumstances are, the more abundant are the subscriptions and donations.

The poorer classes are remarkable for their kindness to each other in times of sickness and need. Many instances of this have fallen under my own observation.

10. Is there a foundling hospital at Venice, and if so, what is the number of infants annually admitted into it?—There is a foundling hospital in Venice, which was instituted in 1346, and the number received into it annually is between 400 and 500. I have known seven found in the receptacle in one morning.

Each child is immediately given to a wet nurse; at the end of seven or eight days it is vaccinated, and sent to nurse in the country.

11. Do members of the same family, among the poorer classes in general, show much disposition to assist one another in distress, sickness or old age?—There is much family affection in all classes of the Venetians, and in sickness, distress and old age, among the poorer classes, they show every disposition to assist and relieve each other.

The clergy, who have great influence over the lower classes, exert themselves much to cultivate the good feeling which subsists among them towards one another.

12. Have you any other observations to make on the relief afforded to the poor at Venice?—Besides the voluntary contributions and the assistance of the commune and the Government, the several charitable institutions (of which there are no less than 10) in this city, have annual incomes derivable from various bequests in land and other property, amounting to 483,000 Austrian livres (or 16,000 l. sterling.) Last year the commune contributed 359,000 Austrian livres (or 11,970 l. sterling) and the Government 460,000 Austrian livres (or 15,330 l. sterling). The Government contributes annually for the foundlings and the insane of the eight Venetian provinces, 1,000,000 of Austrian livres, (33,000 l. sterling). I should remark, that among other resources which the commission of public charity have at their command, is a tax upon the theatres and other places of public amusement.

The total expenditure of the commission of public charity may be taken approximately at 3,000,000 of Austrian livres, or 100,000 l. sterling annually, for the city of Venice alone, which is now declared to contain a population of 112,000.

Mendicity is not permitted in the streets of Venice, and although distress does force mendicants to appear when they can escape the vigilance of the police, yet I do not believe that 20 beggars are to be met with in this large and populous city.

The poor in every parish in Venice have the benefit of a physician, a surgeon and medicines gratis; the expense of these is paid by the commune.

Every commune in the Venetian provinces is bound to support the poor and the indigent within its limits, whether they be natives of the commune or not. No commune or parish can remove from it a pauper, because he may have been born in another. Ten years' residence entitles a man to a settlement in a different parish from that of his birth. When a commune to which a pauper does not belong affords him relief, it is always reimbursed by his own parish.

Every commune derives funds from local taxes; the commune of towns from taxes on certain articles of consumption; the communes in the country, where articles of consumption are not taxed, from an addition to the capitation tax, which is levied by the State, but all communes have, more or less, sources of revenue from land, houses, and charitable bequests, which are very frequent in these states.

The number of foundlings at present in the country under the age of 12 years is 2,300. After that age the child is transferred from the family who have the charge of it, and apprenticed to learn some craft or trade, or servitude, but so kind-hearted are the people in the Venetian provinces, that in numerous instances, from attachment to the child which they have reared, they have begged, when the time arrived for its removal, to be allowed to keep it as their own.

Venice, 24 March 1834.

* This amounts to nearly one half of the supposed population.

The information from Portugal and its dependencies consists of answers from Oporto, the Azores and the Canary Islands, to the Commissioners' questions. The following extracts show the general state of these countries. (pp. 642, 643, 644, 645. 647. 686, 687.)

PORTUGAL.

PORTUGAL.

Although poverty prevails to a great extent in Portugal, still the frugal habits and very limited wants and desires of the lower classes of the population in the northern provinces, prevent mendicity from showing itself in those offensive and distressing forms which it assumes in many other countries. The very limited provision which has been made for the poor by the Government, or by public regulation, throws them on their own resources, and makes them careful and provident. Although, during the late siege of Oporto, we issued at one period gratuitously, from a soup society, upwards of 6,000 rations of soup each day, the number of absolute mendicants who were relieved fell greatly short of 1,000. The remainder of the applicants were principally families reduced to distress by the circumstances of the times, who withdrew their claims so soon as the termination of the blockade opened to them other resources and means of support.

Persons destitute of resources, who may be travelling in search of work or otherwise, can claim no pecuniary relief; but the different religious establishments are in the habit of affording a temporary asylum and succour to strangers. There are also houses of refuge for the poor, called "Misericordias," at various places, which are supported by royal gifts, bequests by will, and private donations.

None but the military can be billeted on private houses; and even this right is now contested by the camara (municipality) of Oporto, as contrary to the constitutional charter. Nor are there any houses of industry for receiving destitute able-bodied, or their families, except at Lisbon, where I understand there are royal manufactories where the poor are employed, as well as at a rope-walk called the Cordoario. The different religious establishments are, as I have already observed, in the habit of affording pecuniary relief, as well as of giving food and medical aid to the destitute of every description; but the political changes, by suppressing some and diminishing the resources of all these establishments, must have greatly reduced this description of charity.

In most towns and large villages there are schools to which the poor may send their children free of expense; but they receive neither food nor clothing, and the instruction is extremely limited. The masters are allowed a small stipend by the Government.

Relatives are forced to aid each other, in the degrees of father, mother, child, brother and sister, in cases of want: for persons impotent through age, there are houses of charity, called "Recolhimentos," in most cities and considerable towns, where a limited number of aged or infirm poor of both sexes are lodged, clothed and fed. These establishments are supported in part by royal gifts, and in part by the different municipalities; but no provision is made for the attendance of the sick poor at their own dwellings, nor are they in any case boarded with individuals, or billeted on private houses; but if they have relatives in the degrees above mentioned, these are bound to assist them, if able to do so.

There are public hospitals in most cities and towns, where the sick poor are received and treated gratis. There are also lying-in hospitals, which receive pregnant women (without inquiring as to their being married or not) without any charge; but I am not aware of the existence of any regulation which obliges the medical officers of these establishments to deliver women at their own dwellings, although this is frequently done voluntarily.

Children.

A law or decree, issued in 1772, imposes equally on both parents the duty of maintaining their children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, where they have the means of doing so; and the parentage in the latter case, if the father can be ascertained or is acknowledged. Brothers and sisters are equally bound to assist each other.

But in cases where the parents either have not the means or want inclination to support their illegitimate child, a ready resource is offered by the "Casas dos Expostos" which exist in most towns. These establishments for foundlings are provided with rodas, or revolving boxes, into which the infant is placed, and is received without inquiry. The practice of thus abandoning infants to be reared by public charity, prevails, I am assured, to a painful extent in Portugal.

Cripples, Deaf and Dumb, and Blind.

At Lisbon there is, I understand, an establishment for the reception of the deaf and dumb.

Idiots and Lunatics.

At Lisbon there is an establishment for lunatics, called the Hospital of St. Joseph, where lunatics and idiots are received and supported gratuitously, if without means. Better treatment and greater comforts may be obtained for patients ably to pay for the same. This institution is partly supported by the Government, and partly by voluntary contributions, in the same manner as the misericordias in provincial towns.

PORTUGAL.

It may be observed generally, that in Catholic countries, the care of administering to the wants, both physical and moral, of the poor, being left in a great degree to the clergy and religious establishments, the action of the civil government, as well as of private benevolence in their favour, is much less visible, and far more confined than in Protestant states.

Oporto, 24 April 1834.

THE AZORES.

Vagrants.

The Azores.

In the Azores mendicity is limited to the aged and infirm poor, and to the crippled and blind, for whom there is no legal provision; they are therefore dependent on the charity of the wealthy, to whom they make a weekly application and receive alms. There are no houses for their reception, or asylum of any description, but they obtain a distribution of victuals from the convents, of whatever surplus food remains after the friars and nuns have dined.

Vagrants are not allowed; such people are liable to be imprisoned, and on conviction may be shipped off to India, Angola, &c., or employed on public works, by decrees of the 16th May 1641, 19th May 1684, 4th March 1688, 7th March 1691, and 4th November 1755. Those decrees, though severe, have had a good effect in exterminating vagrancy in the Azores. No relief is given to persons seeking work.

Destitute Able-bodied.

There are no laws for granting relief to the poor of any description, excepting the sick. Able-bodied men in want of work can always find employment on seeking it.

Public schools for teaching reading and writing are established in each municipal district, where the children of the poor are taught gratis. A small tribute on wine produce of the country is levied for payment of these schools, called the Literary Subsidy, and public professors are paid out of it also, who teach Latin, grammar, rhetoric and philosophy to all who choose to attend.

The laws of Portugal oblige the proprietors of entailed property to give alimentary allowances to their children and brothers and sisters, in proportion to their own means and the wants of the applicants. Children coming into possession of property are obliged to assist their parents and brothers, if in necessity. The poor, however, are left to themselves, and to the stimulus of natural affection; and cases are very rare in which appeals are made in vain; but lawsuits are very common to oblige the rich heir of entailed property to give aliments to a brother or sister, as the elder brother takes the whole estate, and the younger branches are entirely dependent on him, if the father has not left money or unentailed property to distribute amongst his other children.

Sick.

In every municipal district there is a public hospital called the Misericordia, i. e. house of mercy, for the reception of the sick poor, supported by endowments of land and bequests of money from pious people long since deceased, and voluntary contributions of living persons, where the sick are well treated, and when cured are sent to their families, and if in great distress a small sum of money is given to assist them. These hospitals contain generally from 200 to 300 sick, and are, generally speaking, well conducted by the governors, stewards, medical attendants and nurses. Foreign seamen are also admitted on the respective consuls paying 1s. 6d. per diem for diet and attendance.

In cases where the hospitals are full, and cannot accommodate any more patients, medicines are given to applicants, and surgical and medical advice gratis from the hospital practitioners.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

The mother must support it in case she chooses to suckle the child herself; if, on the contrary, the sense of shame overcomes her maternal feelings, and she takes it to the misericordia, where there is a private place to receive the infant, it is immediately taken care of, and put out to nurse at the expense of the municipality until seven years of age, when it is apprenticed (if a male) to some trade or handicraft, or to a farmer; if a female, to domestic service in some family, where they are fed and clothed until of an age to earn wages. In nine cases out of 10, the practice is to take the child to the misericordia, as pregnancy is more easily concealed here than in other countries, by the peculiar dress of the common class of women. The municipality are at the expense of maintenance of the children, and if their funds are scanty the State pays the deficiency.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

Orphans.—Various laws have been promulgated in favour of orphans, for whom the respective local magistrates were appointed judges and protectors, which duty now devolves on the justices of the peace. If any property belongs to them, proper guardians are appointed to take care of it, and to educate the children; if none, they are under the municipal municipal protection until of age to be put apprentice to some trade or calling, service, &c. in cases where their relatives are unable to take charge of them.

Foundlings.—Foundlings are taken charge of and treated as orphans; there are several funds set apart for their support by express decrees of former sovereigns of Portugal; they are received into the misericordias, and supported by the chamber of municipality.

Deserted Children whose Parents are known.—Deserted children are also reputed as foundlings or orphans, and have similar care taken of them by the municipal authorities; the instances are extremely rare of children being deserted by their parents, which is justly held in abhorrence by all classes of persons.

Cripples, Deaf and Dumb, Blind, Idiots and Lunatics.

There are no establishments whatsoever of any kind; they live on the alms bestowed weekly by the benevolent.

In general there prevails much love and affection between parents and children, and from the children much obedience and respect towards their parents, to which they are exhorted by the clergy, who inculcate great subjection to their parents on all occasions.

The poorest able-bodied labourer abhors begging; his utmost exertions are therefore employed to support himself and family; and it is only in cases of sickness, or other corporeal impediment, that he ever has recourse to alms.

In the Island of St. Mary's wheat and barley are chiefly cultivated, but little Indian corn; much waste land is to be seen, arising from the absence of the great proprietors, who live in St. Michael's or at Lisbon.

At Terceira more wheat than Indian corn is to be seen under cultivation; much land lying waste from the want of capital or spirit of enterprize in the proprietors.

At St. George's, being a volcanic soil, there are more vineyards and pasture land than arable.

Gracioza being flat in surface, and having a strong clay soil, much barley and wheat is grown, but little Indian corn; the poor subsist chiefly on barley-bread, pulse, &c.; it also produces much brandy from the low-priced wines.

Pico being very mountainous and volcanic, the whole island is one continued vineyard; little soil for corn; the inhabitants depend upon the other islands for supplies of bread.

Fayal, partly vineyard, the rest corn land and pasture; all the principal proprietors of Pico living at Fayal; the poor of Pico are chiefly supplied from thence by their landlords.

Corvo produces grain, &c. for its consumption only.

Flores: some wheat and Indian corn is exported from thence, also bacon and hams, as large quantities of hogs are bred in that island.

A great deal of land is still uncultivated throughout the Azores, so that no able-bodied labourer can want employment, and for two centuries to come will give employment to the increasing population. The temperature of the climate, ranging from 55° to 78° of Fahrenheit, reduces the physical wants of man as to clothing, fuel, &c.; and the abundance of vegetables, fruits, &c. renders the poor man's lot easier than in colder climates. In the hospitals there is no limit of rations to the sick patients; they have bread, meat, poultry, milk, &c. in abundance. The state of criminals in the prisons is however dreadful; they are not fed by government, and must die if not succoured by relatives, and the casual supply of bread sent them from the misericordia in cases of extreme need; this however is not obligatory on the part of the hospital. Criminals, after sentence to the galleys, are allowed a loaf of bread per day, but nothing more.

St. Michael's, 20 April 1834.

CANARY ISLANDS.

Mendicity; Vagrants; Destitute Able-bodied; Impotent through Age.

Mendicity does prevail to a great extent in the Canary Islands. There is no legal provision whatever for the relief or support of the poor included in the denominations stated above; casual charity is the only resource; but as the natives for the most part remain in the places where they were born, there are very few who have not some relations and acquaintance, from whom they receive occasional assistance. From the nature of the climate, the wants of the poor, when not suffering from sickness, are very limited; having food sufficient to satisfy their hunger, they are scarcely affected by the privations so sensibly felt by the poor in northern climates. "Goffro," (which is maize, barley or wheat, toasted and ground by the hand between two stones,) mixed with water or milk, potatoes and other vegetables, with sometimes a small piece of salt fish, constitute the general food of the peasantry throughout the islands. In the towns the artisans live better, obtaining bread, potatoes, salt fish, and sometimes butchers' meat.

Sick.

In Santa Cruz there is one hospital for the poor, but the accommodation is very limited, (24 beds), in no degree proportional to the wants of the population.

In the town of Laguna is one also, larger than Santa Cruz, and tolerably maintained. At Las Palmas, the capital of the island of Canary, is the largest and best hospital in the islands; near that town also is the hospital of St. Lazarus, exclusively for lepers, of which there are considerable numbers. This hospital is well kept up, and the building in a good state of repair, with a garden walled round. The unfortunate inmates are said to be comfortably provided for.

PORTUGAL.

Canary Islands.

Children, Illegitimate ; Orphans, Foundlings, Deserted Children.

There are no legal regulations as to illegitimate children; their support therefore falls on the mother. There is a foundling hospital at Laguna in Teneriffe, and another at Las Palmas in Canary; in each a turning box, and a great number of children are by this means disposed of. In the hospital of Santa Cruz is also a turning-box; the infants left are understood to be sent to Laguna. Children placed in the box have usually some mark by which they may be recognised, and they are given up to parents when claimed. There is no other provision for children.

Cripples, Deaf, Dumb and Blind,

Live with their parents or relations, or subsist by casual charity. No provision.

Idiots and Lunatics.

No particular establishment; live with their relations. When violent, they are placed in the hospitals or gaols.

Almost all the land in the Canary Islands is cultivated by agreement between the owners of the land and a class of persons called "medianeros" (middlemen), intelligent husbandmen; the conditions are simple: that the medianero shall cultivate the land, and find half the seed, he retaining half the produce; the other half is delivered to the landlord in kind.

The peasantry are a robust and hardy race, laborious and frugal. There is a great deal of family affection among them. Considerable numbers emigrate to the Havannah and Puerto Rico ostensibly, but it is believed that they are taken to Caraccas and other American countries, once dependencies of the Spanish crown.

GREECE.

GREECE.

There are two sets of answers from Greece to the Commissioners' questions. One a general one, by the Secretary of State for the Interior, the other from Patras, by Mr. Crowe, His Majesty's consul. It will be seen from the following extracts from the Government report, (pp. 665, 666, 667,) that there are scarcely any charitable institutions.

Vagrants.

Before the Revolution, two classes of vagrants existed in Greece: of these, one class consisted of those individuals who, having no property of their own, and being averse to labour, lived by robbery; the other class consisted of those persons who were indeed destitute, but refusing to labour, did not at the same time resort to robbery: the latter existed by the charity of their relations, and of other benevolent individuals, and the former were constantly pursued by the Turkish police.

In two provinces only of the new Greek State, viz. Thravari in Acarnania, and Cloutzinas of Kalavryta, does systematic beggary exist; in these places, many persons mutilated their new-born children for the express purpose of exciting the compassion of the public; but neither before the Revolution, during the Revolution, nor even now, is there any public establishment for the relief of either of the two above classes of vagrants; and notwithstanding that during the Revolution the number of these vagrants increased, it is now certain that their numbers have sensibly diminished, and it is to be hoped that as soon as the municipalities are regularly established, all these individuals will be obliged to labour for their subsistence.

There exists no public institution or decree organizing the relief to be granted to the poor in Greece; neither did anything of the kind exist before the Revolution, although the country was formed into municipalities. It was feared that the Ottoman authorities would appropriate to themselves any resources which might be set apart for the poor. Charitable subscriptions were therefore the only means by which the poor, sick, &c. obtained relief.

Impotent through Age, and Sick.

No regulations ever existed on these heads. The aged who were destitute received, and still receive, assistance from the charitably disposed, and from the monasteries; but this assistance is voluntary, not obligatory.

With regard to hospitals, there are only two, one at Nauplia and one at Syra; the first is at present given up to the military service, and the second, belonging to the municipality of Syra, is maintained by a small duty levied on merchandize; the one at Nauplia was formerly supported in the same manner.

*Children.*GREECE.

The support of bastards falls upon their fathers. With regard to foundlings, who are generally left clandestinely at the church doors, the local authorities take charge of them, and entrust them to nurses, whose expenses are defrayed by the Government; benevolent individuals likewise frequently take charge of them, and bring them up at their own expense. The number of foundlings supported by the Government barely exceeds forty throughout the whole State, by which it appears that depravity of morals in Greece is not great.

For the support of destitute orphans, an establishment (the Orphanotropheion, exists at Ægina, where many are brought up at the expense of the Government, and are taught to read and write, and various trades. However, the nearest relations of the orphans generally consider it to be a religious duty to take care of them; so that in consequence of this praiseworthy feeling, they are seldom left entirely destitute, unless they have no relations, or unless the latter have no means of assistance at their disposal. Moreover, there are numerous benevolent persons who are in the habit of taking orphans into their houses, and bringing them up at their own expense.

Labour hitherto has not much increased in Greece; the labourers are industrious, frugal, and attached to their relations.

I may add, that in consequence of the vast extent of land in Greece in comparison with the number of its inhabitants, the latter apply themselves mostly to agriculture and the care of flocks, by which means they procure ample means of subsistence; and the few manufactures which exist in Greece being all made by hand, sufficient employment is to be procured by every individual. These are the reasons why the number of the poor is so limited notwithstanding that late events were so much opposed to the progress of arts and industry.

EUROPEAN TURKEY.

The only remaining portion of Europe which has furnished answers to the Commissioners' questions is European Turkey; with respect to which it may be enough to say, that the only charitable institutions mentioned in the return are religious establishments and khans, in which vagrants are allowed to remain a few days, and receive food; and schools attached to the mosques, in which children of every description receive gratuitous instruction in reading and writing.

EUROPEAN TURKEY.

One of the most striking circumstances connected with the countries which we have last considered is the accuracy with which the population seems to be regulated with reference to the demand for labour. In the ill-administered parts of England there is in general no approach to any such regulation. That sort of population which, from our familiarity with it, has acquired the technical name of a surplus population, not only continues stagnant in places where its services are no longer required, but often springs up and increases without any increase of the means of profitable employment. The parochial returns, forming Part B. of this Appendix, are full of complaints of a want of labourers in one parish, and an oversupply in another; without any tendency of the redundancy to supply the deficiency. In time, of course the deficient parish is filled up by natural increase; but in the mean time the population of the redundant parish does not seem to diminish. In general, indeed, it goes on increasing with unchecked rapidity, until, in the worst administered portions of the kingdom, a state of things has arisen of which the cure is so difficult that nothing but the certainty of absolute and almost immediate ruin from its increase, or even from its continuance, would have induced the proprietors to encounter the dangers of the remedy. Nothing like this, indeed, exists in any of the countries affording compulsory relief, except Berne, which have given us returns. But they provide against its occurrence, as we have already observed, by subjecting the labouring classes, indeed all classes except the opulent, to strict regulation and control, by restraining their marriages, forcing them to take service, and prohibiting their change of abode unless they have the consent of the commune in which they wish to settle. By a vigilant exertion of these means the population of the north of Europe and Germany seems in general to be proportioned to the means of employment and subsistence; but in the countries which have escaped the compulsory system the same results are produced without interference or restriction. Complaints are often made in the different returns of the idleness, the drunkenness and the improvidence of the labouring classes, but never of their disproportionate number.

General absence, in the countries not subject to compulsory relief, of a surplus population.

Another and a very interesting portion of the information which the intelligence and industry of His Majesty's foreign Ministers and Consuls have enabled us to submit to the public, consists of the answers to the questions respecting labourers. In order to facilitate a comparison between the state of the English and foreign populations, the questions proposed were in general the same as had been already answered in England, either by the population returns, or by the returns to the questions circulated in England by the Poor Law Commissioners.

The following questions, being 1, 3 & 7, correspond to the English questions 8, 10, 13 & 14, of the rural queries:—

1. (8 of English questions). What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?

3. (10 of English questions). What in the whole might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the whole of all his advantages and means of living?

7. (13 of English questions). What in the whole might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 & 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?

8. (14 of English questions). Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?

The following is a digest of the answers from all the agricultural parishes in England which have replied to the corresponding Questions circulated by the Poor Law Commissioners:—

Agricultural wages
in England.

Q. 8. Weekly wages, with or without beer or cyder, in summer and winter?

254 parishes give an average in summer, with beer or cyder, of per week,
10 s. 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.

522 parishes give an average in summer, without beer or cyder, of per week,
10 s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

200 parishes give an average in winter, with beer or cyder, of per week,
9 s. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.

544 parishes give an average in winter, without beer or cyder, of per week,
9 s. 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.

Q. 10. What in the whole might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and piece-work, expect to earn in the year, including harvest work, and the value of all his other advantages and means of living, except parish relief?

Q. 13. What in the whole might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 & 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in the year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?

856 parishes give for the man, an average of - - - £. 27 17 10

We now add a digest of the foreign answers to the corresponding questions, and also to Question 6, "What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter, and in harvest, and how employed?" a question as to which the English answers do not admit of tabular statement.

Wages and subsistence of Foreign labourers.

We have arranged the answers under seven heads: 1. Wages of artizans; 2. of agricultural labourers; 3. of labourers whom the author of the return appears not to have included in either of the other two classes; 4. of women; 5. of children; 6. of the labourer's wife and four children; and 7. the food on which the supposed family could subsist, on their average annual earnings and means of living.

SWEDEN:

Count Forsell's Statement - - p. 380

-- The support of a cottager's household, consisting of husband, wife and three children, in the middle part of Sweden, costs yearly about 146 ½ r.d., according to the prices of last year; the husband being occupied during the whole year, and his wife having enough to do with the care of her children, so that neither she nor her husband can calculate on any additional earnings.

The labourer receives 2 ½ barrels of rye, or in money 16 r.d. 32 sk.; 1 barrel of corn, 5 r.d. 16 sk.; half barrel of pease, 3 r.d. 16 sk.; half ditto of malt, 2 r.d. 32 sk.; 2 ditto potatoes, 2 r.d.; 1 ½ lb. salt, 32 sk.; 4 lbs. herrings, 2 r.d. 16 sk.; 1 lb. of butter, 4 r.d. 16 sk.; 3 lbs. of hops, 1 r.d.; 1 ½ pint of sweet milk per day, 10 r.d. 16 sk.; 3 pints of sour milk during the summer, 4 r.d. 16 sk.; 9 gallons of bränvin (a kind of whisky), 5 r.d. 16 sk.; lodging and fuel. 16 r.d. 32 sk.; annual wages in money, 44 r.d.; earnest, 3 r.d. 16 sk.; contributions, 3 r.d. 16 sk.; sundries, 6 r.d. 34 sk.; total banco, 146 r.d. 32 sk. That is, on an average, 29 r.d. 16 sk. annually for every individual; and daily, 3 sk. 10 ½ rst.

On a gentleman's estate in the neighbourhood of Stockholm, the following was given last year: Annual pay in money, 33 r.d. 16 sk.; ½ barrel of wheat, 2 r.d. 32 sk.; 4 barrels of rye, 24 r.d.; 2 barrels of corn, 9 r.d. 16 sk.; 2 ditto potatoes, 2 r.d.; 10 heads of white cabbage, 32 sk.; ½ barrel of herrings, 4 r.d. 32 sk.; 1 lb. of salt, 21 sk.; 2 lbs. of meat, 2 r.d.; 1 lb. of bacon, 2 r.d. 32 sk.; 1 lb. of hops, 16 sk.; 2 pairs of shoes, 3 r.d. 16 sk.; sweet milk, 10 r.d.; sundry expenses, 5 r.d.; lodging, wood, earnest, taxes, 25 r.d.: equal to 123 r.d. 21 sk. Were that sum divided among five persons, 25 r.d. 29 sk. would accrue to each; and daily, 3 sk. 3 rst.

The household of a cottager belonging to this estate, about 10 English miles from Stockholm, was bound, according to a written contract, for 10 years to perform the following labour for the estate or landowner; namely,

Hence will be seen that the master of such a family must earn daily, during the whole year, nearly 2 r.d. banco, and consequently no masons, carpenters, smiths, &c. can be included in this class. If the husband, wife or children are sick for any length of time, the state of such a family is far more deplorable than that of the agricultural peasantry of Sweden.

Note.—146 ½ r.d.s. = 11 l. — 1 lb. = 20 lbs. English. — 1 dollar = 48 skillings. — 1 skilling = 1 ½ farthing. A dollar therefore is worth 72 farthings, or 1 s. 6 d.

Wages, about 3 l. 10 s., or in the whole, say, 10 l. 18 s. 10 d. The above statement applies to a small farmer; reduce it about one- third, and it may apply to a common (married) labourer in the country.
RUSSIA: General Return, p. 334	- (No distinction of classes given.) The pay of labourers varies in different parts of Russia. In Georgia, it is 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per day, which is the lowest; in St. Peters- burgh, it is 1 s. 3 d. per day, which is the highest.						- It would subsist. On rye bread, buck wheat and sour cabbage soup, well seasoned with salt, and occa- sionally a little lard.

(This is supposed to be the meaning of the answers to queries 6 and 7.)	- Decidedly yes. Their food con- sists of fish, rye bread, gruel, kvas, occasionally meat and turnips. A great deal of tea is also drunk by the peasants of this neighbourhood.
COURLAND Return, p. 341	- Per day, skilled, 3 s. to 4 s.; unskilled, 1 s. 6 d. to 2 s.	- Paid by land for sub- sistence.	- Per day, summer, 1 s.; winter, few pence less.	- Per week, summer, 3 s. 6 d.; winter, 2 s. 6 d.	- Per week, under 16, summer, 3 s., winter, 2 s.	- Per year, 30 l. to 35 l., (supposed to include man's earnings).	- They can subsist on the aggregate earnings, in most cases, however, but needy; on bread, potatoes, salted fish, &c., seldom beef.
DENMARK: COPENHAGEN Return, p. 267	- One-third more than agriculturists.	- Per day, 6 d. to 8 d. (with, in harvest, provisions of poor quality); per year, 15 l. (Sunday nearly a day of work.)		Per day, 4 d., all the year -		- Man, wife and four chil- dren, working on the Sun- days, about 12 s. a week.	- It is frequently done. The food wholesome rye bread, bad milk, cheese, shocking butter, coffee, as it is called, profusion of tobacco and snuff, and too much spirits, which are unfortu- nately cheap and very bad.

ELSINORE Return, p. 296	-- No sub-division. Per day, summer, 9 d. to 10 d., or 6 d. to 7 d. with food; winter, 6 d. to 7 d., or 4 d. to 5 d. with food; per year, 12 l. to 15 l.	-- Summer, four months, 2 s. 6 d. to 3 s. per week; winter, eight months, 1 s. 6 d. to 2 s. a week.	--	--	Per year, about 6 l.	-- With prudence and economy, which, however, are no characteristics of the peasantry of this country, I doubt not it might be done. Their principal food consists of rye bread, groats, potatoes, coffee, butter, cheese and milk, in which articles a family consisting of man, wife and three children, would expend about 15 l. per annum in this neighbourhood; in other parts of the country they fare worse. Food is cheap.
Further Statement, by Consul Macgregor, p. 299	-- Per week, with food, 4 s. 6 d. to 6 s. 9 d.; without food, 11 s. to 11 s. 6 d. In manufactories, per week, male, 4 s. 6 d. to 5 s.; children above 14, 3 s. 6 d. to 4 s., or under 14, 1 s. 9 d. to 2 s. 3 d.; ropemakers, 1 s. 9 d. to 2 s. 3 d. per day.	-- Per year, with food and lodging, males, 4 l. to 5 l.; females, 3 l. 10 s. to 3 l. 15 s.; boys, 2 l. 10 s. to 3 l. 15 s.	-- Per day, in towns, 1 s. to 1 s. 6 d. The bread and vegetables had been paid for out of the father's wages.
BOURDEAUX - p. 235	-- Per day, 1 s. 7½ d. to 2 s. 5 d.	-- Daily labourer, 1 s. 4½ d. Yearly labourer : Money - - - £. 17 - Other advantages, 4 12 Annual income, £. 21 12	- - - - -	-- Per week, 3 s. 4½; in harvest, 4 s. 2½ d.; in the vine districts, except during harvest, 2 s. 10 d.	Per year, 12 l.	-	-- Certainly. The food varies in different districts. Throughout the district called Landes (heath) occupying alone one-third of this department, the food consists in rye bread, soup made of millet, cakes made of Indian corn, now and then some salt provision and vegetables, rarely if ever butchers' meat; their drink water, which for the most part is stagnant.
BAYONNE - p. 261	-- Per day, average workmen, 1 s. 3 d. to 1 s. 6 d.; best workmen, 2 s. 6 d. to 3 s.	-- Per day, town and country, 1 s. Very few in the country.	- - - - -	- - - - -	- - - - -	-	-- The food of the proprietor or working farmer chiefly consists of vegetable soups, potatoes, salt fish, pork, bacon, &c. &c., seldom or ever butchers' meat, and invariably Indian corn bread, home-baked.
MARSEILLES - p. 188	-- Labourers (of what description not stated) per day, 15 d. to 18 d.; by the year, 7 l. to 8 l., with board and lodging.	16 l. to 20 l. without board and lodging.	- - - - -	-- Per day, 7 d. to 9 d., all the year.	-- Per day, aged 11 and under 16, same as woman; under 11, nothing.	-	-- They could subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children. Distant from Towns, a little more than half. Common labourer, near towns, per year, about 18 l.; in other districts, about 8 l. Wages of artisans, about double those of common labourers.	- - - - -	- - - - -	- - Per week, spinners and weavers, and in the field, 2 s.	- - Wife, 4 l.; eldest child, 2 l.; together 6 l.; (the children under 14 being employed at home.	- - - - -	- - Such a family can subsist on their aggregate earnings. Their food principally consists of bread, rice, greens, dried beans and pease, olives and onions, and meat about once a week.

The answers to the following eight purely statistical questions may also be compared with the results respecting England and Wales, obtained by the Enumeration of 1831.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?
15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?
16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?
17. The average number of children to a marriage?
18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?
19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their 1st year?
20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?
21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?

The average annual proportion, since 1820, of births and deaths, to the whole population of England and Wales, is thus stated by Mr. Rickman:

Deaths	-	-	-	1 in 49 *
Births	-	-	-	1 in 28 †

Preface to Enumeration Abstract:

* p. xxv.

† p. xlv, xxv.

The average annual proportion during five years preceding 1831, of marriages, to the whole population of England and Wales, is stated by Mr. Rickman to be 1 to 128 ‡.

‡ p. xxxiv.

The average annual proportion in England and Wales, during ten years preceding 1831, of births to marriages, to be 441 to 100 §.

§ p. xlv.

The proportion in England and Wales, in the year 1830, of legitimate to illegitimate births, to be 19 to 1 ||.

|| p. xlv.

The proportion in England and Wales of deaths of persons under 1 year to the whole number of deaths during 18 years, ending in 1830, to be 778,803 out of 3,938,496, or 1 in $5\frac{1}{17}$, or more nearly 1 in $5\frac{2}{35}$.

The proportion of deaths under the age of 18 years to be 1,703,941 out of 3,938,496, or 1 in $2\frac{1}{3}$, or more nearly 1 in $2\frac{53}{170}$ ¶.

§ These numbers cannot be correct,

On comparing these statements respecting the wages, subsistence and mortality of those portions of Continental Europe which have furnished returns, with the corresponding statements respecting England, it will be found, that on every point England stands in the most favourable, or nearly the most favourable position. With respect to money wages, the superiority of the English agricultural labourer is very marked. It may fairly be said that his wages are nearly double the average of agricultural wages in the Continent. And as fuel is generally cheaper in England than in the Continent, and clothing is universally so, his relative advantage with respect to those important objects of consumption is still greater.

On the other hand, as food is dearer in England than in any other part of Europe, the English labourer, especially if he have a large family, necessarily loses on this part of his expenditure a part of the benefit of his higher wages, and, if the relative dearness of food were very great, might lose the whole. On comparing, however, the answers to the 14th English and 8th Foreign question, it appears probable, that even in this respect the English family has an advantage, though of course less than in any other. Of the 687 English parishes which have given an answer from which the diet of the family can be inferred, 491, or about five-sevenths, state, that it could obtain meat; and of the 196 which give answers implying that it could not get meat, 43 are comprised in Essex and Sussex, two of the most pauperised districts in the kingdom. But in the foreign answers, meat is the exception instead of the rule. In the north of Europe the usual food seems to be potatoes and oatmeal, or rye bread, accompanied frequently by fish, but only occasionally by meat.

In Germany and Holland the principal food appears to be rye bread, vegetables, the produce of the dairy, and meat once or twice a week.

In Belgium, potatoes, rye bread, milk, butter and cheese, and occasionally pork.

The French returns almost exclude fresh meat, and indicate a small proportion of salted meat. Thus we are told, that in Havre they live on bread and vegetables; never animal food, or very rarely. In Brittany, on buck wheat, barley bread, potatoes, cabbages, and about 6 lbs. of pork weekly. In the Gironde, on rye bread, soup made of millet, Indian corn, now and then some salt provision, and vegetables, rarely if ever butcher's meat. In the Basses Pyrenées, on vegetable soups, potatoes, salt fish, pork and bacon, seldom or ever butcher's meat. In the Bouches du Rhone, on vegetables, bread, and farinaceous substances made into soup, and bouillie about once a week. Their food in Piedmont is said to be the simplest and coarsest; no meat, and twice as much maize flour as wheat flour. In Portugal, salt fish, vegetable soup, with oil or lard, and maize bread.

Further evidence as to the relative state of the bulk of the population of England is afforded by the ratio of its mortality.

The only countries in which the mortality appears to be so small as in England, are, Norway, in which it is $\frac{1}{34}$, and the Basses Pyrenées, in which it is $\frac{1}{50}$.* In all the other countries which have given returns it exceeds the English proportion, sometimes by doubling it, and in the majority of instances by more than one fourth.

A portion of our apparent superiority arises from the rapidity with which our population is increasing; but though the proportion of our births exceeds the average proportion of Europe, the difference as to births is small when compared with the difference as to deaths, and in a great part of the north of Europe and Germany the proportion of births is greater than our own, and therefore the longevity of the population still more inferior to that of England than it appears to be.

DOCUMENTS relatifs à l'état des Paysans de la Commune de Gaesbeck, dans la Province du Brabant en Belgique.

Arrivabene.

LETTRE adressée à Mr. N. W. Senior, l'un des Commissaires désignés par S. M. le Roi d'Angleterre pour l'Enquête relative à l'administration des Lois sur les Pauvres; par M. le Comte Arrivabene.

MONSIEUR,

VOICI les renseignemens sur l'état des paysans de la commune de Gaesbeck que je vous ai promis.

Je regrette de n'avoir pas pu vous en procurer qui s'étendissent à une partie plus grande de la Belgique; mais dans ce cas, je n'aurais pu vous envoyer que des généralités; tandis que de la peinture, aussi exacte que possible, d'une commune vous pourrez, par induction, vous former une idée de l'état des paysans Belges en général. Car si le génie des habitans, la qualité du sol, le voisinage ou l'éloignement des grandes routes et des villes, &c. sont des causes de différence entre l'état des paysans, si non de commune à commune, au moins de province à province, il n'est pas moins vrai que l'administration et les lois, étant les mêmes pour tous, doivent nécessairement adoucir cette différence, en établissant entr'eux certains rapports de conformité.

Pour me procurer ces renseignemens j'ai préparé à l'avance plusieurs demandes écrites, avec lesquelles je me suis rendu chez différentes personnes de la commune, et à mesure qu'elles me repondaient j'écrivais leurs réponses et leur adressais de nouvelles demandes. J'ai conservé à cette espèce d'enquête sa forme originale, parceque j'ai pensé qu'elle aurait ainsi un caractère plus frappant de vérité, que si je m'étais borné à m'en servir pour tracer un tableau qui n'aurait peut-être pas offert le même intérêt. Seulement lorsque j'ai eu un doute sur le fait énoncé dans la réponse, je l'ai mentionné dans une note, et j'ai placé aussi dans des notes les explications que j'ai jugé nécessaires, et que j'étais à même de donner.

En conservant à mon enquête sa forme primitive, j'ai aussi consulté votre intérêt, parceque j'ai lieu d'espérer que cet exemple sera suivi par quelques Belges habitans d'autres parties du pays, avec plus de succès que je n'ai pu en obtenir, vu ma qualité d'étranger: ce sera le moyen de recueillir des notions aussi exactes que possible sur l'état du peuple des campagnes en Belgique.

Beaucoup de personnes desirent améliorer le sort des classes laborieuses; fort peu connaissent l'état et les besoins de ces classes; fort peu aussi savent où est le mal, et quels seraient les moyens à employer pour y remédier. Chez vous le gouvernement fait les enquêtes, et il se procure des renseignemens assez exacts; mais sur le continent les gouvernemens réussissent très-difficilement à obtenir de tels renseignemens: les classes laborieuses, et, surtout les paysans, se méfient des gouvernemens; ils croient que lorsque ceux-ci veulent savoir quelque chose qui les concerne, c'est toujours pour les gréver de quelque charge nouvelle. Cette défiance est partout le résultat de l'expérience acquise pendant les dernières guerres; et quoique je pense que le gouvernement actuel de la Belgique soit bien intentionné, il lui faudra beaucoup de temps avant de parvenir à gagner la confiance des classes laborieuses. Ce ne sont que les citoyens zélés, jouissant de la considération et de l'affection des habitans des localités où ils demeurent, qui puissent recueillir des données exactes sur l'état de ces classes, et indiquer les moyens d'en améliorer le sort.

Je ne sais si vous trouverez que je suis entré dans des détails par trop minutieux, ou qu'au contraire je n'en ai pas donné assez. Quant à moi, j'aurais désiré m'étendre encore plus que je ne l'ai fait: ce n'est qu'ainsi que l'on peut se former une idée juste de l'état du peuple. Quelle connaissance plus intime n'aurions nous pas des générations qui nous ont précédé, si les écrivains nous avaient laissé une description détaillée de la manière de vivre des classes laborieuses! Mais j'ai craint de franchir les bornes de la curiosité de toucher à des matières trop délicates, de faire des demandes par trop inquisitoriales, et je me suis arrêté.

La principale raison qui vous a fait chercher à obtenir ces renseignemens, c'est le desir de comparer l'état des journaliers Belges avec celui des journaliers Anglais, et de tirer de cette comparaison des lumières pour l'œuvre d'humanité à laquelle vous vous êtes consacré.

 Count
 Arrivabene.

Si j'étais appelé à faire cette comparaison, en me prévalant du peu de connaissance de l'état des paysans Anglais et des paysans Belges, acquise pendant un séjour de quatre ans en Angleterre et de sept en Belgique, passés en grande partie à la campagne, je dirais ; qu'en Angleterre, là où il ne s'est pas introduit de grands abus dans l'administration des lois sur les pauvres, la somme des jouissances matérielles et intellectuelles des journaliers, est plus élevée qu'en Belgique, et que la moralité est à peu-près la même dans les deux pays ; mais que là où l'administration des lois sur les pauvres est abusive, là où tous les journaliers sont inscrits au nombre des individus qui participent à la taxe, bien que la somme des jouissances matérielles de ceux-ci soit supérieure encore à celle des journaliers Belges, bien qu'ils soient mieux logés, mieux nourris, mieux habillés que les derniers, leur moralité néanmoins est inférieure ; ils sont toujours mécontents de leur sort, tandis que les journaliers Belges ne s'en plaignent presque jamais. Il est vrai qu'un plus grand nombre de journaliers Belges que de journaliers Anglais possède une maison et un jardin, et loue un champ ; et l'on sait que la possession même de la moindre parcelle de terre, que l'avantage d'avoir quelque chose au soleil qui croit pour vous, pour votre propre compte, ouvrent une source de jouissances qui ne peut pas être évaluée en sous et deniers, et constituent en même temps un grand élément d'ordre dans la société. L'état des journaliers Belges est, en général, le résultat du cours naturel des choses, dans l'absence d'une cause perturbatrice telle que les lois sur les pauvres, et, pour chaque individu, c'est le résultat de sa propre conduite, et des circonstances au milieu desquelles il vit. En Belgique, point de salaire selon que l'homme est marié ou célibataire, selon qu'il a une famille nombreuse, ou peu ou point d'enfants ; l'homme laborieux est plus à son aise que le fainéant ; celui qui est surchargé de famille est plus pauvre que celui qui a peu d'enfants ; celui qui se conduit mal souffre plus de privations que celui qui a une bonne conduite ; le bonheur et le malheur planent sur la tête de tous, et la charité volontaire, libre, tend à redresser autant que possible les torts de la fortune.

Mais à quelles causes faut-il attribuer que la somme des jouissances matérielles et intellectuelles des journaliers Anglais soit supérieure à celle des journaliers Belges ? Vous, Monsieur, vous sauriez les découvrir mieux que moi. Il y en a sans doute plusieurs, qui s'enchainent, et dont il ne m'est pas donné de mesurer la profondeur. Voici toutefois le raisonnement que je fais.

La production générale, en proportion du nombre des habitans, est plus grande en Angleterre qu'en Belgique, et par conséquent la part des produits qui échoit à chaque individu est plus grande aussi. Cette supériorité de production en Angleterre est due à la perfection des machines et des instrumens, au mode de culture et de fabrication, et à un travail plus constant et mieux entendu : on a en Angleterre une opinion, exagérée sans doute, de la supériorité des ouvriers Anglais sur les ouvriers étrangers, mais il n'est pas moins vrai que l'ouvrier Anglais est le travailleur par excellence. Et finalement, la perfection des machines, et la supériorité du travail, sont le résultat du génie des habitans, et d'institutions libres, qui datent de long-temps.

Je pense toutefois que les procédés pour la fabrication en Belgique ne sont et ne peuvent pas être beaucoup inférieurs aux procédés Anglais ; car les fabricans sont forcés de les améliorer incessamment, s'ils ne veulent pas que la consommation de leurs produits soit remplacée par celle des produits étrangers ; et l'industrie manufacturière est de sa nature progressive. Et je pense au contraire, que la culture en Belgique, sous le rapport au moins des instrumens et du travail, est inférieure à la culture Anglaise. Les cultivateurs en général, par la difficulté que les consommateurs éprouvent à se procurer les denrées alimentaires à l'étranger, exercent un monopole qui les soustrait à la nécessité d'améliorer leur culture, il s'ensuit que l'agriculture est naturellement lente dans ses progrès. Il s'ensuit aussi, qu'en Belgique un plus grand nombre d'habitans est occupé aux travaux de l'agriculture qu'il ne serait nécessaire pour obtenir la quantité actuelle de produits agricoles ; et que par contre le nombre des ouvriers occupés dans les fabriques est moins considérable qu'il ne le serait avec une industrie manufacturière plus développée : de là une prépondérance de l'intérêt agricole sur l'intérêt manufacturier ; de là la lenteur dans les améliorations que l'on remarque dans tout le pays. Le contraire a lieu en Angleterre : la prépondérance de l'intérêt manufacturier y est en même-temps effet et cause de la prospérité générale. L'industrie manufacturière a besoin de voies de communications promptes et disséminées sur toute la surface du pays ; car elle produit sur un point des masses de produits, que doivent être consommés dans le reste du pays ; tandis que les produits agricoles, au moins les plus importants, tels que les denrées alimentaires, sont cultivés par tout, et n'ont besoin d'être transportés qu'à des petites distances. La route en fer entre Liverpool et Manchester n'aurait jamais été conçue ni exécutée dans un pays où l'intérêt manufacturier n'eût pas été prédominant. Mais si cette route fournit les moyens de transporter avec une rapidité étonnante le coton de Liverpool à Manchester, et facilite la production des étoffes de coton, elle profite aussi au fermier Irlandais, qui fait arriver avec la même rapidité et une grande économie ses vaches et ses porcs sur le marché de Manchester, et aux consommateurs qui obtiennent ainsi la viande à meilleur marché qu'auparavant.

Et les moyens prompts et multipliés de communication, résultat de la prépondérance de l'intérêt manufacturier, ont encore, sous d'autres rapports, une influence non moins bienfaisante. Ils excitent et facilitent le développement de la prospérité matérielle aussi-bien que celui de l'intelligence ; ils accélèrent le transport des marchandises aussi-bien que l'échange des idées et des connaissances utiles, et ces idées et ces connaissances se transforment bientôt en produits matériels. Sans ces communications promptes et multipliées aurait-on en Angleterre des villages si propres, des maisonnettes de paysans si bien bâties, avec ces fleurs qui en décorent l'entrée, luxe des campagnes, et qui semble dire dire que le nécessaire ne manque pas à ceux qui les habitent? Les écoles, et les cabinets de lecture seraient-ils si nombreux? Y aurait-il dans les caisses d'épargne, en dépit de la manière dont on administre les lois sur les pauvres, et de la peine que ces lois accordent à l'imprévoyance, 15 millions de livres sterling? En Belgique aussi, si vous suivez les grandes routes, vous trouvez plusieurs de ces bonnes choses, mais aussitôt que vous vous enfoncez dans les chemins de terre, véritables barrières élevées contre la civilisation, tout change d'aspect et de nature. Le voisinage d'une chaussée permet de se procurer de bons matériaux à bon marché; par suite les maisons sont bien bâties, et on les assure; il facilite l'arrivage de la houille, et offre un débouché aux produits agricoles; il offre souvent aussi le moyen d'envoyer les enfans à l'école, et d'échanger les idées et les connaissances; tandis que les chemins de terre condamnent les paysans à avoir des maisons de bois couvertes de paille, à se mal chauffer, à se passer des choses les plus utiles, et à croupir dans une ignorance, à laquelle ne remédie qu'imparfaitement la parole des ministres de la religion.

L'idée de donner à l'intérêt manufacturier une prépondérance sur l'intérêt agricole effraie beaucoup de monde, à cause des vicissitudes auxquelles l'industrie des fabriques a été souvent exposée. Certes, un pays, ayant un sol fertile, ferait une folie s'il en laissait une partie en friche, pour avantager l'intérêt manufacturier aux dépenses de l'intérêt agricole. Mais ne serait-il pas également absurde de s'obstiner à se servir pour la culture d'instrumens imparfaits, et d'y employer une plus grande somme de travail qu'elle ne l'exige, afin de pouvoir se dire plutôt pays agricole que pays manufacturier? Une population agricole, qui produit toutes les denrées nécessaires à l'alimentation de la totalité de la population du pays, est dans tous les cas obligée d'échanger les produits qu'elle ne consomme pas contre les produits des manufactures; et la base qui sert de fondement à l'industrie manufacturière est, sous ce rapport, toute aussi solide que celle de l'agriculture même.

L'enchaînement des causes qui a amené la supériorité de la production Anglaise sur la production Belge est en train de se développer aussi en Belgique, et il n'y a pas de doute que l'état des paysans Belges, et des classes laborieuses en général ne s'améliorera encore.

J'ai l'honneur de me dire,

Votres très-humble serviteur,

J. Arrivabene.

Bruxelles, le 13 Décembre 1833.

DOCUMENTS relatifs à l'état des Paysans de la Commune de Gaesbeck, dans la Province du Brabant en Belgique.

1. COMBIEN de bonniers y a-t-il dans la commune?—La commune contient 357 bonniers*; deux tiers sont des terres labourables, l'autre tiers des bois et des pâturages. Les habitans de Gaesbeck en cultivent en outre presque autant hors de la commune.

2. Y a-t-il des habitans d'autres communes qui cultivent des terres dans celle-ci?—Il n'y a qu'un fermier d'une autre commune que laboure quelques bonniers dans celle-ci.

3. Quel est le nombre des fermes, quelle en est l'étendue en prenant une moyenne proportionnelle?—Il y a 13 fermes de 12 jusqu'à 60 bonniers, et qui sont labourées avec 2 jusqu'à 9 chevaux.

4. Quel est le nombre actuel d'habitans divisé par sexe et par profession?—Le nombre d'habitans est de 364, savoir, 189 du sexe masculin et 175 du sexe féminin, répartis en 60 ménages, de la manière suivante: 13 familles de fermiers occupant les 13 fermes susmentionnées; 18 familles de petits propriétaires et de petits fermiers; 21 familles de journaliers, et 8 familles d'artisans.

5. Quelles professions les 8 artisans exercent-ils?—Il y a un maréchal, 2 maçons, 1 menuisier, 1 charpentier, 1 couvreur, 1 tonnelier, et 1 tailleur; presque tous ces artisans possèdent ou louent un champ, et l'été travaillent à la moisson.

6. Les 60 ménages ont-ils chacun une maison?—Autant de ménages autant de maisons.

7. Quel était le nombre d'habitans il y a 20 ans?—La différence entre le nombre actuel des habitans et celui d'il y a 20 ans est très-petite; je ne saurais pas cependant la préciser.

8. Mais, selon le tableau que voici, le nombre de naissances depuis 1810 jusqu'à 1832 a été de beaucoup supérieur au nombre de décès. De 1830 à 1832 seulement il y a eu 34 naissances et 20 décès. Il devrait y avoir par conséquent une augmentation de population assez sensible?—Cela est vrai.

9. A quoi attribuez-vous cet état presque stationnaire dans la population ?—A la loi sur la milice qui enlève beaucoup de jeunes gens, et à la difficulté que les paysans éprouvent à se procurer des maisons et les moyens de s'établir.

10. Cet état stationnaire ne pourrait-il par être attribué à ce que plusieurs individus de la commune sont allés s'établir dans d'autres communes, où ils avaient l'espoir de trouver plus facilement des maisons et des moyens de s'établir ?—C'est bien possible.

11. Le chiffre de la population résulte-t-il d'un recensement ancien ou d'un nouveau ?—Le chiffre résulte du recensement de 1830.

12. S'il y a eu si peu de variation dans le nombre d'habitans il y aura eu aussi très-peu de nouvelles maisons bâties; en avez-vous vu bâtir ?—Je n'ai jamais vu bâtir de nouvelles maisons dans la commune, mais j'en ai vu réparer et améliorer plusieurs.

13. Vous semble-t-il qu'il y ait augmentation d'habitans dans les communes voisines ?—Il me semble qu'oui.

14. Y avez-vous vu bâtir de nouvelles maisons ?—Oui.

15. Y a-t-il beaucoup de propriétaires qui demeurent dans la commune ?—Les petits propriétaires demeurent presque tous dans la commune; parmi les grands il n'y a que le marquis d'Arconati qui passe une partie de l'année à son château.

16. De

16. De quelle manière les petits propriétaires et les petits fermiers labourent-ils leurs terres ?—Les petits propriétaires et les petits fermiers font labourer leurs terres par la charrue des grands fermiers, et les labourent eux-mêmes avec leurs familles à la bêche.

17. Travaillent-ils jamais chez les grands fermiers ?—Jamais.

18. Les grands fermiers sont-ils en même-temps propriétaires ?—Plusieurs d'entre eux possèdent quelques bonniers de terre.

19. Comment vivent les petits propriétaires et les petits fermiers ; leur état est-il beaucoup meilleur que celui des journaliers ?—Il est tant soit peu meilleur que celui des journaliers ; sous certains rapports il est meilleur que celui des grands fermiers, parcequ'ils ont moins de soucis.

20. Les produits de leurs terres sont-ils proportionnellement plus abondans et plus beaux que ceux des terres des grands fermiers ?—Les produits des terres des petits propriétaires et des petits fermiers sont un peu moins abondans et moins beaux que ceux des terres des grands fermiers ; la raison en est simple ; ils ne peuvent faire labourer leurs terres par la charrue qu'après que les fermiers ont achevé leurs travaux, et souvent c'est hors de saison ; s'ils les labourent à la bêche le travail est grand, ils ne le font que superficiellement, et ne détruisent pas les mauvaises herbes ; outre cela ils manquent de fumier et n'achètent pas de la chaux.

21. A combien peut-on évaluer le capital que les fermiers emploient dans l'exploitation d'une ferme, en raison du nombre de bonniers qu'elle contient ?—Si l'on tient compte des chevaux, des vaches, des charriots, de l'argent destiné aux salaires et de tant d'autres choses nécessaires à l'exploitation d'une ferme, je pense que l'on peut évaluer le capital d'un fermier approximativement de 160 à 200 francs par bonnier.

24. Les maisons qu'habitent les journaliers sont-elles en général leur propriété ainsi que les petits jardins y attenant, ou louent-ils les unes et les autres ?—Les maisons et les jardins leur appartiennent généralement.

25. Quel est le prix du loyer d'une maison de journalier et d'un jardin ?—Le loyer d'une petite maison et d'un très-petit jardin est de 30 francs par an.

26. Quels impôts paye un journalier pour une maison et pour son jardin ?—L'impôt direct et celui des portes et fenêtres.

27. A quoi cela monte-t-il ?—Le plus petit ménage paye à peu-près 12 francs par an.

28. Toutes les maisons quelque misérables qu'elles soient payent-elles l'impôt des portes et fenêtres ?—Il y en a 11 qui en sont exemptées.

29. Avec quels matériaux les maisons sont-elles bâties, et comment sont-elles distribuées intérieurement ?—Les maisons sont faites de bois avec un peu de fer, d'argile et couvertes de paille. Elle n'ont qu'un seul étage, composé d'une cuisine et d'une ou deux chambres ; une grange, une écurie et un four sont annexés à chaque maison.

30. Les journaliers assurent-ils leurs habitations contre l'incendie, ou trouvent-ils d'une autre manière un dédomagement pour ce cas ?—Ils ne les assurent pas ; il y a même très-peu de fermes assurées dans la commune. Lorsqu'une maison de journalier est la proie de l'incendie, son propriétaire reçoit un certificat du bourguemestre qui constate le fait ; le cure et les principaux fermiers signent aussi le certificat. Muni de cette pièce authentique il parcourt le pays, pendant deux ou trois mois ; il se présente aux personnes aisées et il en reçoit des aumônes. Dans une commune comme celle-ci un homme qui aurait eu sa maison brûlée pourrait recueillir une vingtaine de francs. Toute la tournée pourrait lui rapporter à peu-près 400 francs.

31. Les incendies sont-ils fréquens dans la commune ?—Ils sont très-rares.

32. Que recueillent les journaliers dans leurs jardins ?—Différentes sortes de légumes, du tabac, et du houblon.

33. Quel usage font-ils du tabac ?—Ils le consomment eux-mêmes.

34. Et du houblon ?—Ils le vendent en grande partie.

35. Qu'en tirent-ils année courante ?—De 20 à 30 francs.

36. De combien d'individus est généralement composée une famille ?—De 5 à 6.

37. Lorsqu'une famille est composée de plusieurs individus d'âge et de sexe différens, couchent-ils tous dans la même chambre ?—Les familles plus pauvres ont une très-petite maison qui n'a qu'une cuisine et une chambre ; et alors tous les individus qui la composent couchent dans la même chambre.

38. Les familles des journaliers déménagent-elles souvent ?—Bien rarement.

39. Tout étranger peut-il venir s'établir librement dans la commune, et tout habitant aller s'établir ailleurs ?—Il le peut ; il est obligé seulement d'avoir un passeport délivré dans la commune qu'il a quittée, et d'être muni d'un certificat de bonne conduite.

40. Cela a-t-il lieu souvent ?—Cela arrive souvent, à la mi-juillet, époque à laquelle on change les domestiques.

Arrivabene.

41. Combien compte-t-on d'habitans de la commune dans l'armée?—Dans ce moment, un certain nombre de miliciens ayant été congédié, il n'y en a que 7.

42. Lorsque les soldats rentrent dans leurs foyers, quelle est leur conduite sous le rapport du travail, et des mœurs?—Leur conduite est très-bonne; je crois qu'ils sont les meilleurs travailleurs; l'état militaire les dégourdit.

43. A quel âge les enfans se séparent-ils ordinairement de leurs parens?—De 14 à 18 ans pour se placer en qualité de domestiques et de servantes chez les fermiers.

44. Les filles vont-elles comme servantes dans les villes voisines?—Très-rarement.

45. A quel âge se marie-t-on généralement?—De 20 à 30 ans.

46. Comment se forme l'établissement d'une nouvelle famille?—Les garçons font des épargnes pendant le temps qu'ils restent chez les fermiers. S'ils n'ont pas hérité de maison de leurs parens, et n'en trouvent pas à louer, ils achètent en louent un petit champ pour y bâtir une maison, qu'ils entourent d'un jardin.

47. Pensez-vous que si les jeunes gens ne trouvaient pas un obstacle au mariage dans leur pauvreté, et si la commune leur donnait les moyens de s'établir, ils ne se marieraient pas plutôt qu'ils ne font, sans songer à l'avenir?—Il n'y a pas le moindre doute qu'ils se marieraient plus-tôt.

48. Et si la commune était obligée de leur procurer du travail lorsqu'ils en manquent, que ce soit par leur faute ou non, de leur donner un supplément de salaire lorsque celui qu'ils gagnent est jugé insuffisant, et d'en donner un plus élevé aux mariés qu'aux célibataires, et en proportion du nombre de leurs enfans, ne pensez-vous pas qu'alors les paysans se marieraient plus facilement encore, et qu'ils deviendraient plus exigeans et moins rangés?—A présent lorsqu'un journalier manque de travail il en cherche avec beaucoup d'empressement; dans le cas supposé il ne le ferait pas. Il n'y a pas de doute que si la commune venait ainsi à l'aide des paysans, ceux-ci ne se mariassent plus facilement encore, et ne devissent plus exigeans et moins rangés.

49. Combien de terre un paysan qui veut s'établir achète-t-il généralement et à quel prix?—Il achète de 50 à 100 verges qu'il paye à raison de 6 à 20 francs la verge, selon la position et la qualité du terrain*.

50. Dans le cas où il loue la terre, combien en loue-t-il, et à quelles conditions?—Il en loue de 50 à 100 verges pour 49 ans, et en paye le loyer à raison de 40 à 120 francs le bonnier.

51. Le terme de 49 ans expiré à qui reste la maison?—La maison est évaluée, et le propriétaire en rembourse le prix au locataire.

52. Lorsque le père meurt et qu'il laisse plusieurs enfans, comment ceux-ci s'arrangent-ils pour partager le petit héritage?—Dans ce cas ils vendent la petite propriété, et en partagent le prix, ou bien un des héritiers la garde et paye peu-à-peu aux autres leur part.

53. Ne vous semble-t-il pas que d'une part on bâtit mieux maintenant les maisons qu'autrefois, et que de l'autre les jardins qui entourent les maisons deviennent plus petits?—On bâtit mieux sans doute et dans des endroits plus sains et plus élevés; anciennement on plaçait les maisons dans les fonds, parceque l'on ne savait pas se procurer l'eau sur les hauteurs; les jardins sont plus petits parceque le terrain est plus cher.

54. Les filles font-elles aussi des épargnes, et aident-elles leurs maris en s'établissant?—En proportion du salaire qu'elles reçoivent elles font plus d'épargnes que les garçons, parcequ'elles blanchissent et font d'autres ouvrages pour elles-mêmes; elles mettent ordinairement leurs épargnes en commun avec leurs maris futurs pour l'établissement du nouveau ménage.

55. Les paysans connaissent-ils l'existence des caisses d'épargnes à Bruxelles? ont-ils confiance en elles, y placent-ils leurs épargnes?—Ils ne connaissent pas l'existence des caisses d'épargnes; ils n'y auraient pas confiance; ils sont très-soigneux de leurs épargnes qu'ils gardent aux-mêmes.

56. Y a-t-il des journaliers mariés qui fassent des épargnes?—Il y a bien peu de journaliers qui fassent des épargnes, parcequ'ils sont la plupart surchargés de famille.

57. Combien coûte une maison à bâtir?—De 500 à 600 francs.

58. Les journaliers ont-ils généralement une vache et un cochon?—En général ils ont une vache, un cochon et des poules.

59. Combien coûte une vache?—De 140 à 160 francs.

60. Consomment-ils dans leur ménage tout le produit de la vache, ou en vendent-ils une partie ou le tout?—Ils vendent le veau et le beurre, consomment le lait, et font du fromage pour leur propre usage.

61. Vendent-ils le cochon lorsqu'il est gras ou le consomment-ils eux-mêmes?—Il achètent un jeune cochon pour 8 ou 10 francs, l'engraissent, en vendent la moitié pour 40 ou 50 francs; salent l'autre moitié et la consomment dans leur ménage; ils en ont pour six mois.

62. Les journaliers louent-ils un champ?—Sur 29 ménages de journaliers et artisans il y en a 18 qui louent un champ.

63. Quelle est la cause pour laquelle 11 ménages ne louent pas de terre?—La cause principale est leur pauvreté, et la cause de leur pauvreté est généralement leur inconduite. Outre cela ils n'ont pas d'énergie, et ils n'inspirent pas de confiance à ceux qui ont des terres à louer. N'ayant pas de terre ils n'ont souvent ni vaches ni cochons.

64. Les journaliers louent-ils les champs directement du propriétaire ou du fermier?—Directement du propriétaire. Les propriétaires ont un receveur; celui-ci lorsqu'il a à louer un un champ le fait afficher et le loue au plus offrant, si toutefois c'est une personne qui lui convienne.

65. Y a-t-il une grande concurrence entre les journaliers pour louer ces champs, et par suite le propriétaire réussit-il à les louer plus cher qu'aux fermiers?—La concurrence est grande. Les propriétaires aiment à louer leurs terres en petits lots parcequ'ils les louent ainsi plus cher.

66. De quelle étendue sont ces champs?—Les propriétaires louent rarement aux journaliers un champ qui outre passe en étendue un bonnier. Les premiers n'auraient pas assez de confiance dans la solvabilité des second, pour leur louer une plus grande étendue de terrain.

67. Remarque-t-on que les champs soient d'une étendue telle que les journaliers puissent les cultiver sans nuire à leur propre intérêt, comme journaliers?—Je crois que dans cette commune un journalier aidé de sa famille peut cultiver avec avantage un bonnier, parceque la terre est très-facile à travailler; il a assez d'engrais chez lui pour fumer convenablement son champ*.

68. A quelles conditions ont-ils un champ?—Les journaliers payent généralement de 60 à 80 francs par an pour un bonnier, et l'ont pour 9 ans.

69. Les journaliers tiennent-ils beaucoup à louer un champ?—Beaucoup. Ceux qui ne louent pas de terre sont considérés comme bien pauvres, et ils le sont en réalité; lorsqu'on veut dire qu'une famille est très-pauvre, on dit, qu'elle n'a pas de terre.

70. Les fermiers sont-ils contraires à ce que les journaliers louent des champs?—Les fermiers n'aiment pas beaucoup que les journaliers louent des champs, parceque ceux-ci se refusent dans certains momens, à cause des travaux qu'ils ont à exécuter sur leurs propres champs, à travailler chez les fermiers, et parcequ'ils craignent que les journaliers ne leur enlèvent des denrées en les faisant passer pour celles qu'ils ont récoltées eux-mêmes.

71. Les fermiers labourent-ils avec leurs charrues les champs des journaliers, et à quelles conditions?—Quelquefois. La journée de deux chevaux, d'une charrue et d'un domestique, est à peu-près de 8 francs; mais si un fermier donne pour une journée, ou une demi-journée, sa charrue à un journalier qui travaille ordinairement dans sa ferme, il ne lui fait payer que moitié prix.

72. Les journaliers que sèment-ils dans leurs champs?—Un peu de lin, et quelquefois un peu de tabac; mais le tabac est planté d'ordinaire dans le jardin; du froment, du seigle, de l'avoine, des pommes de terre, et des trèfles. Les fermiers plantent des colzas, les journaliers jamais.

73. Ces produits sont-ils proportionnellement plus abondans et plus beaux que ceux des fermes, ou est-ce le contraire?—Ils sont tant soit peu moins abondans et moins beaux pour les mêmes raisons que j'ai données plus haut.

74. Comment les journaliers disposent-ils des produits de leurs champs?—Ils en consomment la plus grande partie eux-mêmes; ils vendent le froment et achètent du seigle pour en faire du pain, parcequ'ils ne mangent que du pain de seigle.

75. Qui paye l'impôt foncier?—Toujours le fermier, soit grand, soit petit, soit journalier.

76. Les journaliers payent-ils aisément et régulièrement leurs loyers?—Selon la qualité du terrain et le prix du loyer, et selon qu'ils sont surchargés ou non de famille.

77. Quel est le taux des salaires?—Douze sous de France par jour; outre cela quelques fermiers donnent du café et du pain et du beurre le matin, et tous de la bière dans la journée: de manière que tout compris on peut porter la journée du journalier à 14 sous. Ceux qui font travailler des hommes qu'ils n'emploient pas ordinairement chez eux, et ne leur font pas faire la moisson, payent 2 sous de plus.

78. Y a-t-il une variation dans les salaires en hausse ou en baisse depuis quelques années, ou leur taux est-il le même depuis long-temps?—Depuis un temps immémorial ce taux n'a pas varié: mais lorsqu'il y a beaucoup de jeunes gens à l'armée, comme c'était le cas l'année dernière, les fermiers, manquant de domestiques, emploient en place de ceux-ci des journaliers, et ils leur donnent 8 sous par jour et la nourriture; ce qui fait monter le salaire de 14 sous à 18 ou 20, la nourriture ne pouvant pas être calculée à moins de 10 ou 12 sous.

79. Y a-t-il quelque différence dans le prix des salaires dans les diverses saisons de l'année?—Il n'y en a aucune.

80. De combien d'heures se compose la journée de travail l'été, et de combien l'hiver?—L'été la journée commence à 6 heures du matin et finit à 6 heures du soir; l'hiver elle commence à 7 heures du matin et finit à 5 heures du soir; il y a 2 heures et $\frac{1}{2}$ de repos dans la journée l'été, et 2 heures l'hiver.

81. De quelle manière les fermiers payent-ils les salaires, chaque jour ou chaque semaine; en nature ou en argent?—En argent le plus souvent. Quelquefois le fermier donne en paiement aux journaliers du seigle ou quelque autre denrée. Les salaires se payent chaque semaine.

* Les champs que louent les journaliers sont ordinairement assez éloignés de leurs habitations. Comme les journaliers n'ont pas de chevaux, ils perdent beaucoup de temps à transporter chez eux les récoltes et à porter les engrais sur leurs champs; ce qui est encore plus pénible, ils s'attachent eux-mêmes à la herse avec leurs femmes et leurs enfans. Mais dans l'état actuel des choses il serait encore pire que les journaliers ne louassent pas des terres. Ce n'est qu'avec l'augmentation des capitaux et de l'industrie du pays, l'élévation du taux des salaires, la diffusion de l'instruction, que l'on pourra espérer de voir s'améliorer l'économie de l'exploitation des champs des journaliers, et de voir cesser un travail aussi dégradant pour des êtres humains.

82. Les fermiers ne donnent-ils jamais de l'ouvrage à la tâche aux journaliers ? Remarque-t-on que dans ce cas les journaliers travaillent d'avantage et gagnent plus que lorsqu'ils travaillent à la journée ?—Il n'y a que la moisson qui se fasse toujours à la tâche, et quelquefois la coupe du foin. A cette occasion le paysan travaille plus qu'à l'ordinaire et gagne d'avantage.

83. Lorsqu'un journalier fait la moisson chez un fermier, reçoit-il une partie de la moisson en paiement de son travail ? En ce cas, dans quelle proportion se partage la moisson ?—Il reçoit en paiement une partie de la moisson. A chaque 25 gerbes, 24 sont pour le fermier, et une pour l'homme qui fait la moisson ; celui-ci a en outre le droit de glaner avec sa famille*.

84. Et lorsqu'il coupe le foin, comment est-il payé ?—Il reçoit de 45 à 50 sous le bonnier, et de la bière.

85. Le fermier en prenant un journalier, préfère-t-il l'homme marié ou le célibataire ?—Le fermier préfère l'homme qui travaille le plus et le mieux.

86. A mérite égal a-t-il l'habitude de donner un salaire plus élevé à l'homme marié ?—A mérite égal le fermier donne le même salaire à l'homme marié qu'au célibataire ; il ne pourrait pas faire autrement, car le célibataire ne voudrait pas travailler pour un moindre prix.

87. Quel est le salaire d'une femme, quel est celui d'un enfant ?—Une femme a 12 sous l'été et 10 l'hiver ; un enfant de même, mais ils n'ont ni café ni bière.

88. Combien de journées fait ordinairement un homme dans une année chez un fermier ?—Si on décompte les fêtes, et les 20 ou 30 jours que le journalier consacre à son champ, le reste du temps il travaille chez le fermier. Il donne en outre à son champ et son jardin quelques instants le matin et le soir de chaque jour.

89. Quel est le nombre de jours dans l'année que les paysans ont l'habitude de fêter ?—

Dimanches - - - - -	-	-	-	-	52
Fêtes obligées outre les dimanches	-	-	-	-	4
Fêtes non obligées, mais observées	-	-	-	-	11
Total - - -					67

Outre cela les paysans ne travaillent pas le lundi et une partie du mardi qui suivent le jour de la Kermesse, ou fête du village ; dans cette commune il n'y a qu'une Kermesse par an, mais dans d'autres il y en a deux*.

90. Combien de journées fait une femme dans une année, combien un enfant ?—Les femmes et les enfans en font à peu-près 50 ou 60 dans l'année.

91. Les journaliers s'engagent-ils chez les fermiers pour un temps déterminé, semaine, mois, année ?—Les journaliers s'engagent chez un fermier pour un an.

92. Les fermiers gardent-ils pendant long-temps les mêmes individus, ou les changent-ils souvent ?—Les bons fermiers et les bons journaliers restent ensemble bien long-temps.

93. Y a-t-il dans la commune plus de laboureurs que n'exige la bonne exploitation des fermes, ou y en a-t-il moins ?—Il y a le nombre justement suffisant.

94. Les journaliers ordinaires habitant dans la commune, suffisent-ils au temps de la moisson ?—Ils suffisent, y compris le peu d'artisans.

95. Cela tient-il à la variété des produits dont la récolte se fait à différentes époques ?—Oui.

96. Combien de laboureurs pense-t-on qu'il faille pour la bonne culture d'une ferme, en raison des bonniers dont elle se compose ?—C'est difficile à préciser. Je pense cependant que l'on peut calculer que l'on emploie réellement un laboureur pour 5 bonniers ; et ce nombre est ce qu'il faut, en considérant la nature des fermes que les habitans de la commune cultivent.

97. Bruxelles n'est qu'à 3 lieues de Gaesbeck, et c'est une ville où l'on bâtit beaucoup, et où il y a des manufactures : voit-on que des journaliers de la commune soient attirés en ville par le prix plus élevé des salaires, et que, de journaliers, ils deviennent manœuvres, ou ouvriers dans les manufactures ?—Cela n'arrive pas souvent, parceque les habitans de cette commune n'ont pas les dispositions naturelles et nécessaires à ce changement d'état. Je connais toutefois des journaliers qui sont allés en ville tenir cabaret, qui ont fait fortune et sont devenus brasseurs.

98. A ressources égales, existe-t-il une grande différence entre le bien être d'une famille et celui d'une autre, et cette différence ne doit-on pas l'attribuer surtout à la bonne ou mauvaise conduite du chef de la famille ?—A la conduite du mari et de la femme.

99. Y a-t-il beaucoup de familles en mauvais état à cause de leur mauvaise conduite, d'excès dans la boisson, paresse, &c. ?—Il y en a plusieurs.

100. De quoi se compose le mobilier d'une famille de journaliers ?—De lits en proportion du nombre des individus qui composent la famille, quelques chaises, tables, de la poterie, &c.

101. De

* Dans l'état stationnaire du taux des salaires des journaliers, il est très-avantageux pour eux de recevoir en payement de leur travail une partie de la moisson, parceque de la sorte le salaire augmente naturellement avec l'augmentation du prix des grains.

† La Kermesse est la fête du patron de l'église de la commune.

101. De quoi est fait le lit ?—Le lit est en bois ; le mari et la femme ont un matelas en laine, ou bourré de plumes ; les enfans n'ont que des paillasses ; les draps sont de grosse toile de lin, et les couvertures de laine.

102. A combien peut-on évaluer le mobilier d'une famille de journaliers ?—Le mobilier d'une famille de journaliers, en des circonstances ordinaires, peut être évalué à 200 francs.

103. De quoi se compose la nourriture ?—Le matin de bonne heure du café au lait avec très-peu ou point de sucre, et du pain (de seigle) ; à 9 heures, du pain avec du beurre, ou du fromage, ou de la graisse ; à midi, du lard et des pommes de terre, ou des carottes, &c. ; et le soir, de la salade et du pain.

104. De quelle boisson fait-on usage ?—D'une très-petite bière que les paysans brassent eux-mêmes ; ceux qui ont plus de moyens en achètent aussi chez les brasseurs ; ils la payent de 8 à 16 francs le tonneau de 220 litres.

105. Y a-t-il quelque différence dans la manière de se nourrir des paysans entre le présent et le passé ?—Il y a évidemment de la différence en mieux ; leur table est aussi servie avec plus de propreté ; je me rappelle d'avoir vu des familles manger sans fourchettes ; cela n'a pas lieu à présent, pas même chez les plus pauvres.

107. Que brûle-t-on pour avoir de la lumière ?—De l'huile de colza, ou de graine de lin.

108. Quels sont les vêtemens des paysans ? Que dependent-ils chaque année en vêtemens ?—Voici quels sont les vêtemens qu'un journalier use à peu-près en une année, et leur prix :

1 Sarrau en toile bleue	-	-	-	-	-	6 fr.
2 Chemises de grosse toile de lin	-	-	.	-	-	12
1 Pantalon de futaine ou de drap	-	-	-	-	-	7

1 Cravate	-	-	-	-	-	1
2 Mouchoirs pour les jours de fêtes	-	-	-	-	-	2
Total, francs						52, 10

Si l'on considère toutefois qu'après une année une partie de ces vêtemens peut servir aux enfans, on peut porter la dépense annuelle d'un laboureur en vêtemens à 35 francs. Les femmes portent tous les jours des robes de laine, et des robes de coton le dimanche, un bonnet de couleur tous les jours, et un bonnet blanc le dimanche avec un mouchoir de coton sur la tête, ou un mantelet d'étoffe de coton. On peut évaluer la dépense de l'habillement des femmes et de celui des enfans à la moitié de celui des hommes. Les hommes ont toujours du linge propre le dimanche. Hommes, femmes et enfans portent également des souliers les jours de fête, et ne vont jamais à l'église en sabots.

109. Y a-t-il de la différence dans la manière de s'habiller des paysans entre le présent et le passé ?—Les paysans sont mieux habillés maintenant qu'ils ne l'étaient autrefois ; les étoffes sont à meilleur marché.

110. Les familles fabriquent-elles la toile ou d'autres étoffes elles-mêmes ?—Elles filent le lin qu'elles recueillent sur leur champ, et font faire de la toile à des tisserands hors de la commune ; c'est avec cette toile qu'elles se fournissent le linge†.

111. La

* L'habitude que les paysans ont de recueillir du bois sur les propriétés d'autrui est si invétérée, que les propriétaires ne pourraient par les en empêcher. Le dégât que les paysans font aux propriétés est supérieur à la valeur du bois qu'ils recueillent ; le temps qu'ils perdent ainsi est grand, mais leurs besoins sont si pressans, qu'ils ne pourraient pas faire autrement ; et quant au temps, dans la distribution actuelle du travail dans le pays, ce n'est pas chose bien précieuse à la campagne.

† J'ai voulu vous mettre sous les yeux le budget de la recette et de la dépense de la famille d'un journalier, mais je n'ai pu me procurer que le budget suivant qui est très-incomplet.

Pour une famille de 6 individus ; le père, la mère, une fille de 18 ans, deux garçons, un de 17 et l'autre de 13 ans, et un enfant de 6 ans :

111. La commune a-t-elle des fonds pour les pauvres ? De quelle somme peut-elle disposer en aumône chaque année, et comment et par qui la somme est-elle dépensée ?— La commune a des terres et des capitaux exclusivement destinés au soulagement des pauvres. Ces terres et ces capitaux rapportent 566 francs par an.* Il y a un bureau de bienfaisance composé de 5 membres, proposés par le conseil communal, et approuvés par le gouverneur de la province. Le curé est toujours du nombre, et c'est lui qui ordinairement distribue les aumônes, et rend compte à ses collègues de sa gestion. Voici un tableau qui montre le nombre des pauvres qui ont été secourus dans l'année 1832, la manière dont ils l'ont été, et la qualité du secours que chacun a reçu.

On n'y a pas compris les pommes de terres récoltés sur le champ, ni la moitié d'un porc, ni le lait, ni les produits du jardin, &c. En évaluant tout cela à 200 fr., et en ajoutant cette somme à la recette, et en portant une somme égale à la dépense, la recette totale de la famille monterait à 840 fr.; la dépense à 898. Mais tout cela est très-inexact, et je n'ai donné cette esquisse de budget que faute de mieux. J'aurais désiré aussi offrir un aperçu de ce que coûte à un journalier le champ qu'il loue, et de ce qu'il en retire, pour voir quel est le profit net, mais le malheureux essai du budget m'a découragé.

* Cette somme doit vous paraître bien modique; 566 francs pour 366 habitans! Il y a surement des paroisses chez vous qui dépensent autant de guinées qu'elles ont d'habitans. Mais dans ce pays-ci cette commune passe pour bien dotée en fonds pour les pauvres. Le curé d'une commune voisine écrivit dernièrement à M. d'Arconati, qu'un journalier avait perdu sa vache; que la commune n'avait que 250 francs pour les pauvres; et que pour fournir au journalier les moyens d'acheter une vache, sans laquelle lui et sa famille auraient été dans la plus grande détresse, il avait prêté 73 francs au pauvre homme, et que cette somme il l'avait prise sur des fonds destinés à l'entretien de l'église; il demandait à M. d'Arconati un secours pour en opérer le remboursement. Voilà comment les affaires des pauvres se traitent dans ce pays-ci.

112. Les aumônes que l'on recueille dans l'église sont-elles destinées en partie au soulagement des pauvres?—Les aumônes que l'on recueille dans l'église sont ordinairement destinées à l'entretien de l'église. Toutefois si l'état des pauvres l'exigeait le curé ferait une quête dans l'église pour eux. Ici cela ne se pratique pas, parcequ'on n'en éprouve pas le besoin. L'on fait quelquefois des quêtes pour des malheurs arrivés dans d'autres communes, comme incendies, inondations, &c. Cela a eu lieu l'année passée dans toutes les communes du royaume à cause de l'inondation des polders ; mais il faut pour ce genre de quêtes l'autorisation de M. l'Archevêque de Malines.

113. Lorsque la commune a épuisé tous les fonds qu'elle avait pour les pauvres, et qu'il reste des individus dans une grande misère, la charité privée vient-elle suffisamment à leur secours?—En proportion de la population de la commune la somme à dépenser en secours aux pauvres est assez forte. Après cela le bureau de bienfaisance a toujours à peu-près une année de rente en réserve, et si les circonstances l'exigeaient, il pourrait obtenir de son receveur quelques avances. Si toutes ces ressources n'étaient pas suffisantes, les fermiers, et les propriétaires demeurans dans la commune, se cotiseraient volontairement pour empêcher tout désordre, et garantir leurs propriétés. Il y a bien des communes qui n'ont pas de fonds pour les pauvres, et où l'on s'arrange de cette manière ; l'autorité supérieure les engage à cela, mais ne les y force pas.

114. Les propriétaires qui ne demeurent pas dans la commune concourent-ils de quelque manière au maintien des pauvres?—Ils n'y concourent d'aucune manière.

115. Voit-on des journaliers dans des circonstances relativement aisées venir au secours de ceux qui sont dans la détresse?—Les journaliers savent que la commune a des fonds pour les pauvres, et ils pensent que c'est à elle et aux riches qu'il appartient de secourir les pauvres : je crois cependant qu'il arrive quelquefois que les journaliers dans une situation relativement bonne donnent quelques secours à ceux qui sont dans la détresse.

116. Y a-t-il jamais eu des cas d'individus morts d'inanition?—Jamais un cas semblable n'est arrivé, et ce serait chose impossible. Si l'on savait qu'il y eut un individu prêt à mourir d'inanition tout le monde irait à son secours.

117. Arrive-t-il que des pauvres viennent s'établir dans cette commune à cause des fonds dont elle dispose pour leur soulagement?—Cela n'arrive pas, parceque le bureau de bienfaisance ne donne généralement des secours qu'aux familles établies dans la commune depuis 5 ans : avant ce temps elles les reçoivent de la commune qu'elles ont quittée.

118. Les pauvres ont-ils un droit, croient-ils avoir un droit à être secourus? reçoivent-ils les secours avec reconnaissance?—Comme les fonds pour les pauvres ont été legués à la commune pour les pauvres, il s'en suit que ceux-ci ont un droit à les recevoir. Je ne sais pas ce que les pauvres pensent, mais ils reçoivent les secours que le bureau croit convenable de leur donner, avec reconnaissance.

119. Ne pensez-vous pas que s'il y avait plus de fonds pour les pauvres il y aurait plus de pauvres qui demanderaient des secours?—Je pense que les postulans ne manqueraient pas.

120. La mendicité est-elle tolérée dans la commune?—La mendicité est défendue par la loi. La surveillance de l'autorité cependant se ralentit quelquefois, et alors quelques individus mendient; puis la surveillance devient plus active, et la mendicité cesse. Dans une petite commune comme celle-ci, où tous se connaissent et savent qu'il y a des fonds pour les pauvres, on ne peut pas mendier beaucoup; ce ne sont que des gens n'appartenant point à la commune qui osent demander l'aumône*.

121. Y a-t-il des mendiants établis dans la commune?—Il n'y en a pas.

122. Lorsqu'un membre de la famille d'un laboureur tombe malade comment lui procure-t-on les secours du médecin et du chirurgien, et les médicamens?—M. le Marquis d'Arconati paye un médecin et les médicamens pour les pauvres de la commune. S'il ne subvenait pas à cette dépense ce serait le bureau de bienfaisance qui s'en chargerait; il donnerait au médecin de 60 à 70 francs. Ceux qui ne sont pas sur la liste des pauvres payent eux-mêmes le médecin et les médicamens.

123. Y a-t-il dans la commune un chirurgien, un apothicaire, une sage-femme?—Aucun individu exerçant ces professions n'est établi dans la commune.

124. Que fait-on des personnes pauvres atteintes de maladies chroniques?—Si elles n'ont pas de parens, le bureau de bienfaisance les placent dans une famille; si elles ont des parens il donne des secours à ceux-ci. Actuellement il ne se trouve pas dans la commune d'individus en cet état. Le bureau de bienfaisance a payé dans le temps 80 francs par an de pension pour un pauvre atteint d'une maladie chronique.

125. S'il y a quelqu'aliéné dans la commune qu'en fait-on?—Il y a actuellement 2 aliénés dans la commune, mais il appartiennent à des familles assez aisées, et elles en ont soin. S'il y en avait appartenant à une famille pauvre, ils seraient placés par la commune dans une maison de fous, et entretenus aux frais de la commune.

127. Ces dépenses sont-elles à la charge des journaliers? Ceux-ci n'en sont-ils jamais dispensés à cause de leur pauvreté?—Les journaliers dans des circonstances ordinaires payent ces dépenses, les pauvres en sont exemptés. Dans les communes où il y a beaucoup de pauvres, et passablement de fonds pour les secourir, le bureau de bienfaisance supplée aux dépenses des enterremens des pauvres; mais cela est bien rare.

128. Le cas d'enfans illégitimes est-il fréquent dans la commune?—Le cas est très-rare; depuis 5 ans il n'y en a eu qu'un seul.

129. Quelle mesure prendrait-on à leur égard?—La mère garderait l'enfant, le père en aurait soin, le mariage probablement s'en suivrait.

130. Les vieillards sont-ils entretenus par leurs enfans, et remarque-t-on que ceux-ci en aient soin?—Les enfans, lorsqu'ils en ont les moyens, entretiennent leurs vieux parens; si les enfans sont très-pauvres le bureau de bienfaisance vient à leur aide.

131. Quelles sont les ressources des vieillards pauvres sans famille?—Les vieillards délaissés sont placés par le bureau de bienfaisance dans une famille. Dans ce moment le bureau de bienfaisance entretient de cette manière un vieillard, et paye pour lui une pension de 72 francs par an. Outre cela il l'habille, et en cas de maladie il aurait à payer un supplément de dépense. Si le vieillard pouvait tant soit peu travailler, la pension serait moins forte.

132. Si

* Dans l'année 1830 beaucoup de pauvres venaient tous les jours à la poste du château de Gaesbeck demander l'aumône. Ou la faisait à tous, vu les circonstances. L'année suivante c'était la même chose; on fixa alors un jour de la semaine pour la distribution des aumônes: on donnait 2 sous par individu. Le premier jour il se présenta une cinquantaine de pauvres, le second 60, et à la fin de la saison, quoiqu'on eut réduit l'aumône à un sou pour les hommes et un demi-sou pour les enfans, il en venait 300 à 400; ils arrivaient de 10 à 12 milles à la ronde. L'année suivante on prit la détermination de ne plus rien donner à jour fixe, et de prendre le nom des pauvres pour se procurer des renseignemens sur leur compte. Cette mesure, jointe à une amélioration dans l'état du pays, a rendu le nombre des pauvres insignifiant, et l'on a été à même de donner de véritables secours aux véritables malheureux.

132. Si le pauvre vieillard que le bureau de bienfaisance entretient avec une dépense de 72 francs par an, était privé tout-à-coup de ce secours, et s'adonnant à la mendicité était arrêté par la force publique et transporté au dépôt de mendicité ou aux colonies, mais à la charge de la commune, combien coûterait-il par an à la commune? Croyez-vous qu'il serait plus malheureux ou moins malheureux qu'il n'est à présent?—Le vieillard, soit au dépôt de mendicité, soit aux colonies, coûterait à la commune au-delà de 130 francs par an, et il serait sûrement plus malheureux. Il y a eu dans la commune des cas d'individus transportés dans ces lieux. Ils y sont allés avec chagrin, et ils ont toujours tâché de revenir dans leur village. Les paysans aiment à vivre là où ils sont nés, parmi ceux avec lesquels ils ont été élevés, et en conservant leurs habitudes*.

133. Qui est-ce qui se charge des orphelins? arrive-t-il souvent que leurs proches parens s'en chargent?—Si les orphelins ont quelque bien on leur donne un tuteur. Le tuteur est ordinairement un parent qui jouit du petit revenu de l'enfant et profite de son travail, et en retour il l'entretient. S'ils n'ont absolument rien, mais s'ils ont des parens en état de fournir à leur subsistance, ceux-ci s'en chargent; s'ils n'ont ni bien, ni parens assez aisés, le bureau de bienfaisance les place dans une famille.

134. A combien monte la pension d'un orphelin?—Il n'y a pas actuellement d'orphelins à la charge du bureau de bienfaisance; dans le temps le bureau a payé 40 francs par an pour la pension d'un orphelin.

135. Y a-t-il une école dans la commune?—Il n'y a pas d'école à présent dans la commune, mais on se prépare à en ouvrir une par souscription. A présent les enfans vont à l'école dans les communes voisines.

136. Combien d'enfans y a-t-il dans la commune en âge d'aller à l'école, et combien y en a-t-il qui y vont?—Il y a 30 ou 60 enfans qui sont en âge d'aller à l'école, mais comme il n'y a pas d'école dans la commune, les plus jeunes n'y vont pas.

137. Combien d'heures par jour les enfans restent-ils à l'école?—4 heures; 2 le matin et 2 l'après diner.

138. Combien paye chaque enfant?—De 10 sous à 1 franc par mois, selon qu'ils apprennent à écrire ou non.

139. Qui paye pour les enfans pauvres?—Le bureau de bienfaisance.

140. Les filles vont-elles à l'école aussi-bien que les garçons?—Elles y vont aussi.

141. Qu'apprend-t-on aux uns et aux autres?—On ne leur apprend qu'à lire, écrire et l'arithmétique.

142. Je suppose que tous les enfans reçoivent du curé l'enseignement religieux. A quel âge commence cet enseignement, et combien d'années dure-t-il? Combien d'heures par jour, et combien de jours dans l'année cet enseignement occupe-t-il les enfans?—Le curé instruit les enfans dans la religion tous les dimanches à l'église pendant une heure. Les enfans commencent à recevoir cette instruction à 7 ans et continuent jusqu'à 14. Ceux qui se préparent à faire leur première communion sont en outre instruits par le curé pendant le carême deux ans avant la communion.

143. Les paysans savent-ils généralement lire et écrire?—Parmi les hommes au-dessus de l'âge de 50 ans il y en a plusieurs qui ne savent ni lire ni écrire, mais ceux au-dessous savent au moins lire presque tous.

144. Possèdent-ils quelque livre, et le lisent-ils?—Ils ne possèdent que des livres de prière, et des almanachs.

145. Voit-on chez les paysans plus d'empressement qu'autrefois à faire instruire leurs enfans?—Il n'y a pas de doute que les paysans ont plus d'empressement qu'autrefois à envoyer leurs enfans à l'école.

146. Les paysans font-ils généralement vacciner leurs enfans?—Presque tous les parens font vacciner leurs enfans. Le gouvernement paye un médecin qui vient s'établir une fois par an pour quelques jours dans le chef-lieu du canton; et les parens y portent leurs enfans et les font vacciner.

147. Se commet-il souvent des crimes dans la commune?—Bien rarement. Je crois qu'il y a au moins 12 ans qu'aucun individu de la commune n'a été mis en prison. Il arrive quelquefois que l'on commet des petits vols de bois, &c.†

149. Outre les cabarets n'y a-t-il aucun autre commerce dans la commune?—Un des cabaretiers est en même-temps épicier.

150. A quels

* La mendicité est qualifiée par le code pénal de delit passible de trois à six mois d'emprisonnement. Les tribunaux cependant ne condamnent d'ordinaire les mendiants qui sont traduits devant eux qu'à quelques jours d'emprisonnement; mais aussitôt qu'ils sont mis en liberté, le gouvernement s'en empare et les envoie aux dépôts de mendicité de leurs provinces respectives, à la charge des communes où ils ont leur domicile de secours. Ils demeurent dans ces dépôts à la discrétion de l'autorité administrative, qui peut prolonger indéfiniment leur réclusion. La mendicité est ainsi punie beaucoup plus sévèrement que le vol. Cela n'est pas juste, et réclame un changement. L'injustice de la loi, et les dépenses auxquelles les communes sont astreintes lorsqu'elles ont des mendiants dans les dépôts, font que la mendicité est très-peu réprimée.

† Depuis 1827 j'ai passé tous les ans la belle saison dans la commune, et je puis attester la vérité du fait.

 Arrivabene.

151. Les Kermesses sont-elles souvent l'occasion de querelles?—Souvent.

152. Arrive-t-il souvent que des paysans subissent des condamnations pour délits de chasse?—Jamais*.

154. Croyez-vous qu'il y ait une différence sensible entre la condition des paysans de cette commune et celle des communes environnantes?—Il peut y avoir quelque commune qui ait plus de fonds pour les pauvres, quelque autre qui en ait moins, mais du reste, je pense que la condition des paysans est à peu-près la même dans toutes‡.

* Les propriétaires peuvent chasser sur leurs biens, et permettre d'y chasser à qui bon leur semble. Tous doivent être munis d'un port d'armes, qui est délivré par le gouverneur de la province et qui coûte 30 francs. Voilà à quoi se réduisent à peu-près les lois sur la chasse. Peu de propriétaires gardent la chasse sur leurs terres; les faisans sont fort rares en Belgique; il y a peu de gibier, et le métier de braconnier n'est pas très-lucratif. Lorsqu'un paysan tue un lièvre sur la terre d'autrui, il est bien rare qu'il soit poursuivi; il n'est pas surprenant alors que les paysans ne subissent jamais de condamnations pour délits de chasse. En cela la France et la Belgique sont bien supérieures à votre pays.

‡ Pour autant que je connaisse les communes voisines, je crois qu'il y a plus de différence entre elles qu'il n'est dit ici. Je crois que sous le rapport des mœurs les curés y aient une influence plus ou moins favorable, et que le plus ou moins de facilité pour louer des terres influe d'une manière non moins remarquable sur le bien être des journaliers. Le voisinage des villes et des grandes routes est aussi favorable sous beaucoup de rapports, et défavorable sous quelques autres; mais je pense aussi qu'au fond il n'y a pas une différence sensible, je ne dirai pas entre province et province, mais entre canton et canton.

REPORT on the AGRICULTURAL COLONIES in Belgium. By H. Rowland Brandreth, Captain Royal Engineers.

Appendix (F.)

Capt.
H. R. Brandreth.

IN the year 1818, a society was established in Holland under the name of the “ Benevolent Society,” having for its object the founding of agricultural colonies, “ where the indigent are relieved from want, by means of their own labour; and where the young and ignorant are instructed, and ultimately returned to that intercourse with the world, for which they had become unfit, in a condition to provide for their own wants, and to yield obedience to the laws.”

Every inhabitant of the kingdom of the Netherlands, in possession of legal rights, and not degraded by criminal conviction for certain offences, might become an object of the society’s care.

Every member of the society paid annually 52 stivers (4 s. 4 d.) or one stiver (1 d.) per week, without prejudice to any additional donation.

The administration of the business of the society was intrusted to two commissions :—

The first, of which Prince Frederick, the second son of the king, became president, was called the “ Commission of Benevolence,” and was intrusted with the administration of finances, the instruction and education of the colonists, and the correspondence and direction of all branches of the business of the society.

The second commission, of which the Prince of Orange was president, was intended to watch over, and check the proceedings of the first, and was called the “ Commission of Superintendence.” As soon as the rules were sanctioned by his Majesty, and circulated by the Government authorities through all the districts of Holland, 20,000 individuals became members of the society; and an annual revenue was raised, for the first experiment, of 70,000 florins, or 5,833 l. 6 s. 8 d. sterling, besides orders to the amount of 26,000 yards of cloth.

Local, or sub-committees, were established in the different towns and districts, for the purpose of collecting subscriptions and contributions, and for watching over their application by the society. These committees communicated with the Commission of Benevolence at the Hague, who placed their remittances in the national bank.

The society being constituted, and its finances in such a condition as to create public confidence in its operations, the estate of Westerbeekslot was bought at the price of 4,666 l., situated on the confines of the provinces of Drenthe, Friesland, and Overijssel, and at a short distance from the town of Steenwyk. The 1,300 acres, of which the estate consisted, were, with the exception of about 100 or 150 acres, covered with a stunted heather, and mossy earth. A more unpromising subject could hardly have been selected; but this very circumstance induced its selection, as likely to afford, if the experiment should be successful, the most encouraging test of the efficacy of the institution.

The 100, or 150 acres already cultivated, were let to tenants; and 300 acres of the waste and desert heath were set apart for the establishment of the first colony, which was called Fredericks-Oord, from Prince Frederick, who had undertaken to preside over the institution. After deepening the river Aa, and making such roads as were sufficient to connect this wilderness with the adjacent country, a warehouse, a school, two manufacturing halls, and 52 farms were erected for the reception of 52 families of destitute poor, who took possession on the 1st November 1818.

Every colonist was obliged, on entering, to sign and promise to obey certain rules and regulations for the strict observance of good conduct and due subordination. The rules were framed with the strictest regard to the morals and habits of industry of the colonists; the free exercise of every denomination of religion; and the distribution of rewards and punishments.

The houses built by the society were each calculated for six or eight individuals, including children* in that number, with a barn attached to each.

The following is the statement of the first outlay for each family:

The sum thus advanced, bears interest of $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and the society contemplated that each family, at the end of 16 years, would repay both the advance and interest, and thus leave the cultivated land, houses, &c., a clear and unincumbered property for the relief of the poor of future generations.

At the commencement of the colonies, the colonists are so distributed that each division contains a shoemaker, tailor, stocking-knitters, linen-seamsters, woollen-seamsters, a weaver, carpenters, masons, blacksmiths and hatters. But as field-labour is the chief object, most of these trades are merely intended to provide for the consumption of the colonists, without injury to any of the existing trades. The single exception to this rule, and it occurs only in very particular circumstances, is the spinning of flax, which is converted into linen, and delivered to those friends of the society who have subscribed for it; the raw material being bought until the improvement of the soil admits of its being cultivated in the colony.

Besides these kinds of labour there are others, such as brick-making, lime-burning, the cultivation of land for new colonies, grass-growing, cutting of turf for sale, &c., forming additional sources of income to the colonists.

In December 1825, a period of seven years from the establishment of this system, the total population of the colonies amounted to 6,778: viz. 3,227 disposed in families; 2,174 orphans or foundlings, and 1,377 paupers; and 4,340 acres had been cultivated. Up to this period the most favourable reports had been circulated in a periodical published in Holland, and called the "Star," in which the fullest publicity was afforded to the transactions.

In 1828 a member of the Highland Society of Scotland published an account of these colonies, entering minutely into the subject; and deducing the same favourable results from his observations and calculations. In the same year Mr. Jacob published, in an Appendix to his Tracts on the Corn Trade and Corn Laws, a similar account, and with the same inferences. In 1829 a distinguished Italian, Count Arrivabène, visited these colonies, and reported favourably also of their progress, but qualified his commendation by expressing great doubts of the efficacy of their moral and social working, and ultimate success*.

The encouraging progress of the experiment induced a similar undertaking in the southern provinces of the then kingdom of the Netherlands; and in 1822 a colony was formed at Wortel, near Antwerp, on a barren heath; and at the end of 1823 one hundred and twenty-five farms were in cultivation; when the society contracted with Government to maintain 1,000 mendicants during 16 years, at the rate of 35 guilders, or 3 l. 4 s. 2 d. sterling per annum. These persons, mostly beggars and idlers, entered in the course of the year†.

The rules and regulations for raising of supplies, and the formation and guidance of the southern colonies, were similar in character to those of the northern colonies; and during the early period of the southern establishment, the reports of its progress and probable success appear to have been encouraging; subsequently, however, they failed to uphold these favourable prospects, and the political events of the last few years affected its prosperity. In considering the present state of this establishment, these events should be weighed in estimating its difficulties; but it will probably appear that their influence was not very great, and that other and intrinsic causes in the system, are of more importance to its present and future success.

The three objects of the institution, are:

1. To place the mendicant in a position to provide for himself, by the cultivation of waste and hitherto unprofitable land.
2. To repay to the lenders the money raised for this experiment; and,
3. To prepare the mendicant to return, at a future period, to society, elevated in character and means, so as to be fitted to take his station as a good citizen and independent man.

I propose, first, to consider the success of the financial part of this system, which will dispose of the two first objects; and then to show the peculiar circumstances that operate for or against the probable success of the third object.

The following is an outline of the financial affairs of the colony:

In 1822‡ the receipts of the society, from various sources, amounted to 70,000 florins, or about 6,717 l. sterling.

The expenses were 61,000 florins, or about 5,084 l.

In 1831 the receipts were 143,000 florins, or 11,917 l.

The expenses 145,000 florins, or 12,084 l.

In 10 years, from 1822 to 1831, the statement will be:

Receipts 1,742,397 florins, or 145,199 l.

Expenses 1,738,330 ditto, or 144,860 l.

Under the head of receipts are included:

1. The result of agreements with several public hospitals, and establishments for families and orphans.
2. The amount of voluntary subscriptions and presents.
3. Loans.

4. Grant

† Principally in the colony for compulsory labour, or agricultural workhouse.

‡ Between the years 1822 and 1831, the balance between the receipts and expenses fluctuated; in 1822, 1823, 1826 and 1829, the receipts were in excess; in 1824, 1825, 1827, 1828, and 1830 and 1831, the expenses were in excess. Perhaps 1831 should not be quoted, as a change took place in the period of making up the accounts, which renders it difficult to ascertain the precise state of the credit and debt.

4. Grant of 35,000 florins,* paid annually by government, for the relief of 1,000 mendicants.

5. Produce of the colonies, sale of cattle, &c.

The expenses of these colonies are as follows:

1. Purchase of land.
2. Erection of buildings.
3. Clearing land.
4. Administration of the establishment.
5. Clothing and furniture.
6. Provisions and general maintenance.
7. Purchase of cattle, horses, &c.
8. Ordinary cultivation, manure, planting, day-labour, &c.
9. Miscellaneous expenditure, fire-insurance, &c.

In July 1832 the debt of the colony stood thus:

Principal debt	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	£. 55,750
Arrears of interest on loans	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4,000
Creditors, for the direction of the colony	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4,000

The improbability of discharging this debt under the present system will be gathered from the following Table, and possibly from the remarks that will follow, on the causes that I consider affect generally the well working of the system.

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.Capt.
H. R. Brandreth.

The following Table of the voluntary subscriptions to the institution, would seem to show that public confidence in its success had latterly declined; yet it must be borne in mind that this great decrease commenced during the unsettled state of the country, from political changes:

1823	-	-	-	£. 2,250	1828	-	-	-	£. 2,400
1824	-	-	-	2,473	1829	-	-	-	1,912
1825	-	-	-	2,204	1830	-	-	-	955
1826	-	-	-	2,914	1831	-	-	-	558
1827	-	-	-	2,400

Of the 2,200* acres there are at present only 620 in cultivation; there are about 578 planted in firs, and 1,000 remain uncultivated; several farms are untenanted, partly from the extreme sterility of the soil, partly for want of labourers.

On the 1st of July 1832, of 70 farms in the first colony, only 56 were occupied, and in the second colony of 55 farms only 20 were occupied; thus the capital employed in the establishment of 49 farms remains unproductive, and annually decreases in value, from the consequent abandonment of the buildings.

At the commencement of the establishment of the free colonies, each family was indiscriminately admitted to cultivate their seven acres of land, and to receive for themselves the profits of their crops, and the forage for their cattle and sheep; they were also furnished with such clothes and subsistence, and additional food for cattle, as might be required; these advances were carried to the account of the head of the family, and occasioned a large debt to the society; while from incapacity on the part of the agriculturist, want of care and food for the cattle, and the miserable cultivation, notwithstanding a vigilant superintendence, the system worked so ill, that general discontent at last threatened serious evils to the establishment.

The society then altered or modified its original plan, by taking the cattle under their own charge, and conducting the cultivation by day labour.

There were, however, what are termed free colonists, still employed in cultivating their farms on their own responsibility; but several families so engaged were unable to overcome the difficulties of their position, and compelled to yield to the stricter discipline and direction of the society; and it is confidently asserted that very few have been able successfully to contend against these difficulties.

It is also stated that hitherto not more than four persons have fulfilled their engagements with the institution, and been restored to society fully qualified to enter on their duties as citizens.

When the objects of this institution, and the philanthropic spirit that originated, and pervades all its efforts, are considered, it will doubtless be a matter of serious regret that it should hitherto have failed to realize the sanguine hopes of the benevolent originators and supporters; and I should consider it a most invidious task to hold up the institution as an instance of mis-judging zeal, after personally witnessing the noble spirit that actuates all who are engaged in it, if I did not feel it a duty to point out, to the best of my judgment, its errors, with the hope that they may be profitable to others desirous of trying a similar experiment.

The land obtained for the purposes of this establishment is of the worst possible description. A thin and meagre surface of vegetable soil, on a substratum of sand, and in general without even this slight covering; requiring from the labourer constant industry and toil, and giving promise of extremely moderate returns. The inhabitants of this country are, however, celebrated for their unrivalled exertions as agriculturists, and for the extraordinary change they have worked in the most unpromising lands. So far the society might reasonably hope to find labourers who would overcome this difficulty at the outset; but his social position and habits had fitted the peasant to his hard occupation. The persons chiefly, almost entirely, admitted into the society's colonies were paupers, or bordering on pauperism; not altogether invited, but rather compelled to enter, under the penalty of being considered as vagabonds.

Of improvident habits, impatient of control, unused to the discipline of society, ignorant, and lax in their morals, they were to enter on a condition totally foreign to their habits, and dispositions; to commence an entirely new mode of life, to learn patient industry, provident habits, submission to wholesome regulations, to restrain their passions and evil propensities, and to look forward to obtain, by continued industry and toil, and moderate results, the means of entering society elevated in their moral and social condition.

The soil that they were required to cultivate, was eminently adapted to call forth the best qualities and exertions of any description of labourers; since it could not be exceeded in sterility; and, notwithstanding all the efforts on the part of the cultivator, required the aid of manure at a costly price.

The families thus assembled had each its separate allotment of ground, within which the exertions of the idle or industrious, the incompetent or the skilful, were limited; and at the first outset the community, with perhaps few exceptions, was alike distinguished by equal pauperism, ignorance and immorality. Thus the stimulus to emulation, which various grades of society create, was wanting; the future advantages of their good conduct and

* Or 1,072 bonniers; the bonnier is nearly equal to the French hectare; I have assumed the hectare equal to two statute acres, it is however something more.

and industry were too vague and distant to persons of their loose and improvident habits, and limited intelligence; while the constant sense of their seclusion, of their eleemosynary condition, and of the constraint under which they were living, repressed their freedom of thought as well as action, and was adverse to their ambition to excel.

The arbitrary distribution of the families into separate farms, checked the power of combination, which, by a better division of labour, and a more natural employment of various capacities, might have been successfully exerted.

Little attention could be paid to discriminate the peculiar qualities and talents of individuals where all were compelled (with few exceptions) to one pursuit, while the obvious improbability of all being equally well fitted to obtain the same object by the same means, was alike overlooked.

There was also another evil to contend with: the colonist who could not be induced to labour to realize the flattering prospects of future competency and distinction, was not threatened with a worse condition than that from whence he had been taken; when once admitted into the colony, idleness might assume the character of incompetency, and thus the natural disposition be indulged, either by dismissal, or by the substitution of labour under the direction of others; when an exemption from the labour of the mind, from the continued exertion of provident thought (the most difficult faculty to encourage in the lower classes) could be obtained.

The well-disposed, the industrious, the provident, could scarcely receive from the present system the full encouragement they deserve. The physical difficulties they had to contend with required the constant exertion of all their good qualities to maintain them in their position, while greater encouragement, and more extended means, might call them forth to greater advantage for themselves and the institution, and shew the fallacy of limiting their exertions and qualities to the same precise allotment as fell to the idle and ignorant.

It is not meant to be inferred, that where merit was obvious, a greater degree of encouragement was not offered; but the system itself did not sufficiently encourage any latent merit.

Among the colonists there were a few whose previous habits and natural dispositions disposed them to avail themselves, to the best of their ability, of the benevolent provisions thus offered for their relief; and who had worked industriously, and conducted themselves well during their residence in the colony. Their land was cultivated to the extent of their means; and their dwelling-houses had assumed an appearance of greater comfort, order and civilization than the rest. But these were too few in number, and the result too trifling to offer the stimulus of emulation to others.

Those farms that I examined, with the above exceptions, were not encouraging examples; there were few evidences of thrift and providence, the interior of the dwellings being, in point of comfort, little, if at all removed from the humblest cottage of the most straitened condition of labourers in this country.

A clause in the regulations allows certain of the colonists, whose good conduct and industry have obtained them the privilege, to barter with the neighbouring towns, for any article they may want.

The nearest towns to the establishment, of any note, are Hoogstraten and Tournhout; but on inquiry I could not find that any intercourse was maintained with them; and the country round offered no evidences of the existence of a thriving community in its centre, exercising an influence on its traffic or occupations. In the winter, I should think the roads to the colonies scarcely practicable for any description of carriages.

From what I saw of the social condition of the colonists, I am disposed to insist much on the inexpediency of assembling, in an isolated position especially, a large community of paupers for this experiment.

Admitting the physical difficulties to have been much less than they are, and the prospect of pecuniary advantage much greater and more certain, the moral objections to the system would outweigh them. Without the example of the better conditions of society, there can be no hope of such a community gradually acquiring those qualities that would fit the members of it for a better condition also. One or two families established in the neighbourhood of an orderly and industrious community, would find the stimulus of shame as well as emulation, acting on their moral qualities and exertions; but, as in the present case, where all are in a condition of equal debasement, both of those powerful stimuli are wanting. The reports of the progress of the Dutch free colonies up to the year 1828, are certainly encouraging; and as the same system has been adopted in the free colonies of Belgium, as in Holland, and the experiment in both cases tried on similar soils, they might lead to the inference that some peculiar cause has operated in favour of the Dutch colonies, or against those of Belgium. Not having had an opportunity of visiting the Dutch colonies, I cannot offer an opinion on the subject; but reasoning from what I personally witnessed, I should be disposed to think, that either some greater encouragement has been granted in Holland, or some improvement of the system adopted; or that the habits, dispositions and character of the Dutch fit them better for this experiment.

The same authorities that I have quoted in the case of these colonies, speak favourably also of the Belgian colonies up to the same period; and on the part of the latter experiment it may be asserted that, the unsettled state of the country since that period ought very much to qualify any condemnation of its principle. But notwithstanding this disadvantage (which is much less, I fear, than has been insisted on) there would still have remained evidences of the probable success of the experiment. Those evidences were not satisfactory to my mind; and I may further observe, that while the people in general recommended the colonies to foreigners as especially worthy of their notice, I do not remember meeting with one individual dual who could point out any specific results, and few who would distinctly assert that there was any increasing and permanent benefit to the community from them.

I understand that one gentleman was so sanguine of success, that he either had procured, or was to procure a large tract of sterile land to try a similar experiment. I apprehend, however, he would very much modify his plan, and assimilate it in detail more to the system adopted in the agricultural workhouses, than in the free colonies.

It is probable that unless some great change is made in the present system, the colonies will be ultimately abandoned, or merge into the establishments for compulsory labour; in other words, the society will become the farmers, and the present colonists merely agricultural labourers, differing only from the ordinary labourer, inasmuch as they will work under the penalty of being treated as vagabonds in case of contumacy.

The observations I have hitherto made apply only to the free colonies. There are other establishments where cultivation is carried on under a different system, both in Holland and Belgium; and the terms free and compulsory are applied to distinguish the two systems.

In the latter, the poor are assembled in large establishments, and cultivate the ground either by task, or day-labour, and attend the cattle, &c. under the direction of certain officers; it is, in fact, a species of agricultural workhouse.

The following is a Return of the establishment I visited in the neighbourhood of the free colonies:

The deaths annually are very considerable; they probably arise chiefly from age and dissolute habits: but some, I should fear, must be accounted for by the extreme bleakness of the country, affecting the feeble and dissolute.

In closing these observations, I venture to add, that there is much that appears to me worthy of the commendation of the philanthropist, and the attention of the legislator, in many of the institutions of Belgium for the relief of mendicity, and the suppression or punishment of vice. In the latter case, I would particularly instance the institutions such as Vilvorde and others, resembling, in many of their important features, the penitentiaries I have visited in the United States of America.

It is also imperative on me to state, that every facility is afforded to the foreigner to visit these institutions, and every information frankly, unreservedly, and courteously granted.

ON retrouve l'existence d'une taxe en faveur des pauvres, sous une forme ou une denomination quelconque, dans presque tous les pays qui ont été surchargés d'une forte population. Car chez de telles populations les infirmités morales et physiques, l'intempérance, et toutes les misères qu'elle engendre produisent au sein de ces sociétés un rebut, à l'existence duquel il faut que la société pourvoie d'une manière quelconque; parcequ'il en est par lui-même incapable.

Ce rebut des sociétés humaines croît en proportion de leurs masses et de leur accumulation sur les mêmes points; car dans ce cas la fermentation des vices y trouve des élémens plus abondans et plus corrompus, et les moyens d'existence de chacun s'y réduisent en raison de ce qu'il faut les partager entre un plus grand nombre.

Ainsi les distributions de blé, que faisaient au peuple les grands consulaires Romains, pour s'acquérir une popularité toujours éphémère, n'étaient autre chose que la forme dont la taxe des pauvres s'était revêtue chez eux.

Le jubilé, par lequel les dettes devaient s'éteindre tous les cinquante ans chez le peuple Hébreu, était une autre forme peu compréhensible, il est vrai, dans notre économie, que cette taxe avait reçue par le ministère de son législateur.

Plûs tard, et après les effroyables maux dont l'invasion et l'établissement des Barbares inondèrent l'Europe, le Christianisme, religion de l'aumône, en convertissant ces peuples pourvut d'une autre manière au sort des indigens.

Ce fut en destinant des capitaux à ce service, à l'effet duquel d'immenses dotations furent faites au clergé qui se chargea de cette tâche. En remplissant ainsi un devoir religieux qui ennoblissait son caractère, il y trouvait un grand moyen de popularité, et par conséquent un moyen de résistance contre les puissances d'alors.

L'Espagne nous offre encore aujourd'hui le résultat vivant des effets de ce système et de sa profonde politique.

Les biens dont les consciences effrayées faisaient don au clergé étaient presque toujours chargés de distributions en nature à faire aux pauvres; le nombre et les jours en étaient désignés. Beaucoup de nobles familles s'étaient à cet exemple imposées des jours de distributions. Cet usage universel dans l'Europe sauvage et catholique, et dont les vestiges subsistent encore en Italie, y avait créé cette race de Lazzaronis, qui n'était autre que des indigens paresseux accoutumés à vivre des soupes et du pain qui leur étaient périodiquement distribués à la porte des couvens.

Plûs tard et à l'époque des croisades, l'objet des fondations pieuses changea de nature, et ce fut à fonder des hospices et des infirmeries que ces donations contribuèrent. L'exemple en avait été donné par l'institution des ordres militaires et hospitaliers, que les blessures, les misères et la lèpre avaient rendu nécessaire à la suite de la longue guerre des croisades.

Plûs tard encore, et vers la renaissance des lettres, le besoin de venir au secours de l'éducation publique se faisant sentir, l'esprit des donations se dirigea vers ce but, et la charité ouvrit ainsi par des donations de nombreux asiles aux enfans abandonnés, des écoles à l'enfance pauvre, et des universités à la jeunesse studieuse.

Tous ces biens donnés au clergé à charge de porter secours aux indigens, toutes ces fondations hospitalières destinées à secourir leurs infirmités, étaient une taxe pour les pauvres, consistant en rentes constituées sur des immeubles inaliénables, et dont les fondateurs avaient chargé le clergé d'opérer la distribution.

Mais les pauvres savaient très bien que ces fondations existaient en leur faveur, qu'ils y avaient droit, et par conséquent ces institutions avaient sur leur moral tous les effets fâcheux qu'on signale dans toute charité légale et où le cœur n'est pour rien.

Deux époques mémorables ont altéré ce système; savoir la réformation religieuse, et la révolution advenue en France en 1789.

La réformation abolit les ordres monastiques et la hiérarchie de l'église, et disposa de tous les biens qui leur avaient été assignés. Par cette mesure, le capital qui avait été mis en réserve pour le service des pauvres fut anéanti. Mais une grande ferveur religieuse succédant alors à un grand relâchement, fut le mobile et la conséquence de cette réformation. Cette ferveur porta ces peuples, ainsi qu'il en est toujours dans les tems d'exaltation publique, à préférer leurs intérêts à venir à leurs intérêts présens, et leurs opinions à leur bien-être: car les plus pauvres se portèrent des premiers à détruire ces fondations pieuses chargées de pourvoir à leurs besoins. Mais aussi le même mobile les ayant porté à manifester leur foi par leurs œuvres, il s'opéra chez ces peuples une réforme morale, à l'aide de laquelle la tempérance, les mœurs, l'amour de l'ordre et du travail, en diminuant le nombre des pauvres rendit peu sensible dans les premiers tems le défaut de secours qui dut résulter de la destruction des fondations ecclésiastiques.

 De Chateauroux.

Nous en avons la preuve dans la rigidité des lois que Genève reçut alors de sa réformation, —loix d'après lesquelles l'ivrognerie et l'oisiveté étaient punies correctionnellement. L'Ecosse, où les mœurs de la réformation se sont conservées plus intactes que partout ailleurs, en fournit encore aujourd'hui l'exemple et les effets.

Mais tout dans ce monde s'efface ou s'anéantit. Les mœurs de la réformation se sont altérées à mesure que la ferveur religieuse, dont elles étaient la suite, s'est évanouie, et tous les maux de l'indigence, toutes les misères de la pauvreté sont revenues affliger des populations livrées de nouveaux à l'intempérance et aux vices qui engendrent les besoins.

On avait senti toutefois et dès les tems qui succédèrent à la réformation, l'impérieuse nécessité de pourvoir d'une manière quelconque aux besoins pressans de l'indigence et des accidens qui menacent sans cesse notre infirme nature. Le mode adopté à cet effet dans les différens pays réformés fait encore aujourd'hui la base du régime qu'ils suivent à l'égard des pauvres.

A Genève les biens des couvens furent vendus, ceux de l'évêque assignés aux hospices, et il fut pourvu aux nécessités des indigens par le moyen de quêtes ou collectes qui se faisaient et se font encore dans les temples. Ce dernier moyen s'y est généralisé et y est devenu la forme ordinaire par lequel on réunit des secours pour satisfaire aux différens besoins des indigens. Plus tard et au commencement du 18^{me} siècle, un riche et généreux citoyen, M. Franconi, fonda à Genève un hôpital sur une grande échelle, auquel on a réuni tous les biens qui à diverses époques avaient reçu la même destination.

On a concédé à cet hospice le droit de faire une collecte annuelle, et avec les legs qu'il est autorisé à recevoir, et un dernier capital qui a été ajouté à ceux qu'il possédait déjà, il est devenu un puissant moyen de secours, en raison de la population appelée à y participer.

Les secours se distribuent en premier lieu aux malades, en second lieu aux indigens qui ne peuvent pourvoir à leur subsistance en raison de leur âge, de leurs infirmités, du nombre de leur famille, et de toutes les incapacités morales et physiques qui occasionnent la misère. La majeure partie de ces secours sont répartis régulièrement et à titre de pension entre les indigens. C'est à dire qu'ils ont droit à une taxe des pauvres, dont les fonds ne se perçoivent pas chez les contribuables : en partie parcequ'ils sont volontairement donnés par eux, et en partie parcequ'ils proviennent des revenus d'un capital mis à part à cet effet.

Quelques autres fondations viennent encore au secours de la population indigente, et leurs distributions réunies, jointes à celles des charités collectives et individuelles, constituent une somme d'environ 12,000 l. qui se repartit annuellement sur un neuvième de la population, soit sur environ 5,200 individus, ce qui fait en raison de 2 l. 3 s. par tête.

Une petite population industrielle compte ainsi 11 p' 100 de cette population dans la catégorie des indigens, et leurs besoins sont pourvus au moyen d'une rétribution de 2 l. 3 s. par tête.

Il en a été autrement dans les cantons protestans de la Suisse. La majeure partie des biens ecclésiastiques y fut concédée aux communes lors de la réformation, à charge par elles d'entretenir leurs pauvres. La destination de ces biens ne fut pas changée, la distribution de leurs revenus s'opéra seulement par une autre voye, et la charge ayant été imposée comme une condition du don, les communes sont forcées de la remplir ; et chez celles où le revenu de ces biens devient insuffisant, il se lève sur le contribuable une véritable taxe pour les pauvres. Dans ce cas il y a une identité complète entre la taxe établie en Angleterre et ce qui se pratique dans ces communes.

Le Baron de Voght avait institué à Hambourg un mode de secours dans un tout autre esprit. Une souscription considérable lui a donné les moyens de fournir aux indigens la matière première et les salaires destinés à acquitter la mise en œuvre de ces matières premières. Ensorte que c'était en échange de leur propre travail que les pauvres obtenaient des secours, secours toujours proportionnés à ce travail, et qui par conséquent, depourvus de tout caractère de don gratuit et de tout droit acquis aux pauvres de recevoir ces dons, s'écartaient des formes et échappaient aux inconvéniens qui signalent par tout l'établissement des taxes imposées en leur faveur.

Mais c'est contre un autre obstacle que cette institution a du lutter. En créant ainsi une grande manufacture de bienfaisance, travaillant d'une manière illimitée et suivant que les besoins de l'indigence devenaient plus grands, ou qu'il leur était plus commode de s'adresser à cette manufacture qu'à toute autre, elle a été forcée d'écouler à tout prix ses produits ; c'est à dire à perte et à vil prix.

L'effet immédiat d'une telle institution était donc celui de faire aux manufactures libres une concurrence tellement fatale que si les travaux de bienfaisance se multipliaient à un certain point, ils obligeaient toutes les industries rivales à fermer leurs ateliers, puisqu'elles ne sauraient sans périr travailler avec une perte constante.

Il est donc impossible de généraliser de telles institutions. A peine est il possible de les soutenir dans les maisons de correction et appliquées à la seule classe des prisonniers ; bien loin de pouvoir embrasser dans ce moyen de secours la classe des pauvres. Car son usage rejeterait bientôt dans cette classe tous les ouvriers que la fermeture des fabriques libres amènerait à la porte de la grande manufacture de bienfaisance, laquelle finirait par devenir l'unique du pays, dans l'économie duquel elle occasionnerait une fatale perturbation.

Les biens ecclésiastiques que la réformation avait confisqués en Angleterre n'y ont été ni

donnés aux communes, ni confiés à de nouvelles fondations pour servir aux besoins de l'indigence. Ceux du clergé séculier sont demeurés le patrimoine de l'église Anglicaine, et ceux du clergé régulier furent donnés à titre de cadeaux aux grandes familles qui se trouverent être à même de recueillir alors les royales faveurs.

L'ordre de choses qui en est résulté n'est que la conséquence du mode d'après lequel on disposa alors du capital qui avait été donné au clergé catholique de l'Angleterre ; car quelque charitable que soit celui qui l'a remplacé, il ne saurait distribuer les mêmes secours aux indigens, parcequ' étant marié, il doit, avant de pourvoir au sort des pauvres, assurer celui de ses enfans. Et quant aux biens des moines donnés aux grandes familles, quelque bienfaisantes qu'elles puissent être, elles ont à servir tant d'intérêts, avant ceux des indigens, qu'elles ne sauraient jamais leur en accorder qu'une faible aliquote.

Aussi le vide qui devait résulter dans les moyens de secours par l'effet de cette distribution des biens ecclésiastiques, a-t-il du être immédiatement senti ; puisque la Reine Elisabeth fit rendre le Bill qui a fondé en Angleterre la taxe des pauvres, peu d'années après l'époque où la réformation s'y opéra.

Il n'était pas donné sans doute à cette reine, quelque fut sa prévoyance, de juger de la portée et des effets que devaient avoir un jour cette institution ; car à cette époque le génie industriel et mercantile de l'Angleterre et son immense prospérité était à peine en germe, et n'avait pas donné naissance à une population immense, accumulée et devenue nécessairement la proie de toutes les misères qu'enfantent parmi de telles populations, la difficulté de trouver une place pour exister et des moyens de vivre. Alors l'accumulation des capitaux n'avait pas dépossédé une part immense de la population de tout l'avoir national et de tout intérêt dans la propriété. Alors enfin cette masse dépourvue de tout intérêt n'avait pas été jetée, avec ses bras pour unique patrimoine, au milieu de cet immense atelier d'industrie, de speculations et d'activité, qui constitue l'Angleterre d'aujourd'hui.

Le sol du pays envahi par les grands capitaux, qui tendent sans cesse à s'y fixer, après avoir été accumulés par l'économie ou par les bénéfices de la speculation commerciale ; ce sol s'est trouvé divisé en grandes propriétés que la primogéniture et les substitutions travaillent à concentrer sans relâche. Les grandes propriétés rurales ont comporté à leur tour un système de grands fermages, genre d'exploitation qu'il a fallu confier à une classe de capitalistes qui a fait de l'exploitation des terres une occupation industrielle.

L'agriculture a singulièrement prospéré entre de telles mains, parcequ'elles n'entreprenaient ce genre d'industrie qu'avec le capital nécessaire pour le mener à bien, avec la connaissance des méthodes qui devaient y concourir, avec l'esprit de comptabilité et d'économie qui caractérise toutes les entreprises manufacturières.

Aussi l'économie de la main d'œuvre par le perfectionnement des instrumens aratoires, a-t-il été la suite immédiate du système d'économie rurale établi en Angleterre. Aussi les fermiers y ont-ils dirigé leurs assolemens de manière à ce que donnant beaucoup d'espaces à l'entretien des bestiaux, ils n'eussent à cultiver en terre arable qu'une moindre superficie, qu'ils travaillaient mieux et fumaient beaucoup plus. Par ces procédés, joints à l'usage de faire opérer à forfait la plupart des travaux champêtres, ils sont parvenus à faire produire au sol l'approvisionnement du pays en n'employant à cette production que la moitié de sa population, tandis qu'en France 25 millions travaillent pour en nourrir 32. C'est à dire que l'ouvrier Anglais produit au profit de l'avoir national 20 et 48/100^{es} de plus que l'ouvrier Français,—résultat de la division du travail, que les grandes exploitations comportent.

Mais après avoir jeté dans les travaux industriels et mercantiles une moitié de la population, après en avoir conservé l'autre moitié pour les travaux agricoles, après avoir réuni toutes les entreprises industrielles et rurales dans un nombre restreint de fabricants et de fermiers pourvus de l'intelligence et des capitaux nécessaires pour faire prospérer ces entreprises, la manipulation en a été laissée à une seule classe de la société, à celle des journaliers.

Cette classe est devenue d'autant plus nombreuse, que la concentration des grands capitaux a successivement absorbé et déplacé tous les petits, dont l'existence était compromise et écrasée par l'action puissante qu'exercent de grands capitaux réunis dans des mains capables.

Elle est devenue d'autant plus nombreuse, que durant les années où le grand développement de la prospérité de l'Angleterre a eu lieu, cette prospérité a du faire un grand emploi de bras, et par conséquent la demande qui s'en faisait a du établir la concurrence en faveur de l'ouvrier,—circonstance qui en a fait naître un grand nombre. Nous dirons enfin que la taxe même établie par la loi en faveur des pauvres a du multiplier la classe de ces ouvriers ; en leur donnant quelque sécurité pour l'avenir et quelque confiance dans les chances qu'il pouvait leur offrir.

Mais aussi cette classe de la société dépossédée de tout et réduite à son travail, en se multipliant a du tomber de tout le poids de ses infirmités et de ses besoins sur l'institution qui avoit été légalement établie pour les secourir.

Si le système de la taxe des pauvres n'avait pas été déjà fondé en Angleterre à l'époque du grand développement qu'a pris sa prospérité industrielle, agricole et commerciale, et par conséquent celui de sa population, que s'y serait-il passé ? Le prix des salaires s'y serait élevé de manière à comprendre non seulement l'entretien quotidien de l'ouvrier et de sa famille, mais à subvenir encore aux accidens et aux infirmités qui peuvent l'atteindre, et lorsque la prévoyance de ces ouvriers n'aurait pas été jusqu'à réserver sur leurs salaires de quoi pourvoir à ces cas de malheur, ils auraient eu recours alors à la mendicité et seraient retombés à la charge de la pitié publique.

Cette pitié les aurait secourus en vertu de cette loi de la providence, loi qui n'est pas tarifée dans l'économie des peuples, mais au moyen de laquelle il arrive fortuitement que nul ne meurt de faim au sein des sociétés policées; quelque soit d'ailleurs le degré de misère que les pauvres puissent y endurer.

Il serait résulté de cet exhaussement dans le prix du travail que la valeur des objets produits ou fabriqués en Angleterre se serait élevée dans la même proportion, puisque ce prix est l'élément principal de la valeur de la production, et ces objets, au lieu de se livrer sur tous les points du globe à un prix inférieur à celui où d'autres nations pouvaient les offrir, y auraient été aussi chers et n'auraient point obtenu la préférence ni porté par conséquent la valeur des exportations de l'Angleterre au taux énorme qu'elles ont atteint. Il y aurait eu moins de demandes, moins de travail, et moins de cette splendeur de prospérité dont l'Angleterre a été si fière.

Les 9 millions sterlings que la taxe des pauvres y distribue en supplément de salaires aux ouvriers infirmes et chargés de famille ne sont donc en réalité qu'une prime donnée à son travail industriel et productif. Cette distribution a contribué à sa prospérité, et à son tour cette prospérité, en multipliant démesurément la classe ouvrière, rejette sur la taxe des pauvres une masse toujours croissante de misères et de maux à soulager.

Mais cette prime, avec toutes ses conséquences, présente cela de singulier qu'elle n'est pas acquittée par ceux qui en profitent directement. C'est sur la propriété foncière qu'elle se prélève, et elle lui est remboursée par le plus haut prix des locations et des fermages; parceque ce prix s'est élevé en raison du plus bas prix de la main d'œuvre et du plus haut prix que l'accroissement de la prospérité a imprimé aux denrées, aux loyers, ainsi qu'à la valeur vénale des immeubles. Mais ces remboursements ne s'opérant que par voie d'infiltration, tandis que le versement s'en est opéré au comptant entre les mains du percepteur de la paroisse, deviennent inaperçus pour un grand nombre de propriétaires qui pâtissent et se plaignent d'une législation qui leur semble peser lourdement et injustement sur eux.

Après avoir rapidement examiné les changemens qui ont été occasionnés par la réformation dans le sort des pauvres, il nous reste à voir ceux que la révolution Française y a apporté.

Ici les choses se sont passées par de toutes autres voyes.

Après avoir confisqué dans son entier la grande valeur capitale que le clergé possédait dans ce royaume; après y avoir ajouté une portion de celui qu'y possédait la noblesse, le gouvernement a vendu ces capitaux à vil prix. Le montant des indemnités accordées pour la part des biens dont la noblesse avait été spoliée, ayant monté à 850 millions de francs, et cette somme étant censée représenter la moitié de la valeur vénale de ces biens, elle s'élève ainsi à 1,700 millions. Celle des biens du clergé étant estimée valoir le triple a donné un capital de 5 milliards 100 millions, soit en tout 6 milliards 800 millions; sur lesquels le gouvernement ayant prélevé 1,100 mille hectares de bois pour les réunir au domaine de l'état, en les évaluant au prix de 900 fr. l'hectare, ils produisent une somme d'un milliard, qu'il faut défalquer de celle-ci dessus.

C'est donc un capital de cinq milliards huit cent millions que la révolution a enlevé tout d'un coup aux classes riches de la nation pour être éparpillé parmi ses classes moins avantagées. Sans doute que les pauvres proprement dits n'ont pas participé directement à cette distribution, parceque quelque vile qu'en fut la valeur, encore fallait-il pour acquérir ces biens posséder quelque avoir et quelque capacité d'intelligence et de calcul; mais ce qui en est résulté pour eux, c'est un élargissement subit dans la part de tous à la propriété, qui s'est répandu de proche en proche par oscillation, et qui à l'aide d'une législation par laquelle toute primogéniture et toutes substitutions sont interdites, a multiplié prodigieusement la petite propriété au profit de l'aisance générale.

La France était en même tems richement pourvue en fondations hospitalières pour les malades, les infirmes, et les enfans abandonnés; non seulement ces fondations avaient eu lieu en faveur des grandes villes, mais il existait de telles fondations sur de petites échelles dans de petites villes et même dans un grand nombre de villages. La révolution avait dans sa première furie voulu attenter aux capitaux de ces fondations; mais leur spoliation fut arrêtée assez à tems pour que ces fondations, accumulées au profit du malheur par la piété des siècles, ayent survécu à ce grand bouleversement social, et même leur régime notablement amélioré pourvoit d'une manière satisfaisante aux maux provenant des accidens et des infirmités.

Toutefois les secours manquaient sur beaucoup de points du royaume pour les aliénés et les enfans abandonnés: dans ce cas à peu-près général dans les départemens, leurs conseils y portent remède autant que possible, en attribuant à cet effet une allocation sur les fonds dont ils disposent et dont l'emploi s'exécute par voyes administratives. Et ici reparait la taxe des pauvres.

Cette taxe reçoit aujourd'hui sa pleine execution dans toutes les villes au dessus de 20,000 ames, et même dans beaucoup de celles qui ont une population moindre. Les conseils municipaux ont été appelés dans ces villes à venir au secours de l'indigence qui se crée dans toutes les populations accumulées, en mettant à la disposition de bureaux de charité des fonds pris sur les revenus particuliers de ces villes.

Ces revenus se composent outre l'avoir personnel des communes, du produit des octrois, ou droits d'entrée perçus à leurs portes. Et comme cette manière de fournir aux dépenses des bureaux de charité dispense de percevoir directement chez les propriétaires un impôt spécial pour les pauvres, on croit que les Français en sont exempts ; c'est une erreur, car la forme de perception de cette taxe diffère seulement de celle qu'on pratique en Angleterre ; sa distribution et ses effets sur la population sont d'ailleurs les mêmes.

Il existe de plus des dépôts de mendicité ou maisons de travail instituées par le gouvernement ; mais ce sont aujourd'hui bien plutôt des asiles de correction et des succursales d'un système de police, que des moyens de secours pour l'indigence.

Il résulte de la revue que nous venons de faire, 1° que la moitié de la population urbaine de la France est soumise au régime d'une taxe pour les pauvres, taxe qui s'acquitte par un prélèvement sur les revenus des villes et non au moyen d'un impôt spécial. Cette moitié de la population urbaine pouvant être estimée à trois millions et demi d'individus, dont un septième participe à ces secours, on peut évaluer qu'elle vient au secours de 500,000 individus.

Les fonds destinés à ce service s'élevant dans les diverses villes où il a lieu à 24 millions, soit à 960 mille livres sterlings, la part des 500 mille individus entre lesquels cette somme se distribue est ainsi de 1 l. 19 s. par tête.

2°. Qu'une autre taxe prise sur les fonds départementaux et le 10 p' 100 que les spectacles sont astreints à payer aux fondations d'hospices viennent au secours des aliénés, des enfans abandonnés et des infirmes, soit par le ministère de l'administration, soit par celui des hôpitaux. Le montant de ces fonds peut être estimé à 1,200 mille francs, pour ce qui concerne la taxe mise sur les spectacles, et à 1,800 mille pour la part votée par les conseils généraux de départements, soit en tout trois millions ou 120 mille livres sterlings. Ce qui porte à 1 million 800 mille livres sterlings, le montant de la somme qui se distribue annuellement en France en secours pour les pauvres sur les revenus publics.

3°. Que les besoins provenant des accidens et maladies sont satisfaits au moyen des capitaux appartenants aux différentes fondations hospitalières ; il nous reste à voir comment l'état social du pays et la repartition de la propriété pourvoyent à l'existence de toutes les misères qui restent en dehors des catégories d'indigens que nous venons de désigner.

Les bourgs et les villages de la France, séjour d'une population de 25 millions d'individus, ne participent à la distribution des secours publics, que pour la faible part qui concerne les aliénés et les enfans abandonnés, et pour celle qui leur appartient dans les fondations hospitalières. Mais pour parvenir à se faire une juste idée du sort de cette immense population, il est nécessaire de connaître la manière dont la propriété du sol est répartie entr'elle ; car de cette repartition résulte le classement de cette population, et la position sociale que chacune de ces classes occupe dans l'économie générale du pays—économie si différente de celle qui existe en Angleterre, que pour la faire mieux comprendre nous croyons devoir en dresser le tableau synoptique ci-joint.

On voit par ce tableau que la France renferme une population rurale de 25 millions d'individus, sur lesquels 4 millions sont propriétaires, ce qui en supposant la famille composée de 5 personnes, comprend une population de 20 millions possédant et vivant sur un capital foncier, et dont l'existence est par là plus ou moins assurée. Trois millions sont dépourvus de ce capital, et vivent comme journaliers, métayers, vigneron ou valets de ferme, du seul travail de leurs bras. Deux millions vivent comme artisans du travail industriel, qu'ils font en qualité de forgerons, charrons, sabotiers, tisserands, maçons, charpentiers, &c.

C'est dans ces deux dernières classes que se trouvent sans doute le plus grand nombre d'indigens ; non seulement parcequ'elles ne possèdent aucuns capitaux, si ce n'est celui de leur petit mobilier, de leurs vêtements et des outils de leur profession ; mais parceque toutes les circonstances qui s'opposent à l'exercice de leur travail les privent de leurs moyens d'existence, et parceque le travail des artisans de la campagne est si peu rétribué que ceux d'entr'eux qui manquent d'intelligence et d'habileté, ont peu de pratiques et se trouvent réduits à de faibles gains.

La troisième classe, dans laquelle les besoins de l'indigence se font également sentir, est celle des petits propriétaires ; car ceux d'entr'eux dont la possession n'a qu'une superficie au dessous de 2 hectares (4 acres), n'y trouvent pas de quoi assurer l'existence de leur famille, et pour y parvenir ils sont obligés d'y joindre le profit de quelques travaux ou de quelque industrie exercée en dehors de la culture de leurs propriétés. Ils rentrent par là dans la catégorie des journaliers, et sont ainsi exposés à des besoins dans des cas de chômages ou d'accidens.

Ces besoins deviennent à la vérité d'autant moins pressans que l'étendue de la propriété se rapproche de la superficie de 2 hectares ; car dans l'état agricole de la France, il faut une superficie de 1 hectare 23 ares de terres arables ou prairie, pour fournir à la subsistance alimentaire d'un individu. L'aliment de la famille étant comme 5, l'étendue de 2 hectares y pourroit ainsi dans la proportion de 1 et 77/100^{es}, auxquels il faut ajouter le logement, qui avec les fruits et légumes élève à 3 la part de moyens d'existence qu'une propriété de 2 hectares fournit à une famille de 5 individus. C'est donc aux deux cinquièmes de ces moyens d'existence auxquels cette famille est obligée de pourvoir par un gain quelconque fait en dehors de sa propriété.

Cet aliquote s'accroît à mesure que l'étendue de la possession diminue, à tel point que la condition du plus petit propriétaire s'assimile à celle du journalier, moins le logement et le jardin que sa propriété lui fournit.

Il s'agit maintenant de savoir quel est dans la classe des 3,561,733 petits propriétaires, le nombre de ceux dont la propriété n'a que deux hectares et au dessous.

D'après les proportions du tableau, nous trouvons que 1,243,200 petits propriétaires doivent être rangés dans cette catégorie, ce qui comporte avec leur famille une population de 6,216,000 individus appelés à pourvoir par un travail étranger à leur possession, à un aliquote plus ou moins considérable de leurs moyens d'existence.

Nous devons ainsi comprendre au nombre de ceux dont l'existence repose plus ou moins sur les bénéfices de leur travail manuel étranger à leur propriété,

- 1° - - 3,000,000 de journaliers.
- 2° - - 2,000,000 d'artisans ruraux.
- 3° - - 6,216,000 petits propriétaires.

Soit en tout une population de - - - 11,216,000 individus, lesquels n'ont droit à aucune taxe en leur faveur.

Il faut maintenant examiner ceux qui dans ces trois catégories éprouvent des besoins réels, et peuvent être par là rangés dans la classe des pauvres. Nous verrons plus tard de quelle manière il est pourvu à ces besoins.

1°. C'est parmi les 3 millions de journaliers que les fermiers et les moyens propriétaires se pourvoyent de valets de ferme, et ils entrent à ce service dès l'âge de 10 à 12 ans, âge où ils peuvent déjà garder les bestiaux au pâturage. Mais ils se partagent ces fonctions avec la classe des petits propriétaires dont les bras surabondans cherchent de l'emploi. Aussi ne peut-on pas estimer à plus d'un cinquième ceux des journaliers, qui en se plaçant chez les grands exploitans se mettent ainsi à l'abri de tout besoin, et peuvent même accumuler quelques économies - - - - - 600,000

Une autre fraction de cette classe trouve à exercer son activité par l'état de vigneron, c'est à dire de cultivateur à moitié fruit d'une parcelle plus ou moins grande de vignoble. Cet emploi du travail moins casuel que celui du simple journalier, assure à la famille qui cultive un hectare un revenu de 200 fr. au moins pour la saison où s'opère cette culture; mais comme il y a une grande concurrence pour l'emploi de vigneron parmi les petits propriétaires, on ne peut guère admettre qu'il y ait au delà de 150,000 familles de journaliers qui y trouvent les moyens de s'alimenter - - ci individus 750,000

Total des journaliers à l'abri du besoin - - - - - 1,150,000

Nombre des journaliers restant exposés aux besoins - - - - - 1,850,000

2°. Parmi les 2,000,000 d'artisans ruraux, il en est que leur intelligence et leur activité met hors de ligne et au dessus du besoin par l'importance de leurs travaux. La proportion de leur nombre est difficile à fixer. Je pense cependant que sur l'ensemble de ces diverses professions on peut admettre qu'il y ait deux ateliers d'artisans par commune au dessus du besoin; cette proportion en supposerait 72,000, et avec leurs familles - - ci individus 360,000

Ces 72,000 artisans doivent entretenir un ouvrier, qui par les salaires d'un travail annuel est encore mis au dessus des besoins - - - - ci 72,000

Total des artisans à l'abri du besoin - - - - - 432,000

Nombre des artisans restant exposés aux besoins - - - - - 1,568,000

3°. Enfin parmi les petits propriétaires il s'en trouve un assez grand nombre qui assurent les moyens d'existence de leur famille, soit en louant à la parcelle des terres dont la culture se confond avec celle de leur possession, et dont le produit couvre le déficit que l'exiguité de ces possessions laisserait dans leurs moyens d'existence, soit en joignant à la culture de leur petite propriété celle d'une vigne dont ils sont vignerons, soit enfin en quittant leur domicile, qu'ils louent à des journaliers pour aller entreprendre comme métayers la culture de plus grands domaines. Beaucoup d'entre les ouvriers jeunes et valides, appartenant à la classe des petits propriétaires, se placent enfin comme valets de ferme dans les grandes exploitations.

Ces différens emplois communs à toute la classe des 3,561,733 petits propriétaires, en occupent un tiers au moins, qui met par là son existence au dessus du besoin. Les 6,216,000 individus composant la catégorie des plus petits propriétaires y participent dans la même proportion, ensorte qu'on peut estimer que dans ce nombre il y a petits propriétaires à l'abri du besoin - - - - - 2,072,000

Petits propriétaires restant exposés aux besoins - - - - - 4,144,000

Il résulte ainsi de ce dénombrement que la catégorie de ceux qui restent dans une position précaire parmi la population rurale de la France monte à journaliers - - - - - 1,850,000

Artisans - - - - - 1,568,000

Total des indigens des 3 classes - - - - - 7,562,000

Soit sur les 25,000,000 qui constituent cette population, $\frac{1}{3}$ 71/100^{es}.

Il importe maintenant d'examiner comment cette masse de besoins parviennent à se satisfaire dans l'état actuel de l'économie du pays, et sans avoir recours à aucunes taxes en sa faveur, ni aux bénéfices de fondations ou distributions pieuses, autres que celles des hospices.

En premier lieu, il faut distraire du nombre total environ 50,000 individus entretenus aux frais du gouvernement dans les bagnes, maisons de détention et de travail. En second lieu, les aliénés et les enfans abandonnés, qui sont secourus soit par des fondations, soit par des sommes accordées sur des fonds dont les départemens disposent. En troisième lieu enfin, ceux d'entre les pauvres qu'un très grand nombre d'hospices secourent dans les cas d'accidens et de maladies graves auxquels cette population est exposée.

A ces moyens de secours, il faut ajouter ceux que les quêtes et les charités particulières mettent à la disposition des pauvres dans les cas les plus malheureux. Mais il faut surtout faire entrer en ligne de compte une charité bienveillante, qui s'exerce à peu-près partout en France de proche en proche et de voisins à voisins à titre de bons offices.

Il est difficile que telle chose ait lieu en Angleterre, parceque le pauvre journalier n'y a pour voisin qu'un journalier aussi pauvre que lui, et que dans leur parité de position ils ne peuvent se prêter mutuellement secours. Il faut que la charité, immense sans doute en Angleterre, y tombe de haut sur le pauvre. Il importe donc d'expliquer comment elle se fait terre à terre dans les communes rurales de la France.

Dans ces communes le même village renferme les différens échelons de la propriété et des positions sociales ; ils s'y trouvent porte à porte et souvent sous le même toit. Le propriétaire de 10 hectares est l'ami, le beau-frère, l'oncle, ou le neveu de celui que n'en a que deux. Le journalier est en loyer chez l'opulent cultivateur, et ce besoin inné chez la nation de communiquer et de causer les met tous en rapport entr'eux. De là vient que la femme du propriétaire de 20 hectares ne laissera pas sa pauvre voisine accoucher sans secours ; elle lui prêtera du linge, parceque ses bahuts en sont remplis ; elle lui portera de la soupe, car sa marmite est grande et en contient beaucoup ; elle donnera des pommes de terre à ses enfans, et même du pain s'ils en manquent.

Ces secours, qui se distribuent dans une quantité qui échappe à la statistique et dans toutes les campagnes de la France, ne s'y donnent pas, je le répète, à titre de charité, mais de bon voisinage, ils n'ont jamais lieu en argent, mais dans les objets en nature dont on a besoin. Celui qui a reçu ces bons offices les rend à celui qui les a donnés, également en nature et avec ce qu'il possède ; c'est à dire avec ses bras et sa bonne volonté. Un propriétaire a-t-il besoin d'un aide momentané, soit pour remuer une grosse poutre, soit pour charger promptement ses gerbes, lorsque l'orage gronde dans le ciel, à l'instant le cordonnier, le serrurier voisin s'élance avec ardeur de sa boutique, et accourt pour mettre toute sa bonne volonté à la disposition du laboureur, qui hâte le pas de ses chevaux et retire à tems sa moisson avec cet utile secours, dont un verre de cidre devient la récompense.

Mais toute cette charité en action ne sert qu'à subvenir aux cas éventuels qui accablent l'indigence, il s'agit d'examiner comment ces indigens parviennent à pourvoir à leur existence quotidienne.

N'oublions pas que sur les 7,562,000 individus pauvres de la population rurale, il en est 4,144,000 qui possèdent déjà un domicile et un coin de terre dont l'étendue varie de deux hectares à quelques ares. Or une telle possession quelque bornée qu'elle soit, est déjà d'un grand secours à une famille de journaliers. Car outre le logement elle y trouve encore les légumes dont elle a besoin, souvent l'entretien d'une chèvre, et lorsque la propriété comporte de 1 à 2 hectares, elle lui produit des fruits, du blé, des pommes de terre, et souvent de la vigne ; enfin ce qu'un paysan Irlandais n'obtient qu'au prix d'un loyer de cinq guinées.

Les communes possédant encore en France, malgré les brèches que la révolution a faites à leurs propriétés, une superficie de 3,117,281 hectares, dont 1,959,904 en forêts et le surplus en terres et vaines pâtures, les habitans de la commune reçoivent une délivrance annuelle en bois, sans autres frais que ceux d'aller le couper et le chercher dans l'emplacement à ce désigné dans le bois communal. Ailleurs les terres et les friches se louent à la parcelle et à bas prix aux plus pauvres du village, pour les cultiver.

Ces avantages très notables pour les indigens sont à la vérité locaux, parceque les biens des communes sont très inégalement répartis entr'elles. Il en est de fort riches, il en est qui ne possèdent rien. Il en est dont les propriétés sont bien administrées ; il en est d'autres où la plus honteuse négligence a laissé ces biens sans emploi et les pauvres sans ressources ; cependant là où ils existent et où ils sont bien administres, ils leur sont d'un grand secours.

Mais celui qui leur a été offert sur presque tous les points du royaume, c'est l'usage qui s'y est introduit de donner aux pauvres journaliers des parcelles de terre à cultiver à moitié fruit. C'est à dire que les grands ou moyens propriétaires remettent à ceux qui en manquent, de la terre arable pour être cultivée par eux à la bêche dans la saison morte, et semée au printemps en plantes sarclées, telles que pommes de terre, pois, choux, haricots ou maïs ; sous la condition que la recolte en sera enlevée au premier Octobre pour être ensémencée en céréales. Cette recolte est partagée entre le propriétaire et le cultivateur dans la même proportion où ils en ont fourni les semences, savoir par moitié.

L'avantage que le propriétaire trouve dans cette méthode est celui d'obtenir pour une demi recolte qu'il sacrifie, et sans avances ni embarras pour lui, un sol soigneusement défoncé et dépouillé de mauvaises herbes, qu'il destine presque toujours à porter l'année d'après de la luzerne ou du trèfle.

Le pauvre y trouve celui de s'approvisionner de denrées précieuses pour lui, sans aucun déboursé et au moyen d'un travail qu'il opère pendant les journées sans emploi de l'hiver ; tandis que les travaux d'été s'exécutent par sa femme et ses enfans. Aussi ces cultures parcellaires ne sont elles pas seulement à l'usage des journaliers et des très petits propriétaires, les artisans dans les villages s'y adonnent avec beaucoup d'ardeur.

Les différentes ressources qu'obtiennent de la sorte les indigens qui appartiennent à la population rurale de la France, indépendamment du gain de leurs journées, peuvent être estimée s'élever au $\frac{1}{3}$ de leurs besoins.

Ainsi la somme nécessaire pour faire subsister une famille étant en moyenne en France de 531 francs, les ressources en logement, chauffage, pommes de terre et légumes représentent 177 francs. Le journalier pourvoit aux 354 fr. qui lui manquent, fr.

1°. Par 200 journées, à 1 f. - - - - -	200
2°. Par 120 journées de sa femme, à 60 c. - - - - -	72
3°. Par 320 journées de leur nourriture, l'usage étant en France de nourrir les journaliers dans la ferme, à 60 c. l'une - - - - -	192
4°. Plus dans le cas où le journalier obtient des ressources indépendantes au gain de son travail, la somme de - - - - -	177
Il dispose alors pour assurer l'existence de sa famille de la somme de	641

Ce terme peut être considéré comme le medium de la position du journalier en France. Je dis le medium; parceque tous ceux qui sont chargés d'une famille au dessus de cinq personnes, tous ceux qui ne participent que peu ou point aux 177 fr. que nous avons considérés comme étant la valeur représentative des ressources qu'ils obtiennent en dehors des salaires de leurs journées, se trouvent réduits à une somme inférieure à celle que coûte leur entretien. Pour cette classe malheureuse le déficit ne peut se combler qu'à l'aide d'un plus grand nombre de journées de travail ou de travaux faits à forfait, dans des entreprises publiques ou pour l'exploitation des forêts, &c., travaux payés à plus haut prix, et que l'ouvrier augmente par la plus grande activité de son labeur.

Enfin c'est dans cette classe que les souffrances de la misère se font réellement sentir, et c'est alors aussi que s'exercent en leur faveur les divers moyens de secours gratuits dont nous avons fait mention.

Les familles dont les enfans ont atteint l'âge où ils peuvent pourvoir à tout ou partie de leur entretien, celles qui en ont moins de trois, celles dont la propriété s'étend à la superficie de 1 à 2 hectares, celles dont les tems de chômage sont occupés par quelque industrie, ces familles sont au dessus du medium que nous avons fixé, et sont mises ainsi au dessus des besoins qui réclament des secours gratuits.

En recherchant le nombre de ceux qui peuvent être rangés dans ces deux catégories, nous ne pensons pas qu'il y ait au delà du tiers des familles que nous avons reconnues pour appartenir aux classes pauvres de la campagne, que l'on puisse considérer comme placées au dessous du medium que nous avons fixé plus haut à la somme de 641 fr.

C'est à dire que le nombre des pauvres dont la position est réellement misérable, dans la population rurale de la France, n'atteint qu'au nombre d'individus -	2,072,000
Auxquels il faut ajouter ceux des pauvres qui habitent les petites villes dans lesquelles il n'y a point de taxes établies en leur faveur, et où leurs moyens de secours ne consistent que dans les hospices, les charités particulières et les secours de voisinage. Cette catégorie de pauvres s'élevant au 7 me de la population, comprend ci individus - - - - -	500,000
Total des pauvres qui ne participent à aucune taxe - - -	2,572,000
Pauvres des grandes villes qui jouissent d'une taxe - - - - -	500,000
Pauvres entretenus par le gouvernement, par les divers dépôts de mendicité, maisons de travail, &c. &c. - - - - -	50,000
Total des pauvres en France - - -	3,122,000

C'est donc à un peu plus de 3 millions qu'il faut réduire le nombre des nécessiteux dans l'état actuel de l'économie que la France a reçue de sa révolution; c'est à dire un 10me de sa population, dont secourus par une taxe des pauvres - - - - -	500,000
Entretenus aux frais du gouvernement - - - - -	50,000
Aliénés et enfans abandonnés secourus par le gouvernement, et le surplus soigné par les fondations d'hospices dans les cas d'accidens et de maladies graves, et par les secours individuels dans les cas moins fâcheux - - -	30,000

Mais il ne faut pas se dissimuler que la France est aujourd'hui dans une période où sa richesse mobilière ayant été croissante, a fait beaucoup de demandes et donné beaucoup de travail à presque toutes les classes d'artisans; tandis que la repartition d'un capital foncier de 5 milliards, répandu à la fois parmi sa population rurale, en a appelé de proche en proche un grand nombre à jouir de l'aisance, et a en quelque sorte augmenté la part de tous à l'avoir national.

Mais il ne faut pas se dissimuler qu'à mesure que la population s'accroît, le pays se rapproche d'un nouveau point de saturation,—époque dont l'arrivée se hâte par l'effet même de la législation, qui ordonnant le partage des propriétés entre les enfans, tend à les subdiviser à l'infini, et à multiplier ainsi les familles des propriétaires dont la possession est totalement insuffisante pour assurer leur existence. Non seulement la loi produit cet effet, mais les habitudes générales; c'est à dire les mœurs y poussent la population avec une grande énergie. La subdivision de la propriété y est accélérée par l'action des bandes noires, qui vont sur tous les points du royaume acheter des propriétés en gros pour les revendre en détail. Ce morcellement de la propriété favorise l'établissement d'une foule de domiciles, construits par des économies qu'ont pu faire de petits industriels et des artisans intelligens, qui ne considèrent leur petit avoir comme assuré qu'autant qu'ils ont pu le fixer en immeuble.

Le mouvement de subdivision en se propageant sans relâche, doit nécessairement rejeter dans la classe des nécessiteux un nombre toujours croissant d'individus, et il ne nous est pas donné de prévoir quelles seront les nouvelles ressources que leur ouvrira l'économie future du pays.

Il nous reste à examiner ce qu'est aujourd'hui l'état du paupérisme en Angleterre.

En évaluant la population totale de la Grande Bretagne à 23 millions, dont

7,500,000 pour l'Irlande,
 2,500,000 pour l'Ecosse, et 13,000,000 pour l'Angleterre,

Total - 23,000,000,

nous avons à rechercher ce que la population de l'Angleterre seule, montant à 13 millions, comprend de journaliers; c'est à dire d'individus vivans à la semaine du produit de leur travail manuel, et ayant droit à jouir des dons de la taxe des pauvres.

Douze cent mille Anglais participent aux droits électoraux d'après les clauses de dernier Bill qui a réglé ces droits. En admettant que ces 1,200,000 électeurs représentent chacun une famille de cinq personnes, on reconnaîtra qu'il y a 6 millions d'individus dont la position sociale les met à l'abri de tous besoins, et qui restent étrangers à l'application de cette taxe; si ce n'est pour en subir la perception.

Nous pouvons admettre qu'entre la classe électorale et celle du journalier il doit se trouver au moins un million d'individus, dont l'existence se trouve assuré sans recourir aux bienfaits de la taxe.

Elle resterait donc applicable à 6 millions d'individus, dont 3 millions appartiennent aux journaliers industriels, et 3 aux journaliers agricoles.

Ces deux classes doivent être rangées sur la même ligne quant à leurs moyens d'existence, car elles sont également dépourvues de toute possession et de tout capital, si ce n'est celui de leurs vêtemens, de leur très petit mobilier, et des outils de leur profession. Leur existence ne repose que sur leurs salaires.

Or, ces salaires, en admettant qu'ils soient basés sur le prix des subsistances, ne sauraient néanmoins pourvoir aux accidens, aux infirmités, à l'impuissance de l'âge, à l'entretien des enfans en bas âge, ni enfin aux tems de chômage ou au renchérissement des subsistances auxquels diverses causes exposent les journaliers. Car le prix du travail se règle sur celui nécessaire à l'entretien de l'ouvrier valide.

Il faut donc que la société vienne d'une manière quelconque au secours du déficit que ces diverses circonstances apportent dans l'existence des familles d'ouvriers,—circonstances dont l'effet sur le sort de ces familles est d'autant plus complet, qu'elles n'ont aucunes possessions, aucunes réserves, aucunes ressources pour y parer, et qu'elles ne peuvent faire face ni supporter sans périr la moindre suppression de travail, ni même une baisse dans le prix de ce travail, presque toujours offert au minimum par l'effet de la concurrence même qui s'établit entre les journaliers.

Or, nous avons vu qu'il n'y avait en Angleterre qu'un très petit nombre de fondations d'hospices, que les capitaux destinés à servir au soulagement des pauvres y avaient été distraits de cet emploi, et que quelque grande qu'y soit la bienfaisance particulière, on ne pouvait confier à cette puissance inconnue le sort et l'existence d'une classe composée de 6 millions d'individus: il devient donc évident que, placée dans de telles circonstances, l'Angleterre a du avoir recours à une large institution, destinée à pourvoir par des ressources proportionnées aux besoins et aux chances malheureuses qui exposent sans cesse l'existence d'une moitié à peu-près de sa population.

Cette institution a consisté dans la taxe qu'on perçoit en faveur des pauvres sur les propriétaires fonciers. Cette taxe n'est pas limitée, sa quotité s'établit annuellement d'après ce qu'il en a coûté pour les secours que les circonstances de l'année ont appelé les magistrats chargés de ce soin à distribuer aux pauvres. Ce n'est donc pas ici le droit du pauvre qui se trouve déterminé par la quotité même du capital ou des moyens mis à part pour le secourir; ce sont au contraire les droits du pauvre à recevoir qui sont illimités; puisque la taxe doit s'établir d'après l'étendue de ses demandes et de ses besoins.

Sans doute qu'une telle forme donne à cette institution les caractères les plus funestes; et malgré les soins et les précautions que prennent sans doute les magistrats chargés d'en faire la distribution, elle encourage toutes les causes de misère, en donnant en quelque sorte une prime à la paresse, à l'incurie, et aux vices dissipateurs compagnons de la pauvreté.

Mais à côté de ces graves inconvéniens elle pourvoit aussi à sauver les maux auxquels la position de l'ouvrier expose nécessairement le sort de sa famille dans l'économie de la société, et sans qu'il en soit coupable. Cette imposante nécessité compense l'action fatale de la loi et oblige à la maintenir, parceque sa suppression causerait dans l'économie du pays une épouvantable perturbation.

Examinons maintenant la taxe des pauvres dans son application.

Nous avons dit qu'une population de 6 millions d'individus avait droit à participer aux distributions de cette taxe. Mais de ce nombre il faut distraire, 1°. Ceux qui ne sont pas appelés à faire valoir ce droit, parceque leur famille est élevée et a atteint l'âge ou elle gagne sa propre subsistance, tandis que les parens sont encore habiles à pourvoir à la leur: 2°. Ceux des ouvriers valides dont la subsistance est assurée chez les maîtres qu'ils servent en qualité de valets de ferme, &c. &c.

Cette distraction doit emporter la moitié de la classe des ayant droit à la taxe des pauvres: car d'après leur longévité moyenne, la moitié de leur vie s'écoule dans le période nécessaire pour

Appendix (F.)

Communications.Mons. F. L.
De Chateaufieux.

pour élever leur famille, et l'autre moitié dans celui où débarassés de ce soin ils peuvent suffire à gagner leur propre subsistance, tandis que le nombre des journaliers infirmes et caducs compense celui des ouvriers dont l'existence est assurée chez les maîtres qu'ils servent.

Il reste donc 3 millions d'ouvriers en demeure de recevoir les distributions provenant de la taxe des pauvres. Cette taxe s'étant élevée à la somme de 9 millions sterlings, les ouvriers indigens y participent dans la proportion de 3 l. par tête, et les 6 millions d'individus compris dans la classe électorale, et qui par leur position sont appelés à contribuer au prorata de leur fortune à faire les fonds de cette taxe, y sont ainsi appelés à raison de 1 l. 10 s. par tête.

Mais cette institution a non seulement tous les inconvénients moraux que nous avons signalés, elle offre encore celui de menacer sans cesse d'une augmentation, proportionnée à l'accroissement graduel d'une population, sur laquelle les inconvénients moraux de cette taxe agiront dans la proportion même de son accroissement.

C'est donc à parer au crescendo fatal des inconvénients croissans, tant matériels que moraux de cette institution, que l'attention des économistes Anglais s'est aujourd'hui tendue.

Il nous reste donc à faire l'examen des moyens par lesquels on pourrait y parvenir.

Quels peuvent être les moyens d'améliorer le sort d'une population de 6 millions d'individus pressés dans un espace borné et sur lequel ils ne possèdent rien, dans un pays où l'activité industrielle et rurale a déjà élevé au plus haut prix la rente de la terre et sa valeur vénale, et où par conséquent il ne reste presque pas de vide agricole à remplir, ni de capitaux à disposer en faveur de cette amélioration ?

Il faut d'ailleurs laisser en dehors toute possibilité de participer à une amélioration quelconque, la classe des ouvriers industriels qui habitent dans les villes. Pour ceux-là il faut nécessairement maintenir l'institution de la taxe ; car il n'y a nuls moyens de substituer d'autres ressources à celle qui seule peut venir au secours de la somme de misère qui accable périodiquement de telles populations. Il a fallu y recourir en France, il faut la conserver en Angleterre.

La classe des ouvriers industriels, comprenant dans ce dernier pays la moitié de sa population, ce serait donc pour 3 millions d'individus qu'il faudrait dans tous les cas conserver l'institution de la taxe. Néanmoins une grande part de la fabrication s'exécutant dans les compagnes, nous pensons que ce nombre peut être restreint à 2 millions ; parcequ'un million d'ouvriers industriels doivent séjourner hors des villes, et sont habiles par là à participer aux améliorations qu'il serait possible d'apporter dans le sort des journaliers agricoles. Le nombre total des individus dont le sort serait ainsi susceptible de recevoir quelque amélioration, s'élèverait à 4 millions.

De quelle nature peuvent être ces améliorations ?

Il faut les chercher dans la situation présente de l'économie du pays, d'après la division des propriétés, le mode de leur exploitation, et les moyens qu'on y emploie pour tirer le meilleur parti de la force productive du sol. Car il ne faut pas songer à faire intervertir ces grandes bases du système économique d'un pays, en vue d'un but dont la nature est toute morale. Ce n'est pas ainsi que les choses se passent dans l'ordre actuel des sociétés. Elles ne sauraient même s'y passer ainsi sans en changer le mobile et le jeu. L'activité et l'intelligence humaine ne peuvent être stimulés qu'en vue de l'intérêt particulier de chacun, et ce n'est que du concours de tous ces intérêts, travaillant séparément, que se forme l'action générale de l'économie, qui est plus ou moins prospère en raison de ce que les dispositions de l'état social ont plus ou moins développé l'action de tous ces intérêts particuliers.

Ce ne sera donc ni en vue d'améliorer le sort du pauvre, ni en vue de corriger les vices de la taxe établie pour les secourir, que les propriétaires se décideraient à changer le mode de leur exploitation, à la parceller entre les familles pauvres, au lieu d'en confier l'administration à un riche et habile fermier. Car il vaut mieux pour ce propriétaire payer sa part de la taxe, que de compromettre son revenu en confiant l'exploitation de sa terre à des mains mal pourvues du capital et des fonds nécessaires pour mener à bien cette exploitation. La production même du pays pourrait être compromise d'une manière fatale par un tel changement, brusquement opéré dans le mode de la culture de ses terres, et une telle expérience ne saurait se tenter.

Mais elle est impossible ; parcequ'il est impossible de réunir dans l'exécution de tout projet de ce genre le concours des intérêts particuliers, dont l'action simultanée constitue l'économie du pays.

Il ne faut donc s'attacher qu'à la recherche des moyens de soulagement que présente l'état des choses tel qu'il existe aujourd'hui en Angleterre. Car on ne saurait calculer celui qu'y produirait une révolution sociale si elle devait être malheureusement exposée à en subir, comme la France, la terrible explosion.

Le seul capital qui reste disponible en Angleterre est celui qu'y possèdent encore un certain nombre de communes. Beaucoup d'entre ces communes ont partagé leurs terres en vertu des bills de clôture qu'elles avaient obtenus du Parlement pendant les années de la guerre et de la cherté des subsistances. Ces partages se sont opérés entre les ayant droits ; c'est à dire entre les communiens, d'après les règles qui président à tous les partages de propriété indivise, où les plus forts intéressés ont la plus grosse part ; ensorte que les petits intéressés ont pour la plupart vendu leurs petites parts aux grands intéressés, portés qu'ils étaient à recevoir et à consommer le capital qui leur en était offert.

Les biens appartenants à ces communes sont rentrés ainsi dans le capital de la propriété particulière, et n'offrent plus aucunes ressources à mettre à la disposition des pauvres.

Mais si au lieu d'opérer le partage des biens communaux, l'administration de la commune s'était bornée à louer pour quelques années des parcelles des terres qu'elle possède en vaine pâturage, et cela à très bas prix, aux journaliers domiciliés sur son territoire, il en serait résulté 1°. Que le capital de ces terres n'aurait point été aliéné et absorbé dans la propriété particulière. 2°. Que ce capital aurait été néanmoins utilisé pour la reproduction. 3°. Qu'il aurait servi à l'amélioration du sort des pauvres qui l'auraient défriché, de toute la différence entre le prix du loyer qu'ils en auraient payé, et le montant du revenu qu'ils auraient obtenu de sa récolte. 4°. Que la commune aurait encaissé le montant de ses loyers, et aurait augmenté d'autant les moyens dont elle dispose pour le soulagement de ces pauvres. C'est à dire qu'en créant par la mise en valeur de terrains en friche une nouvelle rente, cette rente aurait fourni un moyen de secours de plus dont une portion aurait été acquise aux pauvres en nature et pour prix de leur travail, et dont l'autre portion, versée dans la caisse de la commune, y aurait figuré comme un à compte sur le montant de la taxe qu'elle a droit de lever sur les propriétaires pour secourir ses pauvres.

Nous n'hésitons pas, d'après les heureux effets que nous avons vu résulter de cette mesure, d'en conseiller la plus prompte adoption dans toutes celles des communes de l'Angleterre, où il existe encore des terres en vaine pâture.

La location de terres en friche faite à la parcelle et à bas prix aux pauvres domiciliés dans la commune, ne peut être considérée sans doute que comme un palliatif, et un supplément à la grande charge qu'impose la taxe aux propriétaires de l'Angleterre. En premier lieu, parceque cette location ne peut avoir lieu que partiellement, et là seulement où il existe des communes qui possèdent de tels capitaux. En second lieu, parceque le bénéfice de cette location ne saurait être que proportionné à la superficie du sol affermé, et à son revenu.

Ainsi en supposant que chaque famille pauvre loue un acre de terre au prix de 10 s. et qu'elle obtienne de la récolte une valeur de 40 s., valeur qu'elle aura créé par un travail opéré en tems perdu, et en y occupant la femme et les enfans, cette famille aura gagné 30 s. en défalcation de ce qu'elle a droit d'attendre de la taxe des pauvres. Ce droit serait de 7 l. 10 s. pour chaque famille de 5 personnes, il serait par conséquent réduit à 6 l. par le bénéfice obtenu sur la culture d'un acre; tandis que la caisse communale encaisserait 10 s. à compte des 6 l. qu'elle doit à cette famille pour son droit à la taxe.

Ce compte appliqué à la contenance d'un acre, présenterait au profit de la taxe des pauvres des bénéfices proportionnés à l'étendue du terrain dont les communes disposeraient de la sorte.

Mais en outre de ces bénéfices, elles trouveraient dans cette disposition du capital foncier qu'elles possèdent encore, les avantages moraux qui résultent de l'intérêt qu'elle donnerait aux pauvres domiciliés, dans la participation à une propriété quelconque: car quoique cette propriété ne repose que sur un bail de quelques années, et sur les récoltes obtenues sur le sol affermé, ce n'en est pas moins un ressort puissant sur l'esprit humain, que celui que fait agir sur lui la possession d'un avenir de quelques années, comparé à l'absence de tout avenir et de toute possession confiée à cet avenir. L'intérêt social s'amointrit à mesure que l'homme a moins à attendre de cette société, et l'abrutissement moral du pauvre s'accroît de toute l'importance qu'a pour lui le présent, de toute la nullité qu'a pour lui l'avenir: car la moralité ne consiste que dans le sacrifice perpétuel du présent à l'avenir.

Dans celles des communes que le partage de leurs biens en a déjà dépouillées, on ne saurait appliquer au régime des pauvres d'autres palliatifs que celui dont la France a fait un heureux emploi: savoir celui d'engager les propriétaires ou plutôt leurs fermiers à concéder pour une saison aux journaliers voisins, des parcelles de terre pour y cultiver des pommes de terre et des légumes à moitié fruit.

Mais le régime agricole de l'Angleterre présente à l'adoption de cet usage beaucoup plus de difficultés qu'il n'en a rencontré en France.

La première de toutes tient à ce qu'une grande partie du sol de l'Angleterre ne consiste qu'en une légère couche d'humus reposant sur un lit de craye, qu'il serait dangereux d'entamer avec la bêche; c'est à dire trop profondément, sous peine d'altérer pour longtemps la fécondité que les engrais ont imprimée au sol. Le bénéfice obtenu par le défoncement du sol, si précieux pour la généralité des propriétaires Français, serait donc en sens inverse en Angleterre, et les fermiers ne gagneraient à la culture parcellaire que le nettoyage complet du sol ainsi cultivé.

La seconde de ces difficultés provient de ce que l'usage assez général en France est de cultiver les pommes de terre sans engrais, et de ne distribuer le fumier sur les terres qu'après leur enlèvement et immédiatement avant d'y semer les céréales; tandis que l'usage en Angleterre est d'appliquer au contraire une abondant fumière aux pommes de terre et aux turneps; afin qu'elle serve encore aux céréales et au trèfle qui leur succèdent.

La troisième difficulté tient à ce que les fermiers Anglais, étant des spéculateurs, pourvus des capitaux nécessaires à leur exploitation, n'apprécient nullement ces économies de main d'œuvres, dont le cultivateur Français fait un si grand cas. Il suffit que cette main d'œuvre puisse être compensée avec quelque profit par la récolte, pour que le fermier préfère en Angleterre en faire les avances dans l'espoir d'un remboursement lucratif.

Dans cette disposition il sera peu tenté de parceller la culture de grandes pièces de terre, pour les donner à cultiver à demi récolte à des journaliers auxquels il peut faire exécuter à forfait et à son profit seul la même culture.

Ces difficultés ne sont pas néanmoins des obstacles insurmontables. Sans doute qu'ils ne sauraient être vaincus, a priori, ni de haute lutte; car rien ne peut obliger des propriétaires ou des fermiers à adopter un usage sans profit immédiat pour eux; mais il reste pour y parvenir la voye de la persuasion et celle de l'exemple. La persuasion peut venir d'une conviction émise par des écrits, par l'exposition des résultats de cet usage faite dans les clubs et les réunions agricoles; tandis que l'exemple de le mettre en pratique peut être donné sur beaucoup beaucoup de points du royaume à la fois, parcequ'il y existe un assez grand nombre de propriétaires animés de l'amour du bien et disposés à le mettre en action, pour consacrer quelques acres de leurs moins bons sols, à l'essai d'un usage dont l'effet pourrait être grand, lorsqu'il parviendrait à se généraliser sur le sol de l'Angleterre.

L'effet pourrait en être grand, non seulement en ce qu'il donnerait aux pauvres 2 l. par acre en déduction de ce qu'ils ont droit à recevoir de la taxe, mais aussi par les résultats moraux que cette participation à la propriété exerce sur l'esprit de ceux qui n'ont rien. Enfin l'effet pourrait en devenir grand, en ce qu'il servirait à ouvrir la voye à un changement dans l'économie rurale de l'Angleterre d'après lequel un système de fermage à la parcelle s'y introduirait à la longue.

Ce système n'a produit, il est vrai, aucuns bons effets en Irlande, en raison de quoi les économistes Anglais sont bien peu disposés à le préconiser et encore moins à l'admettre ; mais ont ils bien examiné si ces fâcheux résultats n'ont point été la conséquence de causes sociales politiques, et dont les racines étaient dans l'histoire de l'Irlande et dans le génie de cette nation ; puisque ce même système a produit de très heureux résultats en France, en Belgique, en Suisse, et en Italie ?

Résumons : l'adoption d'une mesure d'après laquelle les communes disposeraient des terres en friche qu'elles possèdent encore, pour les louer à bas prix aux familles pauvres à condition de les cultiver ; tandis que là où ces terres manquent, les propriétaires accorderaient à ces familles des parcelles de leurs domaines pour les cultiver pendant une saison à moitié produit, cette adoption serait applicable à une population de 4 millions d'individus ; c'est à dire à 800 mille familles d'ouvriers auxquelles elle fournirait en raison de 2 l. par famille et par acre, et viendrait ainsi en déduction de la taxe des pauvres pour une quotité de 1,600,000 l.

Mais cette taxe ne continuerait pas moins à se percevoir dans la proportion de 7,400,000 l. En sorte que les mesures que nous proposons ne peuvent être considérées que comme un palliatif à un fleau qui me paraît être inhérent à l'économie de l'Angleterre, et qu'elle doit se résoudre à supporter, parcequ'il est une conséquence forcée des faits de son histoire et de son immense prospérité.

Esq.NOTES on the ADMINISTRATION of the RELIEF of the POOR in France, by Ashhurst Majendie, Esq.

THE following Notes were made during a residence of a few months in a part of Normandy. Having been engaged in the examination of that district in England in which the evils of the abuse of Poor Laws are most strongly developed, I thought it might be an interesting object of inquiry to observe the situation of a country which was free from those abuses, and to ascertain generally what was the system of management in a part of France bearing a considerable resemblance to England. I thought it probable that some hints might be obtained, tending to the improvement now contemplated by the Government, and I take the liberty of offering this Report, however incomplete and humble it may be, with the view of contributing to that important object. The Ministre du Commerce did me the honour to give me a letter of introduction from Mons. Le Baron Fumeron d'Ardeuil, the director of all the charitable institutions in the kingdom, addressed to the préfet of the department de la Manche, from whom and from the sous-préfet of Valognes, and also from the préfet du Calvados, resident at Caen, I received every assistance, and access to all public documents, and admission to all the establishments. My friend, Mons. De Gerville, of Valognes, also exerted himself in every way to assist my inquiries.

According to the system established in France (unless by a combination beyond all probability) it is next to impossible that fraud should enter into the management of the Poor fund.

The administration of the Poor Laws, instead of being placed in the hands of men discharging a thankless and compulsory office, incompetent by education to any enlarged views, and frequently interested in the maintenance of abuse, is confided to persons independent in property, and of the highest consideration, who consider the charge a duty entitling them to the respect and gratitude of their country; they undertake this office of responsibility from a sense of public duty, seeking the confidence of their fellow-citizens by a zealous discharge of it; they are also subject to a rigid control. If it were possible that in any small community abuses should exist, the rigid inspection of the prefect, an officer of high trust, free from local interests or prejudice, could hardly fail to detect it; if, for instance, it were found that the expense of diet, or of any articles provided, were higher than ordinary, the question as to the cause would immediately arise; a comparison with other parishes would be instituted, and contracts made at too high a price would be open to more general competition. It must be observed, that in towns alone a compulsory fund is levied for the use of the poor, and that indirectly, by means of the octroi; the tax being limited in its nature, being levied on the consumption of provisions, and there being other objects also for its destination, the fund for the wants of the poor cannot be indefinite, and must *, consequently, be administered with economy. In rural districts, there are no means for the relief of the poor, unless it be admission to the hospices of the neighbouring towns, to which they consequently crowd, and it is represented that great distress does really exist in consequence of the absence of all relief: at one period bureaux de bienfaisance were established in Cantons (districts containing several parishes), but they were not found to answer, probably from the want in such situations of proper administrators. In spite of some partial distress, the advantages derived by all classes of society from the frugal and well-ordered system of relief established in France are very apparent. The proprietor is safe in the enjoyment of his property, free from the anxiety incident to a state of circumstances which, in England, is every year tending to the absorption of all property, impoverishing the giver, without enriching him who receives †. The occupier is able to make his arrangements with his landlord, free from a tax which is undefined and cannot be calculated; free from imposed labour, he is able to employ labourers according to his means of obtaining a profitable return, and those only whom he may require. Agriculture, therefore, is represented as flourishing; a kindly feeling exists between the farmer and the peasant, who is generally, in Normandy, proprietor of a little land; the farmers frequently assist their labourers in ploughing, and advance seed corn; the labourers, in return, do a certain number of days' work at harvest, called jours d'honneur, without pay, receiving only their board.

Finally, the labourer does not see his industry oppressed by the allowance system; he receives the value of his labour whether married or single, not the mere minimum of subsistence; he is aware of his real position, and instead of demanding as a right a share in an unlimited fund, looks forward from early life to his own exertions as the only means of support; like the other classes of society, he feels that he is not exempt from the consequences of his own conduct; and that if he makes an improvident marriage the burden must fall

* The octroi is a duty imposed on the entry of wines and other articles of consumption into towns, and was originally established solely for the benefit of the poor; subsequently this tax has become the general revenue of towns, and the municipality vote certain portions for the poor, part to the hospitals, part to the bureaux de bienfaisance.

† The sum now paid as poor tax in England is larger than the land tax of France, and put into the denomination of francs, two hundred millions, fills the French with astonishment.

fall on himself. During the time of the war indeed, owing to the great waste of life in battles, and the exemption of married men at one period from conscription, (which was changed) early marriages were very frequent. At present it is usual for peasants to wait to the age of 30 or upwards before they marry; thus they are able to make a provision by saving; frequently they are able to purchase a house and a small plot of land. Having no encouragement by the law to marry, under the persuasion that the State must maintain their children, there is no inducement to improvidence.

The cheap mode of transfer of property by the offices for registration of deeds in the country towns much facilitates the acquisition of land by peasants. Without entering into reasoning on the propriety of the law which divides property among the children, or on the question whether the great subdivision is or is not beneficial to the country, this is evidently advantageous; and the increase of population which is dreaded from too minute subdivision, does not take place, the peasants deferring the period of marriage.

Thus, unless in seasons of general distress, there being no pretence for demands from the sturdy and able-bodied, the duties of the administrators of the poor are confined to the care of the really distressed. On one point, the receiving indiscriminately all illegitimate and deserted children without inquiry, the French system seems to produce great evil, both in a moral and economical point of view. One great crime, infanticide, is avoided, but laxity of morals must be produced by parents being able to place at the charge of the country the offspring of their vices, and divest themselves of all care and all shame on the subject. The expense also is enormous; (see Foundlings.)

Relief is administered partly by hospitals (uniting the two objects of hospitals for the sick and poor-houses), which are confined to the in-poor, partly by bureaux de charité, which visit the poor at their own houses, and give relief in kind, and by ateliers de charité for the instruction and employment of children. A great advantage exists for both these institutions, in the assistance of the different religious orders of Sisters of Charity, who devote themselves to the care of the sick in hospitals, and to the different establishments for the relief of the poor, and the education of the young. The care which these excellent ladies give to the objects of their solicitude is above all praise; it is a service which money could not buy; it is fully appreciated by the government, and by the administrators of public charities; the reports from the directors of hospitals are full of acknowledgments of their inestimable services*.

But in their superintendence of the different charities, though the really distressed meet with every consolation that can be offered, no false sensibility is shown towards the vicious; they resist the claims of the idle with firmness; and in the assistance which they give by domiciliary visits, to examine the real state of the distressed, their attention seems equally directed to seek out the proper objects, and to reject the demands of the importunate, thus usefully seconding the views of the government, and acting under the direction of the administrators of hospitals.

Another great assistance in the religious and moral education of the poor is derived from the institution of les Frères des écoles Chrétiennes.

The religious order of les Frères des écoles Chrétiennes is instituted for the instruction of the indigent; it is supposed to consist of about 2,000 members, instructing 100,000 children. They take the vows of celibacy, poverty and obedience, and are under the direction of a superior residing at Paris, by whose orders they are liable to be sent to any part of the world. They are not at liberty to receive payment from any individual; but are supported by a fixed salary, either from a foundation, or the town where they reside. Besides reading and writing, and religious instruction, they give some knowledge in geography, mathematics applied to the arts, drawing and land measuring. The knowledge thus acquired is found of the greatest advantage to mechanics, as the lessons and kind of drawing they teach is peculiarly adapted for builders, carpenters and cabinet-makers. The pupils are taken out into the fields and instructed in land-measuring, which proves of great advantage to both farmers and labourers; in bargains for piece-work it prevents disputes, and facilitates an amicable settlement, and the great subdivision of land in France makes it also peculiarly useful, and enables many to earn a livelihood by exercising it as a profession.

I visited two of these establishments, one at Valognes, founded by the Marquis de Chifrevaet, the other at Havre. The kindness and good humour and patient encouragement with which the masters draw forth the talents of their pupils, produce the happiest effects. The government extends its protection to them; nor is it probable that it will be withdrawn from an institution of so much utility to the country.

Foundlings.

THE law of France cautiously avoids any inquiry into the maternity or paternity of foundlings and bastards; at one period, unmarried mothers of children were subject to inquiry, but infanticide was found to increase, and the practice was discontinued. A small box is placed in the exterior wall of the principal hospitals, moving on a pivot; the children are deposited there by the mother or the midwife, the box is turned round, and thereby rings a bell, a bell, which communicates with the porter's lodge; the children are put under the care of nurses resident in the hospital for that purpose, and are afterwards sent out to nurse in the country at the expense of the department. The great increase in the number of foundlings, induced the minister in the year 1827 to address a circular letter, in which it is stated that the number was increasing in so frightful a manner, being then 122,000, at an expense of 9,000,000 francs, that it was impossible to tolerate any longer the various abuses, which threatened to absorb all the resources of the departments and of parishes in the expense of foundlings alone. A principal abuse was, that married women with very large families, were in the habit of placing their children in the box; and they, as well as mothers of illegitimate children, presented themselves to the board, and had their own children entrusted to them; or else they were placed with some neighbours, where the mothers had at least the satisfaction of seeing their children and watching their health. It was determined, therefore, to change the nurses, to move the children from one arrondissement to another, or even to another department. When this took place, the mothers having lost sight of their children, maternal affection was called into action, and rather than be deprived of that gratification they reclaimed their children, and submitted to the privations consequent on the increased charge. In the department de la Manche, the population of which is 591,284, the effect was as follows:

* "Les devoirs que les dames religieuses hospitalières se sont volontairement imposés pour le bonheur des malades sont gravés au fond de leur cœur. Leur sacrifice est immense; le courage et le dévouement dont à chaque instant elles font preuve ne sont pas un des miracles les moins frappants de la religion. Personne plus qu'elles n'a des droits acquis au respect de l'administration et à la reconnaissance de tous les hommes."—Extract from the report of the Administration des Hospices à Caen.

Number of Foundlings.						Expense.
						Francs.
In 1824	-	-	-	1,905	-	151,294
1825	-	-	-	1,251	-	105,480
1830	-	-	-	1,683	-	116,756

In the latter year the removals had ceased, and the number was considerably increased. The children are maintained at the expense of the department, and remain with the nurses till the age of 12, and then return to the hospitals, where, under the care of the sisters of charity they receive instruction in religion, in reading, and in some useful occupation, till the opportunity offers of apprenticing them.

Able-bodied.

IN very rigorous seasons, or at periods when from peculiar circumstances there is a stagnation, the prefects endeavour, by public works, to find employment for labourers who are turned off by individuals; but as a general rule, relief is never given to the able-bodied but in return for work. Certain sums are voted by the conseils généraux of departments, for laying out and repairing public roads. All these works are carried on, after an examination by engineers, by contract; the work is therefore performed by the piece.

Every parish has the right to tax itself to the extent of four sous in the franc, on the amount of their direct taxes; but this maximum cannot be exceeded without an express law, emanating from the Chambers. This is voted by the municipal council, after deliberative consultation with 10 of the highest taxed proprietors; this sum is appropriated to the general purposes of the parish, for the repair of roads and other public works; and though there is in general no tax for the relief of the poor in rural districts, yet in times of great difficulty a portion of the above may be appropriated to charity.

During the great stagnation of trade which took place immediately after the late revolution, the government voted 5,000,000 of francs for the alleviation of the general distress; this was distributed in different departments, and employed in public works.

This temporary assistance produced the happiest effect, and furnished occupation till the restoration of confidence re-established general employment and prosperity.

In the year 1789 there existed charitable establishments in most parishes, both in the country parishes and in the towns, in which there were funds for the relief of the poor. These establishments were directed by a sort of vestry, composed of the seigneur, the curé, the bailli, or justice, and the principal inhabitants. At the time of the revolution a considerable part of the property of hospitals, and of the endowments for the poor, was confiscated.

The bureaux de charité, or de bienfaisance, were established by law in the years 1796-7. Their revenue consists, 1st, of landed property, being a portion of that formerly belonging to the poor, which had been confiscated during the early periods of the revolution, and of other land granted in place of it, and made applicable to the support of hospitals and bureaux de bienfaisance.

2dly, Of legacies and gifts, in land or money, which they were authorized to accept under certain formalities.

3dly, Of a part of the price of tickets of admission to theatres, balls, concerts, &c.

4thly, Of sums annually voted to them by the municipal councils of towns and rural parishes.

5thly, Of the interest of sums invested in national stocks, or on private security.

The bureaux de charité and hospices are administered by a commission of five principal inhabitants chosen by the prefect, exclusive of the mayor, who is president by right of office; one-fifth go out of office every year, but may be re-elected; they are distinct boards, but the same persons may form part of both. These offices are gratuitous; are considered considered a public service, and give a claim of admission into the order of the Legion of Honour to members who distinguish themselves by their zeal.

The duty of the bureau de charité is to distribute relief in kind at the houses of the poor, after a rigid examination as to the real necessity of the party, for it is said*, "the same anxiety which should be exerted to succour the really indigent, should also be directed to prevent the encouragement of idleness and vice, by a profuse and indiscriminate distribution. The first step is to ascertain the settlement (domicile) of the pauper, which is presumed to be the place of birth. Settlement may, however, be obtained by living in a parish for a year, dating from the entry in the register of the mayoralty. As soon as the motives cease which have caused the admission of the pauper to receive public relief, the relief should be discontinued; also, if a person having the claim of still greater destitution presents himself, or if the pauper makes an ill use of the gift; relief in labour is much recommended, either by the cultivation of the land belonging to the poor, or by public workshops. If, on the one hand, by timely and judicious charity the infirmities of age are relieved, on the other, children are led by moral and religious education, to guard themselves at a more advanced age from destitution. The love of work, the spirit of economy and providence, should be inculcated. In the distribution of relief, the commissions should remember, that misfortune does not extinguish shame and self-esteem; that one of the first objects of the institution is to succour the unfortunate, without making them feel disgrace."

Municipal Councils.

IN each parish there is a municipal council, (vestry,) composed of the mayor (who is appointed by the King,) his assistants, and a certain number of inhabitants, according to the population.

In parishes of 500 inhabitants the number is -	-	-	-	10
500 to 1,500 -	-	-	-	12
10,000 to 30,000 -	-	-	-	27

They are chosen by the assembly of electors, which consists of one-tenth of the individuals paying the greatest sum in the direct taxation, of members of courts of law, of the learned professions, and half-pay officers.

One-third of the tax paid by an estate occupied by a farmer is reckoned to the occupier, so as to give him a claim to be included among the highest taxed individuals in the parish, without derogating from the right of the proprietor.

Three-fourths of the municipal council must be chosen from electors living within the parish.

Four meetings must be held within the year.

In the month of May they draw out their estimate or budget of the expenditure of the parish, which is sent to the sous-prefêt, and ultimately determined by the préfet.

Accompts.

THE system of accompts established in France seems nearly perfect. If there is any fault in the complication of too numerous books, the extreme accuracy thereby insured may atone for the inconvenience; and it must be remembered, that the low denomination of the coin, francs and centimes, necessarily forces an infinity of figures. The receiver of hospitals and bureaux de bienfaisance (these offices are frequently held by the same individual) is proposed by the commission. He is nominated by the prefect from a list of three candidates, and is bound to find security to the amount of one-tenth of the annual receipts.

The commission presents a budget or estimate to the préfet, for his approval, every year, and no item of expense not included therein can be paid without his special permission. One item in the budget is unforeseen expenses; the charge of diet, &c. for different classes of inmates is arranged in a tabular form; one line gives the number of persons, another the number of days, and another the rate per day. The receiver keeps the books of accompts, which consist of, 1st and 2d, two cheque books, one for receipts below 10 francs, the other for receipts above 10 francs, which require a stamp. The employment of cheque books is considered very important, and is of general adoption; in case of suspicion of fraud or falsification, the detached cheque may be fitted to the portion whence it has been separated in the book, which remains at the office.

3d. A general journal or ledger, in which are inserted all the receipts and expenses; this ought to be added up every night.

4th. The great book, in which the totals of the receipts and payments of each day are inserted.

5th. A book of detail, divided into as many pages, both of receipt and payment, as there are heads in the budget. The receiver inscribes in this book the sums as they arise; this forms a cheque on each article; the receiver compares each item with the sum allowed by the budget; this is the most important part of all the system of accounts, affording the means of judging on what article any saving may be effected.

6th. The budget.

The chief articles required are purchased by contract, they are examined by one of the commission, who is called the steward, who certifies as to the quality to another officer, who makes out an order on the receiver. On the 31st December the mayor examines the vouchers and accompt-books; a report is made by the administration to the municipal body, and it is then transmitted to the prefect of the department. Every three months the receiver draws up a report of receipts and payments, one copy of which is sent to the prefect, another to the minister of finance.

Ten months are allowed for the completion of the accompts of the preceding year.

The receiver is bound to keep a register of all the property of the poor, whether in real property, or in funds, or money.

Houses and lands are let by tender; the falls of timber are subject to the same regulations as the woods belonging to the state.

Articles made in the hospitals are sold; one-third of the profit is given to the inmates, two-thirds to the establishment.

Rents are frequently reserved in kind, the price calculated at the market price, and consumed in the houses; printed forms are provided for keeping the accounts, according to a model universally adopted.

The accompts commence the 1st January, and end the 31st December.

Inspection.

THE mayors, by virtue of their office as presidents, have the right of inspection of the state of the funds and of the books of accounts of all establishments for relief of the poor. The inspectors general and ordinary of the finances have the same right at the requisition of the préfet, sous-préfet or mayor. These inspectors make their visits quite unexpectedly; they require to see all the books of accompts as they exist at the moment they arrive; as by law the receivers are bound to cast up the accompts at the end of every day, the minutest error may be instantly detected. In addition to this, the minister of the interior, in the year 1828, formed a special commission for the inspection of bureaux de bienfaisance and foundlings. An official letter was then addressed to the prefects, stating that the extraordinary increase of the number of foundlings, the augmentation of expenses, the various abuses of which complaints were made by the prefects, the resolutions of the general councils* of departments, and reports on the administration and accompts of charitable institutions, left no doubt that great irregularities existed, and that it had become indispensable to re-establish order and economy; it was determined therefore to form a permanent inspection of hospitals, bureaux de bienfaisance, and the state of foundlings. The object of the mission embraced the examination of every part of these establishments, and was directed to give to the government information of the exact state of the administration of public relief, of the resources and wants of each establishment, and to propose, in concert with the local authorities, measures requisite to improve their system of management. The administrators were informed that it was not intended to examine their proceedings with an injurious suspicion, but to exercise that benevolent superintendence which forms one of the obligations which, by law, the government is bound to discharge as guardian of all institutions of public utility.

The inspectors are instructed not to control the administrators in their proceedings in an arbitrary manner, but to offer them useful hints, and such information as may call their attention to those legal principles which ought ever to guide them in their honourable labours. The object of the Government has been, as much as possible, to leave the administration in the hands of the local authorities; but, it is observed, "if it is the duty of Government to leave great latitude for the administration of local interests, it is no less their imperative duty to depart in no way from that superintendence which may maintain uniformity in the application of the general principles of the legislation of the country." It is left to the prefects to carry into effect the measures which may be required in consequence of the report of the inspectors, and they also point out the particular hospitals, &c., which require a special examination. The inspectors were provided with a printed form of questions relative to the budget, the receipts, payments, books of accompts, investments of capital, general state of the property whether in land or funds, number of persons in the establishments, internal management and dietary; a statement of the answers on all these points was to be returned to the office at Paris, which is specially appointed for the control of all the establishments of public charity within the kingdom.

Ordonnances.

IN the instructions and ordonnances on the subject of the poor, the ministers depart from the usual dry announcement of official regulations; they enter into motives and reasons on the subject of public charity, and the principles they wish to inculcate.

The conclusion of the ordonnance of 1828 is so ably expressed, and points out so well the evils of indiscriminate relief, and the duties of the administrators of public charity, without morbid sensibility on one side, or severity on the other, that it seems to me not merely confined to the country it addresses, but to be of general application. I endeavour therefore to translate some portions, as closely as the idioms of the two languages permit.

ABSTRACT of the Circular of the Ministre de l'Interieur.

Foreign

"Society owes relief to those only who, by force of circumstances, are rendered unable to provide for the necessities of life: to distribute relief in any other case, is to create mendicity, to encourage idleness, and produce vice.

"Three kinds of distress claim public relief; the state of poverty, infirmity, abandonment. In the first class are, 1st, those individuals who, living habitually by the work of their hands, are deprived of work by temporary circumstances. 2d, families deprived of their means of existence by sudden calamity.—In the first case it is necessary to ascertain whether the cessation of work is not a pretext for inactivity; above all, the greatest care should be taken not to make the labourer contract a life of idleness; relief should not be given, unless on conviction that the distress is real; and that it is impossible to obtain work to satisfy it; the individual must be required to preserve the desire for work, and to exercise every effort to procure it. The kind of relief is not a matter of indifference, and should be restricted to the distribution in kind of those articles which may satisfy the wants of the party; these are, bread, soup, clothing, fuel, medicines.

"It is recommended that those only may be admitted into hospitals who cannot receive the necessary care at their own houses; whenever the sick person can be taken care of in his own house, with the assistance of the sisters of the various charitable orders, every assistance which the medical art, the skill of the physician, medicine, and necessary diet, can give, should be liberally afforded: this kind of relief, administered at the homes of the sick, offers great advantages on the score of economy; for where the head of a family is sick, the wife and children consider it a source of happiness to be relieved from a part of the expense; if to this be added the consolation which fathers and mothers experience when they can be attended in their own beds by the hands of their own children, it will be readily admitted, that none should be admitted into hospitals but those beings who are so miserable as to possess neither fire-side, nor home, nor relations.

"Another claim to relief is that of the aged man, who has almost reached the term of his existence, who sees all his support fall from him, and finds his slender resources and the means of subsistence by the work of his hands, vanish with the loss of his strength; society has no right to reject the remains of a life which has been useful to it.

"Those men who are called to the office of guardians of the poor, ought to feel the high responsibility of the duty confided to them; they should omit no endeavour to succour the miserable, to alleviate their sufferings, to diminish their misfortunes, by exciting, both by example and a faithful discharge of their duty, the charity of their fellow-citizens.

"I feel persuaded that the care which a wise administration may take, to allow none to participate in public relief but those who have a positive right to it, will reduce by more than half the number of applicants, and will thus enable society to succour the really necessitous. I am convinced that the administration which exercises a wise intelligence, which proportions relief to real want, according to the circumstances and position of life of the indigent claimants, will produce greater effect and relieve a far greater number of the distressed, than those indiscriminate charities, scattered without judgment, which, seeking to include all, rarely satisfy the most urgent claims.

Conclusion.—"To give to all indiscriminately, would be to endow the profession of the beggar; to give to the necessitous alone is to discharge a chief duty towards humanity, is to pay the debt of society: to carry consolation into the bosom of families, there to distribute the relief which benevolence offers, is the perfection of public charity. I invite you, therefore, to let these principles sink deeply into your minds, to make them the rule of your conduct. You will find, in a severe organization of public relief, sufficient funds to provide for real want; you will bring back to the home of the indigent that private charity which a bad administration has driven from it; you will restore to labour the man who has refused it; you will destroy the vices which spring from idleness and dissimulation. This, if I mistake not, is a subject worthy of all your solicitude, and I invite you, in the name of humanity, in the name of public morals, in the name of your country, so to discharge your duties as to leave behind you nothing but blessings."

THE following instances of particular towns are offered in illustration of the Expense and general effects of the System.

Population 7,000.

The hospital was originally founded by the legacies and gifts of pious individuals, and now occupies the site of a dissolved convent, which is a spacious building, with a small farm attached. This is considered one of the best managed hospitals in the department; a gentleman of property undertakes the office of steward. Besides the property belonging to the hospital, the town allows annually, from the receipts of the octroi, the following sums on an average:

To the funds of the hospital	-	-	-	-	-	10,000 francs
For linen given to the poor	-	-	-	-	-	400
Bureau de Charité	-	-	-	-	-	3,000
Attelier de Charité	-	-	-	-	-	4,000
Proportion of the charge of foundlings	-	-	-	-	-	8,000

At the charitable workshop women and children are employed in making lace, which gives considerable profit; it is superintended by Sisters of Charity. Some aged men are employed on the highways and other public works. The total number of inmates in the hospital, including seven Sisters of Charity, who conduct the whole management under the superintendence of the board of directors, amount to 158. The able-bodied are never taken into the hospital; but when families are very large, one or more children are received there; they are employed in spinning, sewing, lace-making, &c.; the men are employed in the cultivation of the farm, which produces milk, vegetables, cider, and a little corn for the consumption of the house. The food is excellent in quality, and the diet proportioned to the age and infirmities of the inmates. The whole expense of the establishment, including repairs and salaries, amounts to about 4*d.* a head per day; the diet alone to 2*d.* The whole expense of the hospital to 42,000*fr.*, of which the portions belonging to foundlings and sick soldiers, are repaid by the government and the department. It is a general rule at the bureau de charité, that relief shall be given in kind, according to the proverb "le pain se mange, l'argent se boit."

Cherbourg.

Contains 17,066 inhabitants.

Thirty ladies of the first consideration in the town have formed themselves into an association for examining the state of the poor at their own houses, and giving information to the authorities of their wants. The atelier de charité was formed by a company, the members of which have received back the whole capital of their shares by the profit on the manufacture of lace. Men out of work are sometimes employed at the public works of the town, at a less rate of wages than those employed by individuals. At the period of general stagnation of business in the year 1831, a loan of 80,000*fr.* was raised for the completion of certain improvements of urgent importance to the town; half of this was given by the government.

The introduction to the regulations of the bureau de bienfaisance, contains such important observations on public charity, that I am induced to insert the following extracts:

RÈGLEMENT du Bureau de Bienfaisance de Cherbourg.

INTRODUCTION au Règlement du Bureau de Bienfaisance.

UN règlement devenait nécessaire pour guider les membres du bureau dans l'exercice souvent difficile de leurs fonctions, pour éclairer les Dames de Charité et généralement toutes les personnes qui s'occupent des pauvres, sur les conditions exigées pour les secours et sur les demandes à faire pour les obtenir.

Le bureau, en établissant des conditions plus sévères que celles qui existent aujourd'hui, a rempli à regret un devoir rigoureux.

Deux motifs l'ont particulièrement dirigé.

Le premier consiste dans l'insuffisance des revenus qui sont stationnaires, comparativement aux besoins, qui semblent aller toujours croissans. C'est là un obstacle matériel qui s'oppose à une extension indéfinie des secours publics et qui fixe naturellement une limite qu'on ne peut franchir.

Le second motif résulte des principes mêmes qui doivent présider à l'administration de la charité publique et qui s'étendent jusqu'à la charité privée. Peut-être ne sera-t-il pas inutile d'en présenter ici un court exposé.

Le premier de ces principes est que l'homme n'a droit aux secours de ses semblables qu'autant qu'il a employé toutes ses forces physiques et morales à s'aider lui-même. Le devoir de l'administration est donc d'abord de lui procurer les moyens de suffire à ses propres besoins. Quand cette ressource sera insuffisante, alors, seulement, il pourra réclamer des secours. Parmi ces moyens l'instruction devra être placée en première ligne.

L'instruction est le plus précieux des secours parcequ'il apprend aux pauvres à se passer de tous les autres.

Les Dames de Charité devront donc veiller à ce que les enfans soient instruits de leurs devoirs religieux et qu'ils fréquentent les écoles publiques établies pour eux. Les parens qui ne voudraient pas se soumettre à cette condition ne recevront du bureau aucun secours. Les enfans qui résisteraient aux injonctions de leurs parens à ce sujet ne seront point admis dans les ateliers de charité, et par la suite, la préférence sera toujours accordée à ceux qui auront profité de ce bienfait, autant qu'il était en eux.

Après l'instruction vient le travail. On ne doit point demander des secours pour celui qui peut travailler. Il faut lui chercher de l'ouvrage: c'est le meilleur service qu'on puisse lui rendre, ainsi qu'à la société; autrement on favorisera sa paresse et bientôt il considérera comme une dette, exigible jusqu'à la fin de ses jours, ce qu'il ne doit qu'à la générosité publique.

Ici, nous ne pouvons nous dissimuler qu'il se présente plusieurs difficultés, quelquefois graves dans la pratique, et c'est là particulièrement que devra s'exercer toute l'attention des Dames de Charité et des personnes qui veulent que leurs bienfaits soient placés à propos.

On ne trouve pas toujours du travail; les pauvres, arrêtés par leur indolence, font peu ou point d'efforts pour s'en procurer; d'autres feignent un état de santé qui leur interdit une occupation pénible ou des soins de ménage qui les en détournent.

C'est aux personnes charitables à s'assurer par elles-mêmes de l'état des pauvres, à s'enquérir pour eux des ateliers où ils pourraient trouver place, des maîtres-ouvriers qui voudraient recevoir des enfans en apprentissage et à les forcer d'y entrer, sous peine de perdre tous droits à leurs charités particulières et aux secours publics qu'ils pourraient réclamer par la suite en cas de maladie.

Nous ne pouvons trop recommander le placement des enfans en apprentissage, c'est le moyen le plus fécond en heureux résultats pour leur avenir. Par là on les accoutume de bonne heure au travail, on leur apprend un état et tel d'entr'eux qui joint à d'heureuses dispositions un commencement d'instruction, devra peut-être, à la charité éclairée, une carrière sinon brillante, au moins heureuse et exempte des misères auxquelles il semblait d'abord destiné.

Que

Que les personnes riches emploient dont ce moyen pour placer utilement leurs bienfaits, que celles dont la fortune est plus restreinte se réunissent et se chargent ensemble d'un ou de plusieurs enfans ; cette charité vaut mieux que bien des aumônes arrachées souvent à l'importunité ou à une aveugle commisération.

Le travail ne procure à l'homme qu'un secours momentané : l'économie seule peut lui assurer une ressource pour l'avenir. Combien d'ouvriers dépensent, à boire et à d'autres mauvais usages, l'excédant dont ils peuvent disposer, quelquefois même la portion de salaire indispensable au besoin de leur famille. Que cette dernière partie reçoive sa destination, elle est sacrée ; mais que la première soit mise en réserve pour des jours plus malheureux, pour la vieillesse si, jusque-là, ils n'éprouvent pas de besoins extraordinaires. Un moyen facile sera bientôt offert à l'ouvrier laborieux : une caisse d'épargnes va être ouverte, où il pourra déposer jusqu'à ses plus petites économies, où elles s'augmenteront chaque année par l'addition des intérêts, où il trouvera toujours une ressource prête en face des accidens qui peuvent suspendre ou arrêter définitivement ses moyens d'existence. Ce serait pour les bienfaiteurs du pauvre une belle tâche à remplir que de contrôler sa dépense et de l'abaisser au niveau de ses besoins le plus rigoureux, pour le forcer à faire chaque semaine ou chaque mois un petit placement. Ce serait une condition utile à mettre aux services qu'on peut lui rendre, aux secours que plus tard il peut être dans la nécessité de réclamer ; que tout secours soient refusés à l'homme connu pour avoir été à même d'économiser et qui ne se présenterait pas avec un livret constatant qu'il a effectué des dépôts à la caisse d'épargnes.

L'instruction, le travail et l'économie, nous le répétons, tels sont pour le pauvre les moyens les plus sûrs d'améliorer son sort : faisons en sorte de les lui procurer de préférence à tous les autres. La charité qui prévoit et travaille pour l'avenir offre tout avantage ; celle qui ne donne qu'une assistance passagère présente, à côté de ses résultats utiles, d'assez graves inconvéniens qu'il importe de signaler ici.

Il est d'abord impossible de faire l'aumône avec une parfaite connaissance de cause. Une juste répartition des secours publics est très-difficile, pour ne pas dire impossible. Quand les Dames de Charité auraient le tems et la volonté de faire tout ce qui leur est recommandé, elles ne pourraient éviter d'être trompées quelquefois et de faire accorder des secours à celui qui n'a pas de besoin réel, au préjudice d'un autre plus misérable.

Ceci n'est que le moindre inconvénient.

L'organisation régulière d'un système de secours, leur abondance, leur périodicité, peuvent être nuisibles, en ce qu'ils accoutument le pauvre à l'idée qu'il trouvera toujours des ressources dans sa vieillesse et en cas de maladie, idée qui l'entretient dans ses dispositions nonchalantes et l'empêche quelquefois de se livrer au travail avec ardeur. Cette organisation ne pouvant avoir lieu que dans les villes, elle a pour résultat d'attirer tous les indigens vers un centre commun. Ils abandonnent quelquefois une contrée qui pourrait leur procurer du travail pour venir dans une autre où ce moyen devient impraticable en raison du grand nombre de ceux qui le réclament. Ils végéteront, avec l'aide de la charité privée, en attendant le moment où ils rempliront les conditions attachées à la distribution des secours publics.

C'est là ce qui est arrivé à Cherbourg depuis que l'administration municipale a consacré une somme plus forte aux dépenses du bureau de charité. Il est urgent d'arrêter ces effets fâcheux. Le premier moyen est de tenir sévèrement à ce qu'on n'accorde de secours qu'aux indigens qui ont le tems de domicile fixé par la loi. Le règlement a été plus loin ; il a prévu que les ressources pourraient devenir insuffisantes même pour ceux qui remplissent cette condition, et il s'est réservé d'étendre le tems exigé jusqu'à la limite qui sera plus tard tracée par la nécessité elle-même.

Les autres moyens consistent dans la sévérité qui doit présider aux admissions, et c'est ici que nous nous adressons particulièrement aux Dames de Charité. Nous ne prétendons pas leur imposer des obligations absolues, mais seulement leur indiquer ce qui est bon à faire, et ce que chacune d'elles fera en raison de ses forces et du tems qu'elle pourra consacrer à cette œuvre pieuse.

Pénétrées de la vérité et de l'importance des principes que nous venons d'exposer, les Dames de Charité s'assureront par elles-mêmes de la situation présente des pauvres au moyen de visites fréquentes et inattendues ; elles requerront, comme garantie de leur conduite passée, le témoignage de leurs voisins ou d'autres personnes qui les connaissent depuis longtems ; si ces pauvres sont étrangers et habitent la ville depuis peu d'années, les Dames s'adresseront au maire qui obtiendra par correspondance les renseignemens désirés.

Par l'ensemble de ces renseignemens la Dame de Charité jugera si l'indigent qui réclame satisfait aux conditions générales exprimées dans la première partie de cet exposé. Elle saura s'il a été à même de recevoir les premiers élémens de l'instruction et s'il en a profité, s'il envoie ses enfans à l'école, s'il peut se livrer, lui et les siens, à quelque travail, si, enfin son état de misère ne vient pas du défaut d'ordre et d'économie.

Cette première information faite, la Dame de Charité aura ensuite à examiner si l'indigent remplit les conditions spéciales indiquées par le règlement ; c'est seulement quand elle aura acquis cette certitude qu'elle adressera sa demande aux membres du bureau. Ceux-ci s'empresseront d'y faire droit aussitôt que les ressources le permettront. Ils se verront à regret forcés de prononcer un refus quand la demande ne sera pas suffisamment motivée. Ils ajourneront jusqu'à la première vacance, si le maximum des secours qu'ils peuvent accorder est atteint.

Afin de mettre le bureau bien à même de juger les droits des réclamans qui ne sont pas encore inscrits, les Dames de Charité devront faire leur demande au moyen d'un bulletin exactement rempli.

Art. 13. Ceux qui se marieront dans une commune et qui l'habiteront pendant six mois, acquerront le droit de domicile de secours.

Art. 14. Ceux qui auront resté deux ans dans la même commune en louant leurs services à un ou plusieurs particuliers, obtiendront le même droit.

Art. 15. Tout soldat qui aura combattu un tems quelconque avec des certificats honorables, jouira de suite du droit de domicile de secours dans le lieu où il voudra se fixer.

Art. 16. Tout vieillard âgé de 70 ans, sans avoir acquis de domicile ou reconnu infirme avant cette époque, recevra le secours de stricte nécessité dans l'hospice le plus voisin.

Art. 17. Celui qui, dans l'intervalle du délai prescrit pour acquérir de secours, se trouvera, par quelque infirmité, suite de son travail, hors d'état de gagner sa vie, sera reçu à tout âge dans l'hospice le plus voisin.

Art. 18. Tout malade, domicilié de droit ou non, qui sera sans ressources, sera secouru ou à son domicile de fait ou dans l'hospice le plus voisin.

Havre.

Population 28,000; of which number not less than 5,000 receive occasional relief. There is a large hospital containing 600 inmates, the total expense of which in the year 1833 was nearly 216,800 francs. In this hospice are received the sick and indigent, and children of very large families; the latter receive instruction till they can be apprenticed with farmers and artisans, the master having the benefit of their labour till the age of 20. Picking oakum for the supply of the shipping furnishes employment. In the hospice wool is spun and sent into the country to be manufactured. Eighteen ladies have formed a committee for the purpose of collecting alms, and examining personally the condition of the poor at their own houses. The bureau de bienfaisance is managed by six sœurs de la miséricorde, who give instruction to 550 female children, and employ them in sewing, knitting and embroidery. All articles of dress distributed to the poor of Havre are made up here; this has the double advantage of economy and useful occupation of the children. When application is made by a poor person, the family is visited by one of the sisters, a registration is made of the settlement, character, occupation, wages, and number of children, and unless in case of sickness or infirmity, relief is not given to families of less than four children.

Caen.

THERE are several excellent establishments for the poor in this city. The ancient Abbaye aux Dames, founded by Matilda, the wife of William the Conqueror, has been converted into a hospital for the diseased, but being entirely confined to that purpose, I do not enter into the details, as they are of a medical nature. The Hospital of St. Louis was originally founded for the reception of the aged, infirm, and children; it is supported at the expense of the town, except the foundlings, who are a charge on the department. When there is room, some of the children of those families which are so numerous as to be beyond the power of the parents to support, are received here. This establishment was built expressly for the purpose to which it is now destined; it is superintended by the religious order, Sœurs de St. Louis. The cleanliness and general arrangement are admirable; there are 600 inmates. Every article used in the house is manufactured in it, and any supply beyond what is wanted is sold; the children are instructed in spinning and weaving, and various trades; the aged are assembled in large halls, and employed in knitting and other works not beyond their strength; and this moderate employment in society seems to be far more conducive to their happiness than the listlessness of want of occupation. Baking of bread is carried on for the supply of the other hospitals. There is a spacious garden.

Another institution, one of the most remarkable of its kind in Europe, is the Bon Sauveur, a religious society of females, who devote themselves to the care of the insane, and of the deaf and dumb, and to the instruction of the young; but their vow is particularly dedicated to the care of the insane: about 100 sisters give themselves up to this painful duty, with a devotion and tenderness truly admirable; this is their principal establishment, and sisters are sent from hence to other parts of France. The females are entirely under their care; the males are attended by servants under the direction of the sisters, and the medical orders of the physician, who attends every day. Different classes of patients are received here; some are kept by the town and the department, at an expense of 600 frs. per annum each patient, which is found much more economical than to found a lunatic asylum; others pay according to their means and the accommodation they receive; some as much as 300 l. per annum, the profits from which form a fund for the charitable purposes of the society.

The Abbé Jamet, the director of this institution, has devoted his life to it, and has been particularly successful in his instruction of the deaf and dumb; many of the pupils are of the poorer classes, and received gratis. The success of his labours, in bringing the institution to its present state of importance from very small beginnings, (for the property of this order was confiscated during the Revolution,) is astonishing. The buildings are extensive and solid, the garden contains 16 acres, and I was particularly struck with the beauty and utility of the spacious well-aired corridors. The property of the order is now considered to exceed two millions of francs, arising from the subscriptions of pious and charitable persons, (among (among whom the Duchess d'Angoulême was conspicuous,) the payments of rich patients *, and the rents of their landed property.

This institution likewise contains a house of education for young ladies, superintended by some of the sisters; a school for the poor female children of the neighbourhood, received gratuitously, and a large hall for the temporary admission and care of persons suffering from sudden sickness and accidents, till they can be admitted at the hospital, which is at the farthest extremity of this large city.

The population of Caen is about 40,000, of whom from 6 to 7,000 receive occasional relief; the sums voted by the town are as follows †:

The able-bodied, when out of employ, are set to work to sweep the streets and repair the roads, at an annual expense of about 30,000 francs. The fund applied by public charity is not sufficient for the applicants; private charity is liberally afforded, and prevents total destitution; still I was informed, by an able and active administrator of this town, who is a considerable landed proprietor, that in the rural districts in the vicinity, from the want of any organized relief and superintendence of the poor, mendicancy prevails to a frightful extent; and that the farmers feel themselves obliged to give numerous alms, from fear of injury to their property by incendiarism and acts of plunder.

Beaulieu.

AMONG the excellent establishments of Caen, one of the most remarkable is the Maison Centrale de Détention at Beaulieu. This is one of the 18 improved prisons, or houses of correction, founded during the empire, each for the use of several departments in various parts of France. It is of solid and appropriate architecture, and capable of containing 1,600 persons; there are now 800. The persons sent there are those condemned to confinement for a period exceeding a year; among them are many whose punishment has been commuted to long imprisonment, being convicted of crimes the penalty of which was death; incendiaries, robbers, some of whom are persons suspected of murder.

It is difficult to determine, on a cursory examination of this prison, whether its extraordinary state of moral discipline depends on the system, or whether it is owing to the enlightened administration, firmness and talent of the individual now at its head, M. Diey, a retired naval officer; but if the former, and it be capable of general application, the establishment of Beaulieu will form a new epoch in prison discipline. The general appearance of the place is that of a large workshop, in which various branches of manufacture are carried on, and it is difficult for a stranger not to forget he is in a prison. There are neither irons on the prisoners, nor bars to the windows, except to those cells in which such of the prisoners as have been guilty of violence or insubordination perform their work in solitude; but even these are allowed to mix with their fellow-prisoners at meal times and hours of exercise; from observation that constant solitude nourishes a savage temper of mind.

M. Diey treats all his prisoners as reasonable beings, capable of understanding that their punishment is inevitable, and that resistance would only cause an increase of it; he has found it possible to dismiss all the fetters which he found on his arrival, and by firm and just conduct, to establish a moral control over even the worst; on the occasion of the King's visit to Caen, he requested from the royal clemency the liberation of 16 prisoners, and appealed to the rest for the justice of his selection. He has had the satisfaction of finding that many persons having learnt a trade during the time of their seclusion, have since become honest and useful members of society.

But perhaps a still more extraordinary circumstance in this establishment is the profit derived from the labour of the prisoners. They are employed at various manufactures and trades, by the contractor of the prison, who finds them materials and tools, and all the furniture of the house, and makes arrangements with various artizans in the neighbourhood; they are paid at the price fixed by the Chamber of Commerce; one-third of their earnings is given to themselves, one-third reserved for them till they leave the prison, and the other third is the perquisite of the contractor, who also receives 41 centimes, or about 4 d. per day, from the government for each prisoner's food, clothing, &c. The addition of salaries to the officers makes the charge of each prisoner to the government about 5 d. per day; but in the year 1819, the sums in reserve for the prisoners were placed in the funds, and suffered to accumulate at compound interest for the benefit of the institution till wanted. The sum first placed by the whole of the Maisons Centrales was 125,000 francs; it is now risen to nearly 3,000,000, of which more than half belongs to these houses, so that the period is looked forward to when they may become able to defray their own expenses, without any assistance from the government.

I beg to refer to the letter with which I was favoured from M. Diey, for further details of this admirable institution.

* The institution having so high a reputation for the successful treatment of insanity, members of the highest families become inmates.

Monsieur,

LA révolution de 1789 avoit, comme vous le savez, pour but de faire succéder le régime des lois à celui du pouvoir absolu; l'assemblée constituante a jeté les bases d'un nouveau système de gouvernement, qui abolissoit tous les privilèges, et qui rendoit tous les Français égaux devant la loi. Un ordre de choses si différent de celui qui avoit existé jusque là, devoit blesser bien des intérêts; aussi, y eut il une forte opposition de la part de tous les privilégiés, qui préféreroient compromettre un bon roi, l'exposer à la haine et à la vengeance de son peuple, plutôt que d'abandonner leurs prétentions. Cette funeste catastrophe a été suivie de l'anarchie la plus affreuse, de la terreur, de la république sous plusieurs formes, et enfin de l'empire. Mais au milieu de toutes ces calamités, les principes du gouvernement constitutionnel avoient été connus, on commençoit à voir les choses avant les hommes, la nation étoit arrivée à la connoissance de ses droits, et si quelquefois on fesoit un pas retrograde dans la voie des institutions libérales, une crise survenoit qui fesoit regagner le terrain que l'on avoit perdu. Un astre brillant a paru; tant qu'il est resté dans toute sa splendeur, il a ébloui tous les yeux; on marchait bien encore d'après la loi, mais cette loi, c'est lui qui la fesoit. La nation supportoit ce despotisme parcequ'il l'environnoit de gloire, qu'il flattoit son amour propre, et surtout parceque le premier principe étoit respecté: toutes les capacités se fesoient jour, tous les hommes parvenoient par le mérite, enfin le principe de l'égalité subsistoit toujours. C'est sous le regne de cet homme extraordinaire que nos codes ont pris naissance; et qu'un système barbare n'a plus servi de base pour la garantie des personnes et des propriétés. Quoique ces codes aient éprouvés des modifications, et soient sans doute destinés à en recevoir de nouvelles, ils n'en ont pas moins été considérés comme des chefs d'œuvre de législation, et ils étoient une conséquence naturelle des efforts qu'avoit fait la France pour établir le principe de l'ordre légal, but de notre première révolution.

Mais avec des nouvelles lois pénales plus sages et plus humaines nous conservions toujours nos vieux donjons, et tous les cloaques malsains, dans lesquels les prisonniers se trouvaient entassés presque nus, privés d'air, en proie à tous les besoins, rongés de vermine, et livrés à cette affreuse oisiveté qui dégrade l'homme autant qu'elle le corrompt. Des philanthropes Français et étrangers livraient tous les jours au public leurs réflexions sur l'état déplorable de nos prisons; on demandait des améliorations, dans les locaux, dans le régime, et un système pénitencier.

Napoleon, à qui nous devons nos codes, quoique si préoccupé de ses interminables guerres, voulut encore operer cette réforme si ardemment réclamée. Ce fut pendant son voyage en Espagne, en 1808 ou 1809, que son ministre de l'intérieur, M. de Montalivet, lui présenta un travail sur la creation de plusieurs grandes prisons, reparties dans différens departemens de manière à recevoir chacune, les condamnés à un an ou plus d'emprisonnement, et à la reclusion, de trois et quatre departemens selon l'étendue de la prison, qui, à cause de cette destination, devait être désignée sous le nom de maison centrale. C'est peu de temps avant cette époque que l'on organisa en France plusieurs dépôts de mendicité pour renfermer les mendiants valides ou vagabonds, jusqu'à ce qu'ils sachent un état, moyen efficace de détruire la mendicité. C'est pour n'avoir pas compris la pensée de l'homme qui avait fondé ces établissemens qu'un ministre de la restauration les a détruits. On s'étoit écarté du principe de leur organisation; au lieu de maisons de travail, les dépôts n'étoient plus que des hôpitaux de vieillards et d'infirmités, ils servoient de retraite aux protégés des hommes du jour. La dépense parut alors sans objet; les conseils généraux se plaignirent, demandèrent leur suppression, et elle fut prononcée sans avoir recherché le travail du ministre createur. Vous comprenez, monsieur, combien, avec nos bureaux de charité, ces maisons de travail nous donnaient de moyens de pourvoir aux besoins de tous nos indigens, et de détruire la mendicité, vraie honte d'un état civilisé. Un dépôt dans chaque département renfermait tous nos indigens valides, leur procurait des états, et des ressources pour l'avenir: nos bureaux de charité n'avaient plus à s'occuper que des vieillards et des infirmes, tous hors d'état de travailler.

Je reviens aux maisons centrales. L'empereur adopta les propositions du ministre, et institua ces nouvelles prisons, par un décret daté de Bayonne. Je n'ai jamais vu le travail de M. de Montalivet, mais je sais par un chef de bureau, M. de Musset Patny, qui étoit chargé d'en suivre l'exécution, qu'il entroit dans des considérations pleines d'intérêt.

On devoit choisir pour fonder ces établissemens, et c'est ce qui a eu lieu, d'anciennes abbayes, de grands châteaux abandonnés, et d'autres bâtimens sans destination, qui étoient devenus la propriété de l'état. Quatorze ou quinze maisons centrales furent décrétées de suite, et on donna des ordres pour leur appropriation.

Les prisonniers qui jusqu'alors avoient été privés de soupe, de viande, de vêtemens, de linge et de lits, devoient trouver tous ces adoucissemens à leur sort dans les maisons centrales, où le travail étoit aussi un des plus grands bienfaits de leur destination.

Le soin des prisonniers dans ces établissemens ne devoit plus être confié à un géolier; une administration, composée de plusieurs officiers, et d'un nombre de gardiens choisis parmi d'anciens militaires, devoit avoir cette charge.

Ces dispositions ont été exécutées, et toutes les fournitures de chaque maison centrale, ainsi que l'obligation de faire travailler les prisonniers, ont été données à l'entreprise, moyennant un prix de journée, qui varioit de 40 à 45 centimes. Outre ces 40 à 45 centimes par jour et par prisonnier, payés par le gouvernement à l'entrepreneur, il a encore droit au tiers du produit du travail des prisonniers.

Ainsi: le service de la maison de Beaulieu est adjudgé à l'entrepreneur pour 21 centimes, par jour et par prisonnier, plus le tiers de 80 à 100 mille francs, montant du produit de la main d'œuvre par an. A ces conditions l'entrepreneur donne à chaque prisonnier deux fois de la soupe par jour, dans laquelle il entre 80 lbs. de légumes par 100 individus, 29 onces de pain, de la viande tous les Jeudis et les jours de fêtes, un habillement complet d'hiver en étoffe de laine, un d'été en coutil; il leur donne, tous les Dimanches, une chemise blanche, une cravate, un mouchoir de poche, et un bonnet. Le lit est composé d'une petite couchette à fond sanglé, d'un matelas contenant 14 lbs. de laine, d'une paire de draps changés tous les mois, d'une couverture et d'un couvre-pied en hiver. L'entrepreneur est en outre chargé du traitement des malades, du chauffage et de l'éclairage de la maison, de la nourriture des gardiens, et des réparations locatives; enfin il ne reste à la charge du gouvernement, après avoir payé 41 centimes par jour et par prisonnier, que le traitement des employés, ce qui porte la dépense générale à environ 50 centimes par prisonnier. L'entrepreneur est obligé d'introduire dans la maison centrale, dont il est adjudicateur, le plus grand nombre d'industries possible, afin que les prisonniers, ayant une assez grande variété de métiers à leur choix, puissent en prendre un selon leur goût, les localités qu'ils habitent, habitent, et leur aptitude. Il a la faculté de traiter avec des manufacturiers, en sorte que chaque genre d'industrie a son propriétaire. Ces fabricans choisissent les ateliers qui leur conviennent, le nombre de prisonniers qui leur est nécessaire, and la Chambre de Commerce fixe les prix de façon ou main d'œuvre qu'ils doivent payer aux détenus. C'est cette main d'œuvre qui produit à Beaulieu une somme d'environ 80 à 100 mille francs par an, laquelle est divisée par tiers égaux : un tiers est payé tous les Dimanches aux prisonniers, un second tiers est mis en réserve pour l'époque de leur libération, et le troisième est abandonné à l'entrepreneur. Ainsi si un prisonnier gagne 60 centimes pour son travail d'un jour, cette somme est payée par le fabricant qui l'occupe. Vingt centimes sont remis au prisonnier, 20 sont mis en réserve, et les 20 autres sont donnés à l'entrepreneur.

Les 20 centimes mis en réserve, sont placés sur l'état, en achat de rentes 5 p' 100. Les intérêts comptent au profit des maisons centrales, et non à celui des condamnés. On ajoute à ce fonds toutes les sommes laissées par les prisonniers qui meurent avant l'expiration de leur peine. Le système a été établi dans la vue de former un fonds d'amortissement de la dépense des condamnés renfermés dans les maisons centrales, et quoique l'époque puisse en paroître encore très éloignée, on ne peut s'empêcher d'être étonné et plein d'espérance lorsque l'on connaît sa progression; c'est en 1819 que cette mesure a été prise, et que les premières inscriptions ont été achetées; les 18 maisons centrales possédaient alors entre elles 125 mille francs, qui formaient le tiers de réserve des prisonniers; aujourd'hui ce fonds approche de trois millions de francs, et les établissemens sont devenus propriétaires de plus de la moitié de cette somme. Il est facile de concevoir la rapidité de la progression, en remarquant que les intérêts que l'on ajoute à présent au capital, s'élèvent à plus de 160 mille francs, somme plus forte que le capital de 125 mille francs qui a servi de première suite en 1819. On ajoute encore à ces intérêts l'excédant des recoltes sur les dépenses. Ces recoltes se composent du tiers mis en réserve, qui à Beaulieu s'élève à la somme de 25 à 30 mille francs par an; la dépense consiste dans ce qui est payé aux prisonniers libérés dans le cours de l'année, et qui s'élève à la somme de 15 à 20 mille francs.

L'entrepreneur et les fabricans fournissent tous les métiers, utensiles et matières nécessaires à la fabrication; le gouvernement ne possède aucun mobilier dans les maisons centrales.

Je n'entrerai pas, Monsieur, dans des détails trop minutieux sur la discipline de la maison; je vous répéterai seulement ce qui je vous ai dit de vive voix, que les seuls moyens de correction se bornent à la réclusion solitaire dans les cellules que vous avez vues, et qui sont divisées en deux petites pièces, une pour coucher et l'autre pour travailler. Il n'existe aucune espèce de fers dans la maison. Quant au succès de cette discipline, je m'en rapporte à vos impressions, on la trouve suffisante quand on a vu cette population si laborieuse, si calme et si soumise, quoique dans une maison encore en construction, à peine close, et de laquelle on a fait disparaître toutes les grilles, sans que pour cela la sûreté soit compromise.

Une chose peut et doit frapper l'observateur en visitant cet établissement, c'est que ces hommes qui dans la société avoient pris l'aspect sauvage et farouche, que leur avoit donné l'habitude du crime, se sont adoucis et comme apprivoisés (tamed) par les nouvelles habitudes qu'on leur fait contracter. Ces physionomies naguères si repoussantes, ont repris du calme et presque le repos d'une ame tranquille et satisfaite. Ce n'est pas avec la contrainte que donne la terreur, la crainte des châtimens qu'ils approchent de leurs chefs; c'est avec une confiance respectueuse. On ne peut guères se flatter de ranimer à des sentimens honnêtes et religieux des hommes qui ont vécu un grand nombre d'années dans le crime, qui n'ont pas été seulement privés d'une bonne education, mais qui en ont reçu une mauvaise, motif pour les plaindre, s'intéresser à eux, même au milieu de leur désordres, de leurs crimes, et de ne pas les abandonner. Ce seroit une chimère. Tout ce que l'on peut espérer, c'est que le régime des prisons qui les renferment soit calculé de manière à empêcher une plus grande corruption, et à en sauver les hommes qu'une première faute, qu'une circonstance imprévue a rendu criminels. Eh bien! plus de mille exemples d'hommes sortis de la prison de Beaulieu, et qui vivent en honnêtes gens, doivent rassurer sur ce point. L'humanité doit être satisfaite, consolée par ces résultats; mais ne les eut on pas obtenus, il n'en faudroit pas moins reconnoître que les maisons centrales ont procuré des avantages matériels, incontestables, et qu'elles ont répondu sous ce rapport aux vœux de tous les philanthropes qui réclament une réforme des prisons.

Cette lettre est déjà si longue, Monsieur, que je n'ose pas la prolonger; mais si vous désirez de nouveaux détails, d'autres renseignemens, vous pouvez me les demander en toute confiance, je m'empreserai de vous les adresser.

Agréez, je vous prie, l'assurance de ma parfaite considération.

A Monsieur,
Monsieur Ashhurst Majendie.

Dicy.

P. S.—Je vous prie d'examiner les avantages que l'on pourroit retirer de maisons de travail, établies dans chaque département ou county, avec un système d'amortissement comme celui des maisons centrales. Il faudroit que les jeunes gens y restassent jusqu'à leur 18ème et même leur 20ème année. Lorsque la dépense de ces établissemens sera couverte par le revenu, le système n'en pourra pas moins être continué; quelle ressource pour fonder des hôpitaux, donner des secours aux prisonniers agés, après leur libération, sans qu'il ne coute à la société.

Paris.

Of the establishments for relief of the poor in the city of Paris I have no knowledge, except that derived from books. It is probable that useful information might be obtained by a minute examination of the detail of the management adopted for so large a population, subject to such vicissitude of fortune. Paris is divided into 12 arrondissemens, in each of which there is a bureau de bienfaisance, specially appointed according to the ordonnance of the year 1826, superintended by a committee of charitable individuals. The following rules, from that document, are of general application: "Relief shall be distributed in kind as much as possible; and above all, every endeavour should be made to obtain work for able-bodied poor, for which purpose the board should form communications with manufacturers or master artizans, to whom the indigent, when out of work, may be directed to apply, or by the establishment of charitable workshops.—It is impossible to provide altogether for the subsistence of an individual, and if he possesses the capability of working to gain his livelihood, it would be most injurious to enable him to dispense with the requisite exertion, by relief indiscreetly granted. The most useful, the most important course, is to prevent destitution, and the disorders which are either the cause or the consequence of it by accustoming children to labour, and procuring them a business.”

Of loans, it is said, “A sum of money proportioned to the necessity of the case, advanced at the moment of distress, may prevent or repair the ruin of a whole family, and save it from becoming a perpetual charge on the funds of public charity.”

In conclusion, I shall observe, that as far as my examination of a limited district may warrant my forming a judgment, the administration of relief in the towns in France is directed by enlightened and benevolent principles. It is admitted by many of the authorities that the fund of public charity is inadequate to the real wants of the applicants; but as far as the fund admits, it is applied to relieving distress, without encouraging pauperism. But I may venture to express an opinion, that there is a deficiency in France, from the want of an organized system of relief in the rural districts; that much distress exists, and in consequence mendicity to a great extent prevails; and that it appears very desirable to form a union of country parishes, so as to establish boards, similar to those now existing in towns.

“ Notre pays offre donc un étrange spectacle: une bienfaisance publique et privée sans cesse croissante, et une misère qui la surpasse toujours. Ce contraste est plein d'instruction, et nous vous prions de ne pas l'oublier dans la suite de cette discussion. Mais un peuple qui se trouve dans une position pareille, ne peut pas la supporter long-temps; se malaise, s'il était prolongé, deviendrait intolérable; il faut y porter remède. Telle est la pensée qui a inspiré toutes les pétitions dont nous sommes appelés à vous entretenir.

“ Qu'il s'agisse des enfans, des hommes ou des vieillards, pour procurer aux premiers une éducation convenable, aux seconds du travail, et aux derniers des secours, on veut, on demande des institutions créées et entretenues par les bourses publiques de l'état ou des communes. C'est donc à cette proposition fondamentale que votre commission a dû s'attacher; c'est cette idée qu'elle a cru devoir soumettre à un examen attentif. Elle s'est demandée si le Grand-Conseil pouvait, dans ce moment, et d'après l'état actuel du Canton, désirer la réalisation d'un plan semblable, ou bien si ce n'était point là une de ces conceptions inspirées par un mouvement généreux de sensibilité, mais que la réflexion calme ne peut accueillir qu'avec une extrême réserve, et dans des circonstances tout autres que celles où nous nous trouvons actuellement. Cette dernière alternative forme l'opinion de votre commission, et nous venons la développer dans ce rapport. Nous ne nous dissimulons point que notre manière de voir offre une couleur impopulaire; nos paroles paraîtront quelquefois dures et cruelles; elles seront repoussées par les personnes qui suivent les impulsions d'une sensibilité douloureusement affectée, plutôt que les autres considérations de la raison; elles seraient condamnées également par les hommes, s'il en était dans cette enceinte, qui font de la sensibilité pour faire des phrases. Mais la vérité et le bien réel du pays ne nous ont pas permis de céder à ces séductions. Si le sujet que nous allons aborder est d'une grande importance, il présente aussi une effrayante difficulté; l'économie politique, la science de l'administration, la législation, la morale, l'histoire, toutes ces sciences auraient ici leur mot à dire. Vous ne devez donc pas attendre de nous un travail approfondi et complet. Nous ne pourrions apercevoir que les sommités des questions, et même nous nous attacherons bien moins aux principes théorétiques qu'aux considérations d'expérience puissées dans notre position et nos mœurs.

“ Une première question se présente ici, et domine le sujet dont nous sommes appelés à nous occuper: Quelles sont les causes des fléaux que l'on déplore aujourd'hui? Vous comprenez toute l'importance de cette question, et vous entrevoyez quelle lumière la solution doit répandre sur la valeur des établissemens qui sont réclamés de votre sagesse. Ecartons le point de vue religieux sous lequel on pourrait envisager la source des maux dont l'humanité est travaillée; étudions simplement les hommes et les faits, tels qu'ils se présentent dans notre Canton à l'observateur ordinaire. Certes, les causes de ces malheurs sont innombrables! Toutefois, un peu d'attention fait reconnaître que, si l'on doit renoncer à les compter une par une, il est facile du moins de les distribuer en deux grandes classes qui les comprennent toutes sans exception. Ces deux sources de nos maux divers sont l'imprévoyance et les accidens inopinés. L'imprévoyance, tantôt celle du vice qui se livre à ses coupables penchans sans en prévoir les suites funestes, ou plutôt sans vouloir les prévoir, tantôt l'imprévoyance de la passion, de l'étourderie, de la légèreté, qui obéit à tous les caprices, à toutes les fantaisies, sans en calculer les résultats bons ou mauvais.

“ Maintenant, à laquelle de ces deux causes faut-il rapporter les malheurs en faveur desquels on sollicite votre commisération? On vous parle d'hommes valides, mais vagabonds, pauvres, parce qu'ils ne veulent point travailler. Est-ce là un de ces accidens funestes indépendans de la volonté et de la prudence? Ou plutôt, n'est-ce pas là l'imprévoyance du vice bien caractérisée?

" On vous parle de vieillards pauvres et infirmes. Ici nous ferons la part la plus large aux maux imprévus et aux accidens de la fatalité; mais qui osera cependant affirmer que, dans la plupart des cas, une jeunesse active, une vie laborieuse et sobre, dans un pays qui offre assez de ressources de travail pour l'agriculture, et surtout pour les métiers, n'eût pas préparé une vieillesse moins misérable? Qui oserait dire que l'imprévoyance n'a pas également ici une triste influence? Ces vieillards ne sont-ils point peut-être aussi les victimes de l'indifférence, de l'ingratitude, de l'abandon de leurs enfans élevés à la paresse, et accoutumés à l'indolence?

" On vous parle enfin, on vous parle surtout, d'enfans abandonnés par leurs parens, ou élevés dans le vice et dans la misère. C'est là, il faut le dire, la grande plaie, la plaie profonde et saignante! Toute pitié est due à ces infortunés enfans, et nous déplorons leur sort avec une grande amertume de cœur. L'état et les communes leur donnent déjà l'instruction nécessaire à tous les citoyens; on demande, de plus, que l'état et les communes les adoptent, les nourrissent, les habillent, en un mot, remplissent les devoirs que la nature, la religion, les lois civiles imposent rigoureusement aux pères et aux mères. Ici, surtout, nous devons demander pourquoi l'on trouve un aussi grand nombre de ces enfans malheureux, où est la cause de ce mal déplorable. C'est tantôt dans le libertinage et la débauche, tantôt dans l'imprévoyance d'un instinct que l'on ne sait pas toujours soumettre à la raison; mais c'est surtout dans ces mariages imprudens, contractés dès la première jeunesse, avant que l'on ait acquis aucun état, aucune ressource, aucun moyen d'existence.

" Ainsi, tout en faisant, nous le répétons, les concessions les plus larges dans les maux qui nous sont signalés, aux accidens et aux catastrophes inévitables, nous sommes cependant forcés de reconnaître que la grande généralité des faits, avec bien peu d'exceptions, nous montre la cause du mal dans l'imprévoyance du vice, de la passion, ou d'une inconcevable légèreté.

" On vous demande donc de décréter que l'état et les communes aient à fonder des institutions en faveur des hommes, des vieillards ou des enfans, qui subissent les tristes conséquences de ce fécond principe de nos misères: l'imprévoyance. Trois questions se présentent ici: Est-il juste d'adhérer à ces vœux? Ces vœux seraient-ils faciles à réaliser? Enfin, les institutions demandées seraient-elles véritablement utiles?

" Au premier coup-d'œil, rien ne paraît plus naturel et plus juste que de demander à la fortune publique de secourir la misère des citoyens. N'est-ce pas là une des conditions du contrat social? N'est-ce pas pour obtenir protection et appui, que les hommes forment des sociétés qui se nomment elles-mêmes civilisées?

" L'illusion spécieuse de ce premier aperçu disparaît bientôt devant des considérations plus vraies et plus relevées.

" D'abord, qu'est-ce qui constitue essentiellement la fortune publique et les ressources de l'état? Ce sont les impositions diverses qui chargent les citoyens dans leurs propriétés et leur industrie. Représentez-vous maintenant notre pays couvert, par districts, par arrondissemens, par cercles peut-être (car pourquoi s'arrêter?), d'hospices de divers genres, fondés et entretenus par l'état, c'est-à-dire, avec le produit des impositions. Ne serait-ce pas là un pays dans lequel les citoyens riches, actifs, industriels et économes seraient contraints d'entretenir les citoyens livrés à l'intempérance, paresseux, libertins, dissipateurs, avec leurs femmes, leurs vieillards et leurs enfans légitimes ou illégitimes? Serait-ce là de la justice?

" Cette bienfaisance de l'état, qui ne pourrait s'exercer qu'avec l'argent qu'il enlèverait de force aux particuliers, serait-elle désirable? Dira-t-on que chacun doit faire l'aumône, secourir les malheureux, et payer dans ce but sa part de l'impôt? Loin de nous la pensée d'affaiblir le devoir de la charité! La morale naturelle et notre sainte religion ne placent-elles pas la charité au rang des plus belles vertus? Mais c'est renverser toutes les idées que de transformer un devoir moral, une obligation chrétienne, en obligation civile, en devoir légal: la charité n'est pas juridique et légale suivant les hommes; elle est toute entière un devoir de conscience, un devoir libre, et qu'il faut remplir avec liberté. La charité légale n'est autre chose que le pillage du riche et la spoliation de l'homme industriel et économe: on verra bientôt à quelles funestes conséquences elle entraîne, sous la fausse apparence du bien public.

" Nous n'insisterons pas davantage sur ces considérations générales. Quelques personnes les rangeront peut-être dans le nombre des principes abstraits dont il faut se défier, et parmi ces théories auxquelles la pratique, dit-on, donne de si formels démentis. Eh bien, c'est le point de vue pratique que nous allons examiner; et en supposant qu'il fût juste en principe de prendre l'argent du riche pour le donner au pauvre, nous voulons rechercher s'il serait facile d'atteindre de cette manière au but que l'on se propose.

" Vous serez frappés, Messieurs, de toutes les difficultés d'exécution inséparables de la création et de l'administration des établissemens publics qui sont demandés.

" On veut des maisons de travail pour les hommes valides qui se traînent dans l'oisiveté, des hospices pour les enfans abandonnés, ou pour ceux qui ne trouvent dans leur famille qu'une école vivante d'immoralité; on demande enfin des asiles pour les vieillards. Une première question se présente ici. L'introduction dans ces établissemens sera-t-elle libre ou forcée, facultative ou contrainte? Ces institutions seront-elles des hospices où l'on attendra ceux qui viendront spontanément y chercher un refuge? Ou bien en fera-t-on des espèces de prisons pour les paresseux? Enlèvera-t-on les enfans et les vieillards à leurs familles? En un mot, quel caractère donnera-t-on à ces institutions? Si elles restent libres, le but en est manqué, car l'homme paresseux préférera sa vie vagabonde et oiseuse au travail qu'on lui réserve, et les familles dans le sein desquelles règnent en même temps la misère et le vice, attachent souvent du prix à posséder des vieillards infirmes, ou des enfans dans l'âge le plus tendre: tantôt elles en font des instrumens de mendicité, tantôt elles conservent, malgré leur dégradation, les sentimens instinctifs de l'affection paternelle ou filiale.

" Ces établissemens seront-ils donc des maisons de détention et de travail forcé? Mettra-t-on en état d'arrestation les pères dénaturés, les débauchés, les vieillards infirmes, les paresseux, les enfans mal élevés? Mais où est la loi qui permet ces actes attentatoires à la liberté individuelle garantie par notre constitution? Il faut créer une nouvelle classe de délits, afin d'appeler devant les tribunaux des hommes bien coupables sans doute, mais qui, par la nature même de leurs fautes, ne peuvent ressortir à la justice humaine, dont ils ont d'ailleurs mille moyens de tromper la vigilance.

" Une première difficulté existe donc dans la détermination du caractère à donner aux institutions proposées. Nous en trouvons une seconde, bien plus insurmontable encore, dans les dépenses que ces établissemens entraîneraient.

" Examinez, “ Examinez, Messieurs, ce que l'on vous demande. Dans chaque district, ou bien dans chaque arrondissement militaire, ou dans toute autre circonscription plus ou moins étendue, il s'agirait de se procurer une maison suffisamment vaste, saine, distribuée d'une manière appropriée à sa destination, et sur un plan qui demanderait souvent des constructions à neuf; on y joindrait, sans doute, un jardin, peut-être quelques terres à cultiver; il faudrait un mobilier considérable, divers instrumens, machines ou métiers, pour les travaux des détenus de tous les sexes et de tous les âges. Ajoutez à ces premières dépenses de fondation, les frais annuels pour le salaire des employés et l'entretien des habitans de l'hospice. N'oubliez pas que le travail de la maison serait peu productif, car les travailleurs seraient des enfans, des vieillards ou des paresseux. Calculez cette série de dépenses, en écartant même toute idée de luxe, et dites-nous si la fortune de l'état et les biens des communes pourraient supporter un fardeau semblable. L'état n'a pas encore pu doter d'une manière suffisante toutes les institutions qui existent déjà et dont la justice et l'utilité sont incontestables, et l'on pourrait penser à des fondations nouvelles dont on peut, avec tant de raison, révoquer en doute la moralité !

“ Il existe une dernière difficulté que nous devons signaler : elle se trouve dans l'administration des institutions dont il s'agit. Sans parler de leur organisation elle-même, qui présente toujours une grande complication, les établissemens publics, tels que ceux dont on sollicite la création, sont très-difficiles à administrer, et l'on en comprend aisément la raison. Ils présentent deux caractères qui sont à-peu-près inconciliables; ils ont deux existences qui s'excluent presque l'une l'autre. Si vous les considérez comme établissemens publics, l'administration en doit être sévère et même rigoureuse. Se présentent-ils à votre attention sous le point de vue de la bienfaisance, de la charité à laquelle ils sont consacrés, vous désirez une administration douce, flexible et appropriée aux circonstances et aux besoins variables des individus. Cette dernière exigence devient même tellement impérieuse qu'elle finit presque toujours par effacer le caractère primitif et si important de l'exactitude rigoureuse; l'administration se relâche; l'ordre réglementaire s'affaiblit; les dépenses augmentent progressivement, et cependant la pensée des fondateurs est loin d'être réalisée.

“ Nous ne doutons pas que, au moment même où les hospices demandés seraient établis, on ne remarquât quelque changement favorable dans notre pays. On ne verrait plus peut-être un aussi grand nombre d'enfans mal soignés, mal élevés, tourmenter tout ce qui les approche. On ne verrait plus peut-être aussi souvent des hommes robustes parcourir le pays en demandant de l'ouvrage, pour le désertir lâchement dès qu'il se présente. Quelques vieillards, enfin, trouveraient un asile. Voilà, nous le croyons, le bienfait qui environnerait les fondations naissantes. Mais le législateur n'arrête pas ses regards sur le berceau des institutions dont il doit apprécier la valeur; il les étend au-delà de ces premiers momens où tout semble heureux; il interroge l'avenir, et considérant ces établissemens dans leurs rapports avec la nature humaine, avec les dispositions ordinaires des hommes, il arrive à des prévisions qui sont rarement démenties par l'expérience. Il s'agit donc d'examiner quelle influence devrait exercer peu à peu sur les opinions, les habitudes et les mœurs de notre peuple, l'établissement dans divers points du canton, de nombreux hospices pour recueillir les vieillards pauvres et malheureux, les hommes valides qui se refusent au travail, et surtout les enfans abandonnés ou mal élevés par leurs parens.

“ Veuillez rappeler à votre souvenir les réflexions que nous avons présentées sur la source de ces maux divers: nous avons établi, d'une manière qui nous semble incontestable, que pour le plus grand nombre des cas, cette source n'est pas ailleurs que dans l'imprévoyance du vice et des passions. Eh bien! si nous fondons des institutions en faveur des conséquences d'un si déplorable principe, ne sera-ce pas favoriser le développement et l'énergie de ce principe? Si nous traitons avec une généreuse bienveillance les résultats de fautes graves que la morale et la société condamnent avec une égale justice, ne sera-ce pas accorder à ces mêmes fautes protection et encouragement? Fonder des maisons de travail pour y entretenir des paresseux, c'est dire aux paresseux: persévérez dans votre lâche conduite; nous vous donnerons, quand vous le voudrez, un domicile, des alimens, des vêtemens, et vous travaillerez comme il vous semblera bon. Ouvrir des asiles pour les vieillards, auxquels leur imprévoyance, leur défaut d'activité et d'économie n'ont laissé aucune ressource, c'est évidemment encore encourager, approuver l'indolence et la prodigalité. Enfin, ils seraient surtout déplorables, les résultats qui accompagneraient la fondation d'hospices pour les enfans. Les mœurs en recevraient une funeste atteinte, par la certitude de trouver dans ces institutions un moyen d'annuler les suites les plus redoutées du libertinage; on accorderait une protection toute particulière, et comme une prime, aux liaisons illicites et aux mariages imprudens. Vous entendriez répéter, sur tous les points du Canton, ce mot si profondément immoral: ‘Faisons des enfans, les bonnes gens s'en chargeront.’

Gindroz.

Ainsi ces institutions portent nécessairement un notable préjudice à l'ouvrier industriel, actif et économe.

“ La tâche que vous avez imposée à votre commission est accomplie. Des considérations de divers ordres nous ont servi à démontrer que les vœux des pétitionnaires ne pouvaient pas être accueillis. Nous avons traité l'importante question qui vous était soumise, dans sa plus grande généralité ; et nous devions choisir cette position élevée, puisqu'il s'agissait de notre pays tout entier, et non de telle ou telle localité isolée. Pour être fidèles à ce point de vue, nous ne pouvions nous occuper des cas particuliers, et nous nous sommes bornés à indiquer que quelques-uns, en petit nombre, sortaient peut-être de la règle générale, et paraissaient mériter une indulgence exceptionnelle. Ces circonstances rares, restreintes à une localité, à un temps, échappent à l'action générale du Gouvernement ; elles sont inappréciables dans l'ensemble de l'administration. Mais ces malheurs isolés, ces infortunes devant lesquelles on ne sait pas être sévère, et qui ébranlent la raison la plus inflexible, resteront-elles sans secours ? C'est ici que commence la bienfaisance privée ; c'est ici que la charité spontanée des citoyens se déploie. La bienfaisance privée se distingue essentiellement des institutions publiques : elle est libre ; elle commence et s'arrête où elle veut ; elle choisit ses objets avec clairvoyance ; elle est attentive, vigilante, économe, sévère, elle est indépendante, et personne, même le plus malheureux, ne peut y compter comme sur un droit ; elle ouvre et ferme la porte de ses hospices, et nul ne peut élever une voix de plainte et de reproche.

“ Que dirons-nous donc à ces municipalités qui se sont adressées au Grand-Conseil avec une sorte d'angoisse et de désespoir ? Nous oserions, il nous semble, leur adresser ces paroles : Nous déplorons avec vous l'indigence et la paresse qui frappent vos regards ; nous plaignons le sort de ces enfans abandonnés ou élevés à l'apprentissage du vice ; toutes ces calamités qui oppressent les communes que vous administrez, et les menacent d'une ruine prochaine, excitent aussi notre douleur ; mais les remèdes que vous proposez enracineraient et propageraient le mal. Au lieu d'arrêter votre pensée sur les misères du moment, remontez plutôt à leurs principes ; attaquez et combattez les causes qui les produisent ; ainsi vous sauverez véritablement les malheureux qui excitent votre pitié, et les communes dont l'avenir vous effraie. Les attributions dont vous êtes revêtus, vous donnent une grande puissance morale, si vous savez les exercer avec courage et persévérance. Veillez avec sévérité à l'observation des réglemens de police et d'ordre public ; déployez une inspection exacte et inflexible sur tous les établissemens consacrés au plaisir, et sur tout à la boisson. Soyez fermes dans l'application des peines, dans la répression des délits, et ne vous laissez pas aller à l'indulgence de l'amitié ou de la peur. Ne cherchez pas à multiplier les occasions, les journées d'amusemens superflus, dans lesquels on apprend à aimer l'oisiveté, le bruit, et l'abandon irréflecti à tous les penchans sensuels. Nous dirons surtout aux autorités communales : il n'est pas besoin de fondations nouvelles pour arrêter le mal que nous déplorons ensemble. Notre pays n'est pas une terre sauvage dans laquelle sont inconnues les institutions qui éclairent et civilisent les hommes. Notre pays est couvert d'écoles qui offrent à la jeunesse une éducation préservatrice des fléaux que vous signalez. Voilà la ressource capitale, le bienfait fondamental que l'état doit offrir à tous les citoyens. Occupez-vous donc de l'éducation de la jeunesse dans les écoles qui lui sont destinées. Une génération formée se réforme rarement : il faut la subir telle qu'on l'a laissée grandir ; mais dans la jeunesse repose tout l'avenir de la patrie. Accordez donc à l'instruction publique l'attention qu'elle réclame. Cherchez à donner à vos écoles les développemens qui les rendront des écoles de christianisme, de patriotisme, de travail et de bonnes mœurs ; ne craignez aucune dépense dans ce but ; veillez aux devoirs des instituteurs, des familles et des enfans ; montrez-vous sévères pour assurer la fréquentation assidue des écoles ; en un mot, ne négligez dans votre administration aucun soin, quelque difficile, ou quelque minutieux qu'il puisse paraître, s'il doit contribuer à ranimer l'esprit religieux et le goût d'une instruction solide. Si vous avez le courage de saisir ainsi le mal à sa racine, vous l'extirperez, vous le détruirez, et vous vous convaincrez de plus en plus que les réformes naissent de l'amélioration de la pensée et des sentimens, sous l'influence d'une éducation chrétienne, mais que les institutions qui ne s'adressent qu'à la surface des mœurs, sont impuissantes pour faire le bonheur d'un peuple.

No. 6.

REPORT of the COMMISSIONERS appointed by an Order of the House of Representatives, Feb. 29, 1832, on the subject of the PAUPER SYSTEM of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

[Originally printed at Boston, U. S. 1833.]

COMMONWEALTH of MASSACHUSETTS.

House of Representatives, Feb. 29, 1832.

Ordered, That five Commissioners be appointed by this House, to meet during the recess, to prepare, digest and report to the next Legislature, such modification or changes in the present Pauper System of the Commonwealth, as they may deem expedient; and that said Commissioners be authorized to appoint an agent (if they deem such appointment expedient) to visit as extensively as shall be necessary to obtain full information on the subject, the principal establishments in the Commonwealth and elsewhere, for the public charge and support of the poor; to collect the statistics of those institutions; and to report the facts so obtained to the Commissioners: and the following gentlemen were appointed to constitute the Board of Commissioners, in pursuance of the above order, namely:

Hon. William B. Calhoun,
Hon. Henry Shaw,
Josiah Caldwell, Esq.
George A. Tufts, Esq., and
Rev. Joseph Tuckerman.

Attest.

REPORT.

The Commissioners appointed by the House of Representatives on the 29th of February 1832, to "prepare, digest and report to the next Legislature, such modifications or changes in the Pauper System of the Commonwealth as they may deem expedient, with authority to appoint an agent to visit, as extensively as shall be necessary to obtain full information upon this subject, the principal establishments in the Commonwealth and elsewhere, for the public charge and support of the poor, to collect the statistics of these institutions, and to report the facts so obtained to the Commissioners;" would now respectfully Report to this House:

That in recurring to the laws of this Commonwealth respecting the poor, they find, that so early as A. D. 1639, that is, eight years after the first settlement that was made in Boston, it was "ordered by the Court" of the colony and province of Massachusetts Bay, "that any shire court, or any two magistrates out of court, shall have power to determine all difference about the lawful settling and providing for poor persons; and to dispose of all unsettled persons into such towns as they shall judge to be most fit for the maintenance and employment of such persons and families for the ease of this country."*—This early provision by law for the poor in Massachusetts is hardly less remarkable than is the extraordinary power which was at the same time given for disposing of the settlement of those whose claim might be denied to a settlement in the towns in which they might apply for assistance. It is, however, to be remembered, that the civil fathers of our State had lived under the earliest operations of the famous Act of the 43d of Elizabeth, under which the poor-rates of England have been assessed, and collected to the present day. The confiscation of ecclesiastical property in England, in the reign of Henry VIII. had thrown upon the country many thousand beggars, who had previously been supported by the church; and especially by the monasteries. This very mode of supporting the poor had, without doubt, greatly increased their number; for this is the direct tendency, in every case, of the substitution of associated and general for particular and personal charity. But while so supported, these poor were not felt to be a burthen upon the community. The community indeed knew but little of them, and probably cared still less for them. When, however, they could no longer obtain supplies from these sources, they became clamorous in their demands upon private individuals and upon families. Their numbers, habits, wants and wretchedness were forced upon the public notice; and the interferences of the Legislature, for the purpose of aiding them as far as possible in obtaining a comfortable subsistence from the products of their own labour, seemed to be at once as practical and wise as it was humane. Two hundred thousand pounds were therefore appropriated by Parliament for "the support of the aged, blind, impotent and sick; for the employment of children whose parents could not maintain them; for the appren-

ting of poor children; and for setting the idle to work." Commendable, however, in themselves as were these purposes, they were, as far as the relief of the necessitous and impotent were concerned, the proper purposes, not of legal enactments, but of Christian humanity and charity. The acts here referred to were in truth, though they seemed not at the time of their passage to have been, direct violations of great elementary principles. And the effect of this interposition of human law, to secure obedience to a plain and oft-repeated law of God was, and has been to this day, to produce an increased and even frightfully increasing extent of the beggary and crime which it was intended to remedy. It would indeed be unjust to say that the evils of this system of provision for the poor might have been foreseen. It is easy when consequences have occurred to imagine that they might have been anticipated. But this Act of Elizabeth, and the enactment of the fathers of Massachusetts in 1639, were intended for good; and seemed to promise a good no less than the redemption of multitudes from idleness and want and debasement, and the extremest misery. Time was required to test the principle of this provision for the poor; and on this, as on many other subjects, time and experience have proved, that the best principles may be injudiciously applied, and in their misapplication be made causes of the very evils they were intended to obviate; that it is the part of true wisdom, as well with Legislatures as with subjects, in prospective plans which give even the best promise of success, to leave a way for the escape or the correction of unanticipated evils; and that great vigilance is to be maintained if we would that temporary expedients, either by neglect or a mistaken policy, be not perpetuated till they become established and unchangeable usages. The first grant of Parliament for carrying into effect the Act of Elizabeth was 200,000*l*. The amount of poor-rates assessed for the year 1828 was 7,784,356*l*.; and this sum of between thirty-four and thirty-five millions of dollars was applied in part to eke out the wages of the poor who received it,—thus acting as a bounty upon the oppression of their employers; and in part was distributed by the vestries, or by their agents, to the poor who could not obtain employment, in weekly instalments proportioned to the number of children in the families which applied for it,—thus acting directly as a bounty upon the increase of population. These solemn results are matters of history; and the consequences of the substitution of this compulsory process for the relief of the poor, for that individual and willing charity which has rarely failed to be efficient where it has been left free, stand among the records of the two last centuries as one of the most solemn and admonitory lessons which the events of those centuries suggest, for the guidance of the Legislatures of all countries, which are either yet to settle the principles on which they are to act in regard to the poor; or which have it in their power to modify any existing laws or institutions by which a country is threatened with a calamity like that of English Pauperism.

To the Act of the Legislature of our State in 1639, we trace the "Pauper System" under which we are now living. Additional enactments, which recognized the same principles which are involved in the Act referred to, were passed in 1659. Another, however, and a still more injurious measure, was adopted in 1675. "This Court," it was then said, "considering the inconvenience and damage which may arise to particular towns by such as, being forced from their habitations by the present calamity of the war, do repair unto them for succour; do order and declare that such persons, being inhabitants of this jurisdiction, who are so forced from their habitations, and repair to other plantations for relief, shall not, by virtue of their residence in such plantations they repair unto, be accounted or reputed inhabitants thereof, or imposed upon them according to law. But in such case, and where necessity requires by reason of the inability of relations, &c., they shall be paid out of the Public Treasury."* This, we believe, was the first enactment for supplying the poor from the Treasury of the State; and it was obviously designed to have been limited in its operations, by the exigencies of the occasion which seemed to have demanded it. In subsequent years, however, similar grants or allowances continued to be made. The principle on which they were founded had been admitted; and the exigencies were sure to arise on which they might very plausibly be required, and on which, under such circumstances, it would be very difficult and apparently unequal and unjust to refuse them. In the records made of them, they are so mixed up with allowances of military accounts, &c., that they are not easily to be separated; and the first distinct statement of them occurs in the resolves of the June session of 1792, in which it appears that their amount then was $6,039. 54. In the year 1793 an Act was passed, intituled, "An Act ascertaining what shall constitute a legal Settlement, &c.; and for repealing all Laws heretofore made respecting such Settlement." Here it was "enacted, that a married woman shall always have and follow the settlement of her husband, if he have any within this Commonwealth; otherwise, her own at the time of marriage, if she had any, shall not be lost or suspended by the marriage. And in case the wife shall be removed to her settlement, and the husband shall want relief from the State, he shall receive it in the town where his wife shall have her settlement, AT THE EXPENSE OF THE COMMONWEALTH."† The subsequent state of law upon this subject is well known. But although suspicions of abuse and evil in practice, growing out of this law, have been almost universal, the facts have been wanting, by which these suspicions could have been made available for any essential improvements in the system. Your Commissioners think that they are now able to bring the subject before the House under better advantages for a fair discussion of it, than have before this time been possessed; and they indulge the hope that principles principles of legislation upon it may now be recognized, and that measures in regard to it may be adopted, which will not only do much to reconcile interests, which the existing law and practice bring into perpetual conflict, but ultimately be for the best good and comfort, both of the whole community and of the poor.

First, however, your Commissioners would state, that, by the authority which was given to them, they appointed one of their number to visit such towns as he could within the Commonwealth, to collect the statistics of their institutions for the poor, and to prepare the facts so obtained for their examination. The principal part of these facts are contained in the Tables and Statements appended to this Report; and they are presented in this form, because it is believed that the legislature will wish to be in possession of the details, as well as of the general circumstances which belong to this great subject. In the discharge of the duty thus assigned to him, this agent visited as many towns as he could, within the time which he was able to give to this investigation. But as the investigation to be made was in some respects a new one, and some experience was to be acquired before the queries most pertinent to the object could be settled and arranged, the information which was wanted is not equally full in the accounts of all the towns which were visited. It is to be observed, too, that in some towns which were visited, and the general statistics of whose almshouses were obtained, it has been found impracticable to obtain their accounts of expenses and receipts for the last year. In order to save time, which could not conveniently be spared when the agent applied for them, he made arrangements that these accounts might be transmitted to him; and in towns in which he could not obtain an interview with the overseers he left his queries, with a desire that answers to them should be sent as soon as might be by mail. But although he has again applied for these accounts and answers, by letters addressed to the overseers, they have not been received. The agent, however, acknowledges the general kindness with which he was met by the overseers of the poor, in the towns in which he could obtain a conference with them, and their readiness to co-operate with him in his objects. Nor is he less sensible than any one else will be, that if another commission should be appointed, with authority to collect statistics of the poor, the work might be far better done than it has now been. But it is believed that even this partial and imperfect survey of the ground has been sufficient to furnish evidence of great evils to be remedied and prevented, and to lead to measures of very great importance to the virtue, security, well-being and happiness of many succeeding generations.

First, then, your Commissioners would observe, that in 68 towns, containing a population of 264,327 inhabitants, the whole number of poor, more or less, assisted by the overseers during the last year, estimating families, where they are so distinguished in the Tables, to have consisted each of four individuals, was 12,331; that is, supposing them all to have consisted of different individuals, about one in $21\frac{1}{2}$ of the population. It is, however, to be remarked, as will appear from the first Table, containing the statistics of the poor in towns which have almshouses and land for their employment, that in three of these towns, no account was taken of their out-door poor; and in seven towns, in which an account of these poor was taken, the distinctive numbers were not taken of State's and town's out-door poor. We refer to this circumstance, because it will account for a discrepancy in the totals given of the whole number of out-door poor in these towns, and of the number of State's and town's out-door poor. This discrepancy amounts to 636; that is, 636 of the poor assisted during the last year, are not accounted for in the comparative numbers of out-door State's and town's poor. We take the liberty, therefore, to assume, and our Tables will bear us out in the assumption, that 250 of this deficiency were State's poor, and that 386 of them were town's poor. On this ground, therefore, it will appear, that of the whole number more or less assisted during the last year, that is, of 12,331 poor, 5,927 were State's poor, and 6,063 were town's poor; making the excess of town's over State's poor to have been only 497. The proportion which it will be perceived that the State's poor bear to the town's poor, is itself a fact of startling interest. We have not the means of ascertaining the actual growth of this class of the poor. But if it may be estimated by a comparison of the State's allowance for them in 1792-3, the amount of which, in round numbers, was \$14,000, with the amount of the allowance 27 years afterwards, that is, in 1820, when it was \$72,000, it suggests matter for very serious consideration. So sensitive, indeed, to the increasing weight of the burthen had the legislature become even in 1798, when the allowance was but \$27,000, that "an Act" was passed, "specifying the kind of evidence required to accompany accounts exhibited for the support of the poor of the Commonwealth." In 1821, with a view to still further relief from the evil, the law limited its allowance to 90 cents a week for adults, and to 50 cents for children; and again, for the same end, it was enacted in 1823, that "no one over 12, and under 60 years of age, and in good health, should be considered a State pauper." The allowance is now reduced to 70 cents per week for adults, and proportionally for children; and in the cases in which the poor of this class have become an integral part of the population of towns, and in which, from week to week, through protracted sickness, or from any cause, they are for the year supported by public bounty, the expense for them is sometimes greater than this allowance. But this is comparatively a small proportion of the State's poor: far the largest part, as has been made to appear, consists of those who are but occasionally assisted, and, in some instances, of those of whom there seems to be good reason to infer, from the expence accounts, that they make a return in the products of their labour to those who have the charge of them, which might well exonerate the Commonwealth from any disbursements for their support. Even 70 cents a week, therefore, or any definable allowance, we believe has a direct tendency to increase this class of the poor; for a charity will not generally be very resolutely withheld, where it is known that, if dispensed, it will soon be refunded. And we leave it to every one to judge whether almsgiving, under the influence of this motive, and to a single and defined class, has not a direct tendency at once to the increase of its numbers, and to a proportionate earnestness of importunity for it.

Again. Your Commissioners would observe, that it will appear from the Tables herewith presented, that in four of the towns visited by the agent, an account was not taken of the comparative numbers of the State's and town's poor then in charge of the overseers. This will account for a discrepance also in the totals of these poor. The difference between the whole number when visited, and the totals of State's and town's poor, is 146. As the simplest method, therefore, of arriving at the nearest approximation to the truth on this subject, we apportion 50 of these 146 to the State's poor, and 96 of them to the town's poor. The numbers then will stand thus: When the towns were visited, the poor in the charge of the overseers was 2,512; and, of these, 869 were State's poor, and 1,643 were town's poor; that is, the difference between the whole number of poor in the charge of the overseers when the towns were visited, and the number more or less assisted in the same towns during the last year, was 9,319. And not only so. The whole number in the charge of the overseers, when the towns were visited, was far less than half of the number of State's poor assisted during the last year. From whence, then, arise these differences? Without doubt, in part from the circumstance, that there are permanent State's poor, who are assisted only occasionally, and principally in the winter, as many of the town's poor are assisted. In part, too, as has been conceded by many, from that prevalent willingness to which we have alluded, to give, when it is known that there will be a speedy reimbursement of the charity. But it is also not to be doubted, that a large proportion of this excess of State's poor, more or less assisted during the year, consists of those who are called in the statements herewith presented, "wandering or travelling poor." The single fact of the existence among us of this class of fellow beings, especially considered in connexion with the facts, that nearly all of them are State's poor, and that, to a great extent, they have been made what they are by the State's provision for them, brings the subject before us in a bearing, in which we scarcely know whether the call is loudest to the pity we should feel for them, or the self-reproach with which we should recur to the measures we have sanctioned, and which have alike enlarged their numbers and their misery. Nor is it a matter of mere inference from our Tables, that the number is very large of these wandering poor. To a considerable extent, and it is now regretted that it was not to a greater extent, the inquiry was proposed to overseers of the poor, "How many of the wandering, or travelling poor, annually pass under your notice?" And the answers, as will appear in the statements, were, from 10 to 50, and 100 and 200. Nor is there a more abject class of our fellow beings to be found in our country, than is this class of the poor. Almshouses, where they are to be found, are their inns, at which they stop for refreshment. Here they find rest, when too much worn with fatigue to travel, and medical aid when they are sick. And, as they choose not to labour, they leave these stopping places, when they have regained strength to enable them to travel, and pass from town to town, demanding their portion of the State's allowance for them as their right. And from place to place they receive a portion of this allowance, as the easiest mode of getting rid of them, and they talk of the allowance, as their "rations;" and, when lodged for a time, from the necessity of the case, with town's poor, it is their boast that they, by the State's allowance for them, support the town's inmates of the house. These unhappy fellow beings often travel with females, sometimes, but not always, their wives; while yet, in the towns in which they take up their temporary abode, they are almost always recognized and treated as sustaining this relation. There are exceptions, but they are few, of almshouses in which they are not permitted to live together. In winter they seek the towns in which they hope for the best accommodations and the best living, and where the smallest return will be required for what they receive. It is painful thus to speak of these human beings, lest, in bringing their degradation distinctly before the mind, we should even for a moment check the commiseration which is so strongly claimed for them. We feel bound therefore to say, that bad as they are, they are scarcely less sinned against in the treatment they receive, than they commit sin in the lawlessness of their lives. Every where viewed, and feeling themselves to be, outcasts; possessed of nothing, except the miserable clothing which barely covers them; accustomed to beggary, and wholly dependent upon it; with no local attachments, except those which grow out of the facilities which in some places they may find for a more unrestrained indulgence than in others; with no friendships, and neither feeling nor awakening sympathy; is it surprising that they are debased and shameless, alternately insolent and servile, importunate for the means of subsistence and self-gratification, and averse from every means but that of begging to obtain them? The peculiar attraction of these unhappy fellow beings to our Commonwealth, and their preference for it over the States to the south of us, we believe is to be found in the legal provision which the State has made for them. Your Commissioners have indeed but a small amount of direct evidence of this; but the testimony of the chairman of the overseers in Egremont to this fact, derived from personal knowledge, was most unequivocal, and no doubt upon the subject existed in the minds of the overseers in many other towns. But shall we therefore condemn, or even severely blame them? Considered and treated, in almost every place, as interlopers, strollers, vagrants; as objects of suspicion and dread, and, too often, scarcely as human beings; the cheapest methods are adopted of sending them from town to town, and often with the assurance given to them that there, and not here are accommodations for them, and that there they may enjoy the bounty which the State has provided for them. Would such a state of things, your Commissioners ask, have existed in our Commonwealth, if a specific, legal provision had not been made for this class of the poor? Or, we do not hesitate to ask, if the Government had never recognized such a class of the poor as that of State's poor,—and, above all, if compulsory charity, in any form, had never been established by our laws, would there have been a twentieth part of the wandering poor which now exists in it, or by any means an equal proportion of poor of any kind with that which is now dependent upon the taxes which are raised for them? Your Commissioners think not.

Again. There is another fact in this connection which your Commissioners think to be deserving of distinct and serious consideration. We refer to the fact, which is sustained by the concurrent judgment of all the overseers under whose notice these wandering poor pass, that nearly all of them are able, and if kept from ardent spirits and compelled to work, would show themselves to be able, to earn their own subsistence. They are so far able-bodied that they can travel from early spring-time till the cold of the closing year forces them to seek for winter quarters, and then, while many continue in the interior of the State, from a preference of the towns in which they may be supported while they live at liberty, others seek the more comfortable asylums of warm and well-furnished almshouses. The distinction is a broad one, and should never be lost sight of, between the able idler and the impotent poor; for while the duty is most plain in regard to the latter, and enforced alike by the principles of religion and of humanity, that they are to be supported by those who have the means and opportunity of supporting them, it is equally clear, from the same principles, that the able-bodied and the idle have no claim to support from a tax upon the capacity and the property of the industrious. On the contrary, we maintain, that the idle and able may and should be compelled to work, when it is manifest that they might, if they would, live by their labour; and when they live by beggary, only because they are not disposed to labour for their subsistence. With regard to them, the rights and duties of the Government are unquestionable. A man who has not the means of living because he is idle, and might have them if he were industrious, and willing to labour in proportion to his strength, incurs a debt to the community for all that he receives from it; and if he refuses to pay this debt, the Government may of right compel him to pay it. Hence, in a community in which such idlers are found, the Government may authorize the erection of workhouses for their employment and support. They may make appropriations from their Treasury for the erection and establishment of such workhouses, and may enact the laws by which the peaceable and industrious may be defended against the encroachments of the idle, and the willing and able beggar, and by which these offenders may be made to return to the community, in such proportions as they can, for the expenditures which may have been incurred for them. The examples which will be found in the statements appended to this Report, of the amount of labour which may be done upon the highways by a select portion of the poor, and of the very class for which county or district workhouses are required, in addition to those of the success of other modes of employing them, are strikingly in point, and are great encouragements to the establishment of these institutions, in contradistinction to almshouses, which should be asylums for the impotent, and as far as possible for the virtuous poor. Few circumstances furnish more unequivocal indications of an advanced state of civilization than the good condition of those highways which are the thoroughfare of a country. Through the encouragement of workhouses, well appointed and governed, the legislature may do much for the county roads of our Commonwealth, and in this way, at once without encroaching upon any of the departments of labour in which the virtuous poor obtain their subsistence, and with a truly parental regard to the well-being of all, it may provide for many of the wandering and other able-bodied State's poor, and for some too of the town's poor, not only without intrenching upon any right or duty of religion or of humanity, but in direct accordance with one of the objects for which Christianity recognizes its appointment, that is, that it may be "a terror at once to evil-doers, and a praise and encouragement to them that do well."

Again. Your Commissioners think the fact to be deserving of the very serious consideration of the legislature, that while every town which was visited, and to which the inquiry was proposed, "Are the overseers of the poor more ready to aid those known as State's poor, because there is a State allowance for them?" disclaimed for itself the disposition in any way to abuse this provision, the exception yet scarcely occurred in which the suspicion or the conviction was not expressed, of abuses of this provision in other towns, which were freely named, and even of a far more widely extended abuse of it than would be susceptible of proof by legal evidence. Your Commissioners would express no opinion of the correctness or of the incorrectness of this judgment. They bring it before the legislature as one of the actual and great, perhaps inevitable, but certainly admonitory circumstances in the connexion which can hardly fail to exert an important influence upon the decision to be made on the subject of a State provision for the poor. Kindly disposed as our towns are towards each other, and generous as are the sentiments with which we see them regarding each other's interests, and strong as are the bonds of trade, and friendship, and kindred, by which their sympathies and interests are connected, it is yet well known that there are sometimes conflicting interests between them. And for what more important than these exigencies are the annual meetings of our legislatures required? What higher object, or duty, has the legislature of our favoured State, than to devise the means of lessening, as far as may be practicable, the causes of suspicion between towns; of reconciling differences which may arise between them; of maintaining to each one its own rights and possessions; and of guarding, with impartial fidelity, and with equal watchfulness, the rights and interests of all? With the exception of the suspicion and conviction here referred to,—for in some places it was but suspicion, while in others it was strong conviction,—your Commissioners know of no prevailing cause of unkindly feeling in the towns of our Commonwealth towards each other. But this they know to be a standing and increasing cause of far other feelings than those of respect or kindness. They are fully aware of all the care and caution which are required in the adoption of a remedy for so long continued and deep settled an evil as is our "pauper system" as by law established. But they not only think that the evil is not remediless, but that there is a wide-spread disposition in the Commonwealth to co-operate in a well-matured plan for as complete as possible a correction of it. The evil, it is believed, is now apprehended in its true character, as it has not before been; and the conviction of its tendency to an indefinite growth, and consequently to an entailment of an indefinite extent of want, and misery, and vice upon our prosperity, is as strong as that of its past increase, or of its immediate greatness. We wish not unnecessarily to enlarge upon this or upon any topic; but only to present each with sufficient distinctness to obtain for it the consideration which it may justly claim.

Again. Your Commissioners would call attention to the manner of disposing of the poor, as it is presented in the statements here adduced, in towns which have not land for their employment; to the comparative expenditures for the poor in these places, when they are aided or supported while at large, and when they are gathered into poor-houses; and to a comparative view of the expenditures for the poor in the towns which have provided farms, previous to and after this provision has been made for them. These are circumstances of great importance, not only for the consideration of the legislature upon the questions which the whole subject will bring before them, but not less for the instruction of towns, as to the best modes which have yet been adopted among us, for the charge of the poor.

In regard to the manner of disposing of the poor at auction to the lowest bidder for them, your Commissioners would only remark, that there is an increasing sensibility, in many of the towns where this practice is still retained, as well as to the question of its propriety, as a matter of moral right, as of its economy; and that a strong solicitude is expressed in these, as indeed it is in all towns, to know what other towns have done and are doing with their poor, and the results, both moral and pecuniary, of the experiments which have been made of the various modes of supporting them. With respect, however, to the towns first referred to, that is, in which farms have not been provided for the poor, the advantages, both moral and pecuniary, are most manifest in the cases in which the poor have been gathered into poor-houses, over the results in the same towns, when the poor were supported at large in them. For example, previous to the last nine years, when the poor in Framingham were disposed of in a mass to the lowest bidder, the annual cost for them was from 12 to $1,400. But since that time they have been in the care of individuals who contracted for the charge of the whole of them, and who had the right to avail themselves of their capacities of labour, and the cost for them has been diminishing, till for the last three years its amount has been but $535 a year. Again. Previous to the last 12 years, the poor in Pittsfield were boarded out by the overseers in private families, and the average cost for them then was $1,600 a year. For the first six of these twelve years, during which they were supported by a contractor, who had provided a house for them, the cost for them was $1,050 a year, and for the last six of these 12 years, a second contractor, who had also provided a house for those who should require the charity of the town, took the whole pecuniary responsibility for the poor for $1,100 a year, and half of the State's allowance for the State's poor. Again. In the town of Deerfield, the poor, for the last 10 years, have been in the charge of one individual, who contracted to take them for that term for $450 per annum from the town, with the addition of the State's allowance for the State's poor, and the amount which might be obtained from other towns, for the charge of their poor. This contract was made in consequence of the offer of the contractor to take the whole pecuniary responsibility for the poor for 10 years, at 10 per cent. less than they had cost the town during the preceding 10 years. And still more remarkable is the case furnished by the town of Sheffield, where, previous to the last five years, the poor dependent on the overseers had lived at large. In this town, for the last five years, they have been in the charge of one individual, who provided an almshouse for them, at which only, except in cases of extreme necessity, the town would assist them. During the year before this provision, 49 poor were in the charge of the overseers, and the cost for them was $1,967. But when it was made known that the contractor would give assistance to none but at the almshouse, except in cases of illness in which they could not be removed to it, only 17 of these 49 could be persuaded on these terms to accept of aid from the town. Two of the State's poor at once removed to Egremont, an adjoining town, where they could be supported while living at large, and where they still were when the agent of your Commissioners visited that town, and where for four years they have received, and still continue to receive, the State allowance. The consequence was, an immediate reduction of expenses for the poor to a sum less than half of that which had before been required for them; and the whole cost for the poor of this town, during the last year, was $665. It is worthy of being noted also, that when the agent of the Commissioners visited the almshouse in Sheffield, in November last, there were in it but eight inmates; nor have the moral advantages of this mode of providing for the poor, over that of setting them up at auction to the lowest bidder, been less than the pecuniary. The idle and able-bodied, who yet love liberty more than they hate labour, have been induced or compelled to work, rather than submit to the restraints of an almshouse; and the thriftless have been made provident and careful, that they might eke out a more comfortable living from their own resources. Nor is it an unimportant circumstance, that while the comfort of the permanent and impotent poor is very greatly increased by the cleanliness, the wholesome food, the clothing and beds, and the moral order of a well-regulated almshouse, their hearts and characters are equally improved by this provision for them. The beneficial effects of a similar change in other places have been less striking; but they have been real and great.

Nor less interesting and instructive are the results which have come from the experiment of of farms for the employment and support of the poor, especially if we regard, in this connexion, the facilities which these establishments give for debarring the poor from the use of ardent spirits. For example, we refer to Salem: there, we are told, the average expense for the poor for the last ten years has been less than half of the average of the former ten years in the old almshouse, in which no work was done, and the number of poor in the house has been reduced 50 a year for the last two years, and the house far more easily governed than before. These last results are attributed principally to an entire disuse of ardent spirits in the house. In Lynn, the expense for the poor has been diminished $500 a year, for the last four years, partly from the disuse of ardent spirits, in part from a reduction of the number of the poor, and in part from improvements made in the general discipline of the house. The average cost for the poor in Waltham before the establishment of the farm was $675 per annum, and the balance against the town for them last year was $239 04. In Littleton, the annual average cost for the poor, before their removal to the farm provided for them, was $800; but the balance against the town for their support last year was $244 38. In Lexington, the chairman of the overseers of the poor knows the cost for them, before the establishment of the farm, to have been as high as $1,600 in a year; but the balance against the town for them last year was $529 75. In Marlborough, the average for the poor before their removal to a farm was $1,550 per annum; and the balance against the town for their support last year was $310 78. For other examples we refer to the annexed statements, observing only in passing, that while the expenditures for the poor in Andover during the last year were $1,880 03, the receipts from the farm were $2,108 78, giving a balance to the town from the establishment of $228 75; the farm there, however, it is important to observe, has the great advantage of a brick-yard upon it, and the last was a year of extraordinary revenue from this source. These, your Commissioners repeat, they think to be very interesting and instructive facts. For the capacities of labour among the inmates of these establishments, they refer again to the statements herewith offered. These capacities, it will appear, are very few and small, but the employment of them is a great moral as well as pecuniary good. Too great importance, indeed, can hardly be attached to the character and qualifications of a superintendent of these establishments, for on these almost wholly depend the question of the good or evil results of the institution; but where there is a well-qualified superintendent at the head of our almshouse, there is a moral order and a comfort in the house, as well as a saving from the establishment, the most gratifying to a benevolent mind. In such almshouses, the food and lodging of the inmates are as good as those of an average of their neighbours, nor are these inmates ever tasked by a service which is not alike salutary for their bodies and their minds. Generally, also, in proportion as towns are self-dependent for the charge of the poor, they are inquisitive and active upon the questions how they may at once most humanely and most economically provide for them, and the resources not only of prudence but of humanity, are more and more faithfully employed for provision for them. This is a consideration to be well weighed, in view of every expedient for a legislative provision for the poor; for in proportion as such provision shall chill, or in any way check this feeling in towns of individual responsibility for the poor, it at once ministers to the increase of abject pauperism, and of all the evil consequences which are connected with it.

Again. Your Commissioners would simply advert to the number stated in the Tables to have been brought to poverty, directly or indirectly, by intemperance, and to a comparison of this number with that of those from which it was derived, and which was the number in the charge of the overseers at the time when the towns referred to were visited by the agent of this Commissioner. In a large proportion of these towns the number thus said to have been brought to poverty was determined by a very careful examination into the subject; and the agent of the Commissioners, when seeking for information upon this subject, again and again expressed to the overseers of the poor the importance of avoiding all exaggeration upon it. On this subject we leave the facts without comment; but they are alike admonitory to the Legislature, to towns, and to every individual who is interested in the cause of human security, virtue and happiness.

These are the principal facts to which your Commissioners think it important to give distinctness in their Report, as the whole documents on the subject, in as compressed a form as could be given to them, will be laid before the Legislature. They are glad, however, in this connection, to recall attention to a very able Report on the Pauper Laws of this Commonwealth, which was made in 1821 to the Legislature by a Committee, of which Mr. Quincy, now President of Harvard University, was chairman. In that Report reference is made to all the modes described in our statements of providing for the poor. Since that time, however, the number of almshouses, with farms for the employment and support of the poor, has greatly increased; and an important change, important as well to the morals and happiness of the poor as to the wise economy of towns, has been and is going on in the Commonwealth, in the disposition made of the poor in towns which have not almshouses, or farms for employing them. Where they are still committed to the care of the lowest bidder for them, this bidder is now, far more generally than he was in former times, required to take the charge of the whole number of the poor, with, perhaps, the exception of a few individuals who require a peculiar care; to provide a house in which they may live together; and, by placing them under a superintendence, which will do something for the cause of moral restraint and moral order among them, to check the tendencies to idleness, to intemperance, and to a willing dependence on public bounty. Our towns, indeed, require only to be brought under the necessity of giving their serious attention to the question, "of the wisest methods of providing for the poor?" to secure that attention to it. Let the Legislature hold itself bound, by its duty of equal watchfulness over all, and of impartial justice towards all, at once to defend the peaceful and industrious in their rightful possessions, and not to take from them those possessions for the support of those who are idle, and who refuse to work; and as carefully let it recognize the principle, that for the cases of human want and suffering, for which God has himself made provision at once in his word and in the principles of our common nature, human laws are not to be interposed to prescribe the manner or the amount of that charity which want and suffering may demand in man from his fellow man; and we feel assured, that although for a time, in the transition state during which the Commonwealth's allowance for the poor shall first be considerably diminished from what it now is, and the diminution continued for a few years till it shall cease and be utterly abolished, many of the State's poor, and especially of the wandering poor of this class, may be brought under increased suffering; the number of this whole class of the poor will soon be perceived to be gradually decreasing, from the failure of the encouragements they have hitherto had to migrate into our Commonwealth for support. Let these principles be recognized and acted upon, and the whole number of poor in the State will gradually be decreasing, and the comfort both of those who shall require the aid of towns and of those who may be left wholly to private bounty will be greatly extended. A violation of these principles ever has been, and your Commissioners think ever will be, followed by disastrous consequences. Let there be no laws requiring the support of the poor, and the claims of those who need assistance, and who can do nothing for themselves, will never in our community be disregarded. Let there be no laws requiring the support of the poor, and the rights of those who have been made poor by circumstances beyond their control will be cheerfully acknowledged, and the corresponding duties towards them as cheerfully performed.

"It was impossible for your Committee," says the Report referred to of 1821, "while contemplating the effect of the existing system of poor laws in Massachusetts, not to turn their attention to the state of the same subject in England. In this part of the British nation, a system of poor laws prevails, having the same original and a similar principle with our own; and it will be found not only that the results of her experience are, in a remarkable degree, similar to our own, but also that the reasoning and opinions of her statesmen and writers on political economy, founded on that experience, are singularly coincident with the facts detailed and the opinions expressed in almost every important document obtained from the returns of the overseers of the poor in Massachusetts. In contemplating these coincidences, the anxiety of your Committee was not allayed, but, on the contrary, their sense of the vital importance to Massachusetts of adopting a just system on this subject was in an extreme degree augmented, by a comparison of the effects of their common pauper system upon the pecuniary resources of England, and upon those of this Commonwealth. The returns of the towns, under the request of the Legislature at their last session, being in point of number but a little more than half of all the towns in the Commonwealth, it is impossible for your Committee to compare the gross aggregate of all the pauper expenses of the Commonwealth with those of Great Britain. But if the proportion of the increase of the payments out of the Treasury of this Commonwealth for the last twenty years be taken as an evidence of the proportion of the increase of the pauper burthen on Massachusetts, then the proportion of the increase of the pauper burthen on Massachusetts has exceeded, in a given number of years, the proportion of the increase of the pauper burthen of Great Britain. It appears by an official statement, made in the year 1816 to The House of Commons, and published in a Report of a Select Committee of that House, on the Poor laws, that the proportion of the increase of the British poor-rate, between the years 1785 and 1815, was, in round numbers, from two millions sterling to five millions. In other words, there was an increase of three-fifths in thirty years. According to an annexed Statement* of the Treasurer of Massachusetts, it appears that the increase of the payments out of the Treasury of this State on pauper accounts, between the years 1800 and 1821, was, in round numbers, from $28,000 to $72,000; in other words, an increase of three-fifths fifths in twenty years.* Without pretending to assert that the payments out of the Treasury of the State is a true criterion of the increase of the pauper burthen in Massachusetts, your Committee do consider themselves justified by the fact, in concluding that the pernicious consequences of the existing system are palpable, that they are increasing, and that they imperiously call for the interference of the Legislature, in some manner equally prompt and efficacious."†

The radical evil of the Act of the 43d of Elizabeth, which provided for a compulsory support of the poor, and of the Order by the Court of the colony and province of Massachusetts Bay in 1639, was in the very principle of the substitution of such a provision for them, for that which God has himself made alike in the very constitution of human nature, and throughout the records of His revealed will. Nor is this all. For while the Act of Elizabeth directly required that the sum granted should be applied to the setting the idle to work, and the order of our own court was for the employment as well as maintenance of the poor, neither of them adopted any measures or prescribed any means by which the object of the enactment or of the order could be obtained. The consequence in England is well known to have been, that the idle, aware of the provision which was made for them by law, on the condition that they would work for it, were willing to offer their services for work, when it was known that no work could be given to them. They had, however, earned their share of the appropriation which had been made for them, by the offer to work, and it could not be withheld from clamorous importunity, when the failure of compliance with the terms on which the wages had been offered by the Government was wholly in those to whom it belonged to pay these wages to those who had earned them. This provision for the employment of the idle became, therefore, as a matter of course, a direct bounty upon idleness; and idleness and vagrancy, in a large part of the parent country, have grown in a fearful proportion to the poor rates of that country. To exonerate ourselves from the possible charge of exaggeration in this view of a legal and compulsory provision for the poor, we avail ourselves of a high and impartial authority. We mean that of Dr. Chalmers of Glasgow. In his Treatise on Political Economy, recently republished here, he says of "this system of legal charity," that it "is replete with all mischief." That "it has deadened the charity of relatives, the charity of immediate neighbours, and the charity of the affluent." That "in proportion to the largeness of its dispensations, we behold a more straitened and distressed, and withal a greatly suffering peasantry." "And how is it," he adds, "that indigence has been so multiplied under this system? Not alone by the imprudence which it has generated; as may be seen in the reckless marriages, and the relaxed industry and economy of the people. But also in the vice which it has generated; the low and loathsome dissipation; the profligacy of both sexes; with all the mischiefs which proceed from idleness; and through which the pauperism of England has become so deeply responsible for its immoralities, and its crimes. And, again, how is it that charity has waxed cold? Because law has endeavoured, however unsuccessfully, to cut off the occasions and the calls which nature had provided for its exercise. Hence the abandonment of children by their parents, and the desertion of parents by their children. Hence the frequent spectacle in every parish, of runaway husbands, and of nearest relatives alienated in affection because released from the obligation of duty to each other. Nor has it only weakened the cement which binds together the contiguous parts of the social edifice. It has effected a menacing disruption, or rent, between the higher and lower divisions of it. There is in England a gulf of separation between the rich and the poor, exemplified we believe in no other land; where the parties regard each other as natural enemies,—the one challenging what they feel to be their rightful allowances, and the other resisting what they fear to be interminable, and at length ruinous demands. The poor look to the rich as hard-hearted oppressors, detaining with stern gripe what nature and humanity determine to be theirs; and the rich look to the poor as so many poachers on their domain. Nor can we imagine a state of greater precariousness than that into which this system of public charity has brought us; or one which bodes more fearfully for the good order, or rather the stability of the Commonwealth. It has in fact vitiated and distempered the whole breath of society in England. There now sits an unnatural scowl on the aspect of the population; a resolved sturdiness in their attitude and gait; and whether we look to the profane recklessness of their habits, or to the deep and settled hatred that rankles in their hearts, we cannot but read in these moral characteristics of this land, the omens of some great and impending overthrow." ‡

Is this a true picture of the moral state of England, in view of its pauperism, and its legal provisions for the poor? May God grant that the lesson may be sent home, with power and effect, to the legislatures of the States in our Union! Solemn, in the view of your Commissioners, is the responsibility which lies upon our own Commonwealth, for its agency, however unwitting, in having created so much of the mass which is found here of pauperism and wretchedness, by the provision which has annually been granted for supporting it. And when to this consideration it is added, that every individual of the reckless and vicious poor contributes his or her share to the hardening of the heart against the best sympathies of our common nature; that every individual of them contributes a share to the diminution of the charities that would be extended to, and the comforts that would be obtained by, the virtuous poor; and that through their character and example, intemperance and profligacy are spread among other classes of the poor; we cannot doubt that the obligation will be strongly felt to admit the immediate and paramount claims of this subject; and to lose no time in the work of devising the means, and adopting the measures by which legal charity having been abolished, and every town being left free to be charitable only in the way which itself shall choose, and institute a more humane and Christian state of things in regard to the poor, and the whole poor, may be established among us.

"It forms no exception to our principle," adds the distinguished political economist whose words we have before cited, "but is rather its legitimate consequence, that while we deprecate a legal and compulsory provision for indigence, there is a certain species of public charity, which we advocate to the uttermost. There are certain distresses incidental to humanity, the inflictions of necessity and nature, which cannot be too openly or too liberally provided for. There is all the difference that can be imagined, both in principle and effect, between an institution for the relief of want and an institution for the relief of disease. The one multiplies its objects. Not so the other. The one enlists the human will on its side. The other will ever remain the object of painful reluctance and revolt to all the feelings of our nature. Open a door for the admission of the indigent, and we shall behold a crowd of applicants increasing every year, because lured thitherward by the inviting paths of indolence and dissipation. Open a door for the admission of the diseased,"—and we may add, for the deaf and dumb, the insane, the idiot, the blind,—and we shall have only a definite number of applicants. Men will become voluntarily poor. But they will not become voluntarily blind, or deaf, or maimed, or lunatic. It is thus that while an asylum for want creates more objects than it can satisfy, an asylum for disease creates none, but may meet all and satisfy all. Public charity has been profuse where it should have done nothing; and it has been niggardly where it should have done much. It is a disgrace to our philanthropic age, if infirmaries, or dispensaries, or asylums, whether for the cure of mental or bodily disease, or for the keeping of that which is incurable, are left to languish for the want of support; or are compelled to stop short ere the necessity for which they were instituted has been fully and finally overtaken."*

Other facts and considerations than we have adduced will be furnished by our Tables and Statements, which we believe will throw light upon the operations and consequences of our Poor Laws. Leaving these, as well as those of which we have here availed ourselves, to those to whose examination we are desirous that they should be submitted, we would further only briefly remark, that increased and increasing as are the expenses which are consequent upon a legal and compulsory provision for the poor, in any form which may be given to it, these are yet unworthy of a thought, when compared with the moral evils of the system. In the only body of Christians, either in our own country or in England, which has confined itself to the obligations of Christian charity, without any regard to legal and compulsory provisions for the poor, the number dependent upon charity has been as nothing when compared with the number of the same class in other sects. We refer to the Society of Quakers or Friends. And their principle and practice in this respect stand out in most honourable prominence, at once as evidence that when the law of Christian charity is left to its unchecked operation, it will be sufficient for the demands that will be made upon it; and that it is the sure and benignant effect of this charity, unlike that of law, which alienates to bind more closely together those who impart, and those who receive it. Human laws may punish crime, and they may do much beside to prevent it. But they cannot compel virtue. And, independent of this consideration, it may be remarked of all legislative provisions for the support of the poor, that however wisely in other respects they may be framed, their execution must be committed to a very numerous body of men, to be annually elected, and to a great extent to be annually changed. It therefore almost every where happens, that the majority, and not unfrequently that the whole of the Board, after each election, are to act only for the current year. The duties of the office are, however, complex; requiring not only a full comprehension of the law upon the subject, but considerable attention and experience to qualify for a just and wise application of it. And how many, pre-engaged as men are by other concerns, will give to the subject, in view of a year's service in it, the care and attention which it demands from them? On the contrary, how very large a proportion of this body, solicitous principally not to incur censure in the discharge of their trust, will get as soon as possible into the established routine, with very little regard to the nature and tendency of established usages? The high responsibilities of the office being thus divided, and proportionably lessened, are scarcely felt; and growing evils are witnessed and acknowledged without calling forth a serious effort to repress, or even even to check them. We take the ground therefore, that be compulsory laws of charity as wise as they may, and as well suited to their end as human sagacity can make them, they never can be wisely and efficiently administered. They carry within themselves the seeds or principles of their own perversion and abuse. They do much to separate, instead of connecting the classes of society, and to benumb, rather than to quicken and give force to, the sensibilities of the prospered towards the poor. And they create an indefinite amount of artificial poverty; and, through the increase of this poverty, they lead to an indefinite increase of abjectness, misery and crime.*

In view of these facts and considerations, your Commissioners propose to this House, and through this House to the Legislature of the Commonwealth;

1st. That in each of the three successive years of 1833, 1834, and 1835, the allowance now granted for the State's poor be diminished one-third of its present amount; and that after the year 1835, there shall be no longer a recognition of State's poor by the Government of this Commonwealth.

2d. That the law respecting habitancy, now established in this Commonwealth, shall be so far modified and changed, that from and after the year 1835, all the requisitions of this law respecting the charge and support of the poor shall be repealed and abolished; and every town and county in the State shall be left free upon all questions respecting the charge and support of the poor.

3d. As government was instituted for the security of the life, liberty and property of the subject, and as neither liberty, property nor life are safe while the idle and able-bodied may without restraint demand support from the industrious and the thrifty, it is therefore the duty of the government to protect the last class against the unjust demands and incursions of the first. As far, therefore, as this protection may require that any additional power should be given, in order that the able-bodied who shall apply for charity to any town or county in the Commonwealth, and shall actually receive the support applied for, may be compelled to work, your Commissioners recommend that this power be given to the overseers of the poor and the directors of workhouses, to compel the labour of such idle-bodied receivers of their bounty, to an extent to defray all expenses that may have been incurred for them, and to make a reasonable compensation for the care that may have been taken of them.

4th. As a means of checking and of preventing idleness and beggary, where there is ability for self-support, your Commissioners recommend that Government should appropriate such an amount as they may think proper, to be granted to counties or districts in the Commonwealth, upon a scale proportioned in each case to their population, provided these counties or districts, or any of them, shall agree and determine to build county or district workhouses for the employment of the idle and able-bodied who may receive aid or support in them.

5th. As it is believed by your Commissioners, and by all, as they think, who have given attention to the subject, that pauperism in its worst form, as well as crime, is increased and extended in the Commonwealth by the unsuitableness of our county gaols and houses of correction for the exertion of any useful moral influence upon those who are or may be committed to them, and even by their direct and strong tendencies utterly to destroy any remains of self-respect or of moral feeling which may be carried into them, the attention of the Government should be given as promptly as may be to the character and condition of these institutions. Your Commissioners therefore recommend, that a committee be appointed be appointed by this House for the special purpose of visiting the county gaols and houses of correction in the Commonwealth, of collecting statistics respecting them, and of reporting to the House upon the measures required to make these institutions effectual to the purposes for which they were intended.

6th. As there is not only a manifest injustice in the practice, which is but too prevalent, of sending the poor from town to town in order to be relieved from the charge of them; and as this conduct towards the poor, though it may relieve some towns from an immediate care and expense, has yet contributed largely to the increase of the class of the wandering poor, and thus to the general burthen of expense, as well as to the increase of want and wretchedness, your Commissioners recommend, that a penalty be attached to this practice sufficiently heavy, or some other provision adopted, to effect and secure its discontinuance in our State.

7th. As there is an increasing disposition in towns to establish institutions in which the poor may live together in a family, rather than at large, and in which all who have any capacity for labour may be required to employ that capacity for their own and the support of their fellow inmates; and as there is no model institution in our Commonwealth which admits of such classification as should be made and maintained at once from sympathy with the virtuous and impotent poor, for the restraint of the vicious poor, and the prevention of pauperism; your Commissioners recommend that the Legislature incur some expense for obtaining plans of almshouses and workhouses, which will supply towns and counties with a knowledge a knowledge of the most effectual and at the same time the most economical modes of separating, classifying, and in other respects providing for, the poor inmates of these institutions.

* One of the greatest difficulties which was experienced in collecting the Statistics which are here given of the poor, arose from the fact, that the overseers from whom they were obtained had never sustained the office till the present year; that, till their election to it, they had given little or no attention to the town's accounts of the poor, or to the practice of overseers; and, in some instances, that they had not in their possession any records of their predecessors. Now and then, though not often, it occurred, that the Chairman of the Board had held the office, and perhaps some others in it, for a number of successive years; and had been allowed to bring the knowledge which their experience had given them, to bear upon its duties. And in these towns little or no difficulty was found in obtaining the information which was sought.

8th. Your Commissioners recommend that the Legislature provide by law for an annual statistical return of the poor, and of the prisoners in every county gaol and house of correction, in every town and county in the Commonwealth.

9th. Your Commissioners would finally recommend, that a Committee be appointed, in view of this Report, and the documents accompanying it, to prepare a Bill or Bills, and such resolutions as may be required, on the basis of the principles and for the accomplishment of the purposes here proposed; and, as soon as may be, to make report of said Bill or Bills and resolutions to this House.

STATEMENTS.

FIRST.—Of Almshouses which have more or less Land for the employment and support of the Poor; of Expenditures and Receipts for the Poor in the Towns in which they are so provided for; with general Facts and Remarks which could not conveniently be stated in Tables.

COUNTY OF SUFFOLK.

Boston.—Boston has two distinct boards for the charge of the poor; viz. the overseers of the poor, and the directors of the house of industry. The overseers give relief only to the poor who are at large in the city. The directors of the house of industry have the charge of those only who are in the house.

The house of industry contains fifty-five lodging-rooms in the main house for the poor, and thirty-two in two out-houses. That is, it has eighty-seven lodging-rooms for the poor. It has also six cells for the punishment of refractory inmates, six dormitories for insane men, and eight for insane women. Husbands and wives are not allowed to live in the same room. The centre of the building contains apartments for the family of the superintendent, and others for the officers of the establishment. The male inmates live in the eastern wing, and the females in the western. There is also a chapel in the house, in which the inmates worship on Sunday, and a school-house in which the children are instructed.

When this establishment was commenced, it was intended for the reception and employment of the able-bodied poor, who should claim the charity of the city; and hence it was called The House of Industry. But it has no effectual means of detaining this class of the poor, when they are disposed to make their escape from it. They go to it, therefore, only for temporary relief, when they are worn down by intemperance or disease; and leave it as soon as they have acquired strength to return to their former indulgences in the city, or to lead a wandering life in travelling over the country. Instead of being a house of industry, the institution has therefore become at once a general infirmary, an asylum for the insane, and a refuge for the deserted and most destitute children of the city. So great is the proportion of the aged and infirm, of the sick, insane, idiots and helpless children in it, that nearly all the effective labour of the females, and much of that of the males, is required for the care of those who cannot take care of themselves. Cooking, washing and ironing, making and mending clothes, scouring the house, nursing the sick, and the charge of small children and lunatics, make a great amount of labour. For these reasons, the house of industry furnishes a very unfair specimen of the self-supporting capacities of the poor. During the spring, summer and autumn, the cultivation of the farm and garden employs most of the ablest men, and oakum picking the more infirm. There are generally two or three carpenters among the inmates, one or two blacksmiths, as many shoemakers, and sometimes a mason. For these, employment is found in making repairs within and about the buildings.

It is a great evil of the institution, that the children who are in it cannot be kept apart from its adult inmates.

The cost per week for board and clothing, is estimated to be about eighty cents for adults, and fifty cents for children.

The directors of the house of industry, and the overseers of the poor, have no salaries. The salary of the superintendent of the house, is $1,000; of the assistant superintendent, $650; of the farmer, $250; of the overseer of the kitchen, $130; of the overseer of the clothing department, $130; of the teacher of the female children, $159; of the instructor of the boys, $104; of the physician, $300; of the chaplain, $260. Total of salaries, $2,983 00.

In a letter of the date of October 10th, 1832, the superintendent of the house of industry says, "within the last three weeks, sixty-seven persons have been admitted here, of whom fifty-eight are state paupers. Many of them are recent emigrants, who were half starved on the passage out, and who landed without a dollar, and destitute of bodily or mental energy to provide for themselves or their children. Several are mothers with young children, who have been abandoned by their husbands and fathers."

On the 17th of January last, the adults in the house belonging to Boston, were, 170. From other towns in Massachusetts, 33; from New Hampshire and Maine, each, 15; from Rhode Island, 4; from New York, 5; from Connecticut, 1; from New Jersey, 2; from Pennsylvania, 3; from Maryland, 2; from Virginia, 4; from N. and S. Carolina, and from Tennessee, each, 1. Total of American adults, 257. And from Ireland, 111; from England, 38; from Scotland, 5; from Germany, and the north of Europe, 15; from France, 5; from India, 1; from the West Indies, 3; from Portugal, 3; from Italy, 1; from Africa, 1. COUNTY OF ESSEX.

Salem.—The farm for the poor in Salem, contains 115, or 120 acres of land. Three-fourths of the land may be profitably cultivated. The farm contains valuable ledges of rock; considerable quantities of rotten rock, so called, suitable for forming yards and garden walks; and a sand beach, from which sand is sold for paving streets. The rocks and sand are the principal sources of the revenue of the farm. The workhouse is 200 feet long, and 50 feet wide, and is five stories high. The males live in the eastern wing, and the females in the western.

The average expense for the support of the poor for the last twelve years, has been less than half the average of the former ten years in the old workhouse, although the average number of the poor supported has been increased. In the old workhouse, no work was done. The average number there for the last twenty years, from 1793 to 1816, was 120. And the superintendent of the present house gives the average in it for the last twelve years to have been 230.—See documents of the Salem Almshouse, reported by a committee of the town, and ordered to be printed, 1832.

Of the average number 230, 30 are capable on an average of half a day's work, and 20 more may perform some service. The worth of the labour of the inmates who can do the most work, compared with that of able-bodied men, is as three to one. About $900 a year are paid for hired work, independent of salaries.

The number of poor in the house has been reduced fifty a year for the last two years, and the house has been far more easily governed than formerly. These results are attributed, principally, to an entire disuse of ardent spirits in the house.

The overseers have no salaries. The salary of the superintendent is $650; of the foreman of the farm, $450; of the physician, $120; and of the chaplain, $100.

The State poor who come to the house, leave it as soon as they have strength enough to work. When they come in winter, they are required to remain and work in the spring. But "we wink at their departure, that the fear of punishment may deter them from returning."

Since the present superintendent has had the care of the house, that is, for ten years, there have been received into it 3,000 persons, of which number, he thinks that 2,900 were brought to it directly or indirectly by intemperance.

Marblehead.—The almshouse measures 66 by 32 feet. It has twelve lodging-rooms for the inmates. The female poor only, and a few married couples, live in the main house. The male subjects of the institution lodge in two large rooms of another house. The farm contains 20 acres; and 8 additional acres of hired land are cultivated by the inmates. The salary of the superintendent is $300; that of the hired man, $140; and two shillings a week, or $17 33 a year, are paid to a female domestic.

Twelve of the male inmates are capable of two-thirds of a day's work, and about eight more could nearly earn their living. Two-thirds of the females might earn their support, and the remaining number are incapable of any work. The work done is, repairs of the highways, farming, oakum picking, shoe-making and mending, spinning and knitting.

The overseers are surveyors of the highways.

Lynn.—The almshouse was built in 1819. It has twelve rooms for lodging its inmates, and measures 60 feet by 40. It does not admit of a classification of the poor; and great evils result from this defect in the institution. It has a farm of fifty acres of land, and the cost of the whole was about $12,000. The superintendent has a salary of $200 a year, and a hired man has $120 a year. No other salaries are given.

Eight or ten men, and six or eight women are capable of labour. Their services are worth about half those of the able-bodied. The principal work done is that of making and binding shoes, and farming. None of the inmates are employed out of the house.

Ardent spirits are never given to the inmates. The expense for the poor has diminished $500 a year for the last four years, partly from the disuse of ardent spirits, and in part from a reduction of the number of the poor, and an improvement in the general discipline of the house.

The children belonging to the institution are educated in the district school, and are bound out by 10 or 11 years of age.

The overseers are not surveyors of the highways.

Beverly.—The almshouse was built in 1803. It measures 70 by 50 feet, is two stories high, and has, or admits of, accommodations for 60 inmates. It was built when the town was rapidly increasing in its population, and regard was had in its erection to an expected increase of the poor with a continued increase of inhabitants. But a check was given to the growth of the town, and its numbers are now about the same as in 1803. A few acres of land are cultivated by the poor who are able to work,

Rowley.—The almshouse was an old dwelling-house. It measures 36 feet by 30, and has ten lodging-rooms for the poor. The farm contains 107 acres; and the cost of the establishment was $3,000.

The present superintendent has "turned away as many as twenty State's poor within the last six months, after giving them a lodging for a night, or dismissing them as soon as they were able to travel."

Three of the women spin and weave for the house. Four of the town's poor, three of whom can each do a day's work, labour upon the farm.

The children are sent to the town school. Religious services are performed in the house on Sunday evenings.

Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates.

The salary of the superintendent is $225. The three overseers receive each, $8; or together, $24.

Newbury.—The almshouse measures 60 feet by 30. It is an old house, and has been used as an almshouse about four and a half years. There are eight rooms for the poor in the main house, and one in a separate building. The single women lodge in this outhouse, and the other inmates in the main building. The farm contains 210 acres, and the cost of the establishment was $7,500.

The poor work on the highways, and on the farm, pick oakum, and make shoes. The females spin and weave, but do not make cloth enough for the house. Three men can do a good day's work; two, a half of a day's work; and five, about a fourth of a day's work. No one of the State's poor did any work here during the last summer.

Magistrates send here those convicted of idleness and intemperance. Two of those now in the house were so sent.

The children are instructed in the town school. There are occasional religious services in the house in the evening.

Newburyport.—The almshouse was built in 1793. It is of brick. The main house measures 80 feet by 30; and an addition has been made to it of 40 feet by 30. There are 25 rooms for lodging the inmates. The men live in one wing, and the women in the other. About 20 acres of land belong to the establishment, and the cost of the whole was $11,800.

Employments. Working on the highways, and on the farm, and picking oakum. The oakum pickers, the feeblest of the workers, are 15; and 10 work on the highways and land. Of these workers, no one is a State's poor.

The whole number of State's poor aided by the overseers in and out of the house last year, was 82. Of these, 59 were Americans, and 23 were foreigners.

Magistrates commit to the house for idleness and intemperance. Of those now in the house, five were so sent to it. If they abscond, and are recommitted, they are punished with solitary confinement.

No ardent spirits are given to the inmates. It was ascertained by careful inquiry, that, of the whole poor in the house in 1827, seven-eighths were brought to poverty by intemperance.

Very young children are instructed in the house; and when of a suitable age, are sent to the town school. Religious services are performed in the house on Sunday evenings.

The overseers are surveyors of the highways.

Essex.—The Almshouse measures 50 feet by 30. It was an old dwelling-house, a part of it having probably been built a century ago. It has seven lodging rooms for the poor. In the farm are 100 acres of upland, and 50 of marsh. The cost of the whole was $5,000.

Magistrates send idlers and the intemperate to the almshouse: No ardent spirits are given to the inmates. The inmates work on the farm, make their own cloth, and pick oakum. Three men and six women are each capable of a day's work. Few of the State's poor apply here for assistance.

Andover.—The almshouse is very old, and was a farm-house. It measures 42 by 32 feet, and has eleven lodging rooms for the poor. Considerable evils result from the impracticability of separating and classifying its inmates. The farm contains 170 acres, a considerable part of which is wood land. It was purchased in 1807, and cost $ 4,000.

The inmates work on the farm, do the light work in a brick-yard belonging to the farm, pick wool and spin. Only three males and five females are capable each of half a day's work. Almost all the State's poor who come to the house leave it as soon as they are able to travel; although more than half, if detained after they have been refreshed by rest, and kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, might earn their own subsistence. The children belonging to the house do not go to any school. They are generally placed in families by eight years of age. Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates, nor are any used in the house.

The overseers of the poor have $ 1 per day for their services, amounting, for them all, to about $ 50 a year. The salary of the superintendent is $ 170 per annum. Religious instruction is given to the inmates generally by the students of the Theological Institution.

Haverhill.—The almshouse measures 63 by 34 feet. Half of it is an old house, and half is new, and is built of brick. It has eight lodging rooms for the poor. Great difficulties are experienced from the impracticability of classifying the inmates. The farm contains 96 acres of land, and the cost of the establishment was $5,483 88. Only four men are capable of half a day's work, and these are town's poor. The females who have capacity for labour, card and spin, and the men work on the farm.

There were no receipts from the farm beyond what were consumed upon it. When the superintendent makes any sale of produce, with the proceeds he purchases other provisions for the house. Before the poor were removed to the farm, the average cost for them was $1,500 per annum. It is also an additional advantage of the farm, that idlers and intemperate persons have been sent to it by magistrates, and expense for them in the county house of correction has been saved to the town. Ardent spirits are given to the working men.

The overseers receive 75 cents a day for their services; that is, about $12 each a year. The salary of the superintendent is $200 a year.

Charlestown.—The almshouse in Charlestown is 100 feet long, and 46 feet wide. It has three stories above the basement, and contains 38 rooms for the inmates. From four to six lodge in a room. The cost of the house, with three acres of land, was $18,000.

The salary of the keeper is $500; and that of the chairman of the overseers, $400 per annum.

Ten acres of land are hired, in addition to the three belonging to the establishment. The work done is oakum-picking, gardening and farming, labour on the highways, shoemaking, tailoring, blacksmithing and spinning. Cloth is purchased for the inmates, but all their clothing, except socks, is made in the house.

Cambridge.—The main house of Cambridge almshouse was built in 1818, and measures 55 by 36 feet. The cost of the whole, with 12 acres of land, was $7,725 77. The number of lodging rooms for the inmates is 18. No assistance is given to any out of the house, except in cases of extreme necessity. Ardent spirits are given to the poor who work.

Forty acres of land are hired for cultivation, beside the twelve belonging to the establishment. The work done is picking hair; all the shoemaking, blacksmithing and tailoring of the establishment; labour on the highways; and wood sawing for the town-house, meeting-houses and schools. Wood is also sold from the establishment, sawed and split; but only to the poor, and at the cost, as a means of aiding the poor out of the house.

Of 104 in the house when it was visited, 92 were State's poor; and, of these, five were Americans, and 87 were foreigners. Seventy-five were capable of more or less work.

Medford.—The almshouse is 40 feet square. It has six lodging rooms for the poor, and from four to ten sleep in a room. It does not admit of a classification of its inmates. The farm contains only 11 acres of land; and the cost of the establishment is estimated to have been $5,000. The inmates pick oakum, and work upon the farm and highways. They did 318 days' work on the roads last year, at 50 cents a day. Four men and one woman are capable each of a day's work. Aid is sometimes given to the State's Poor to carry on their way; but only at the almshouse, if they remain in the town.

Magistrates send idlers and drunkards to the almshouse as to a house of correction, for any term short of six months; and if they abscond, and are re-committed, they are punished with solitary confinement. The four working men above named were so sent. There has been no increase of poor in the town for the last five years. The effect of abolishing the use of ardent spirits in the house has been, a diminution of the number of applicants for admission to it. There has therefore been a diminution of expense for the poor. Children are sent to the town school. Average proportion of children in the house for five years, five.

The overseers give assistance to none out of the house. The keeper's salary is $250. Other salaries, $75.

Malden.—The almshouse is of brick, and measures 68 feet by 40. It has nine lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to eight sleep in a room. The house does not admit of a classification of the inmates; and there is great cause for the apprehension of evil from this circumstance. The farm contains 82 acres of land, and the cost of the establishment was $5,500. The poor are employed in making shoes, in work upon the farm, and in labour upon the highways. Some are sent to the house by magistrates for idleness and intemperance; and if they abscond, and are re-committed, they are punished with solitary confinement.

Watertown.—The almshouse was built in 1824. It is two stories high, and measures 54 by 32 feet. It has five lodging rooms for the poor, besides a spacious and comfortable garret, in which the single men sleep. The females lodge in the rooms below, and from four to six sleep in a room. There are no special accommodations for the insane. The farm contains 32 acres of very good land. Four of the inmates work on the farm, and two of them are State's poor. The establishment has been in operation eight years, and cost $ 3,500. The inmates work on the farm, and on the highways. Three men and two women are capable each of a day's work ; three men of half a day's work each, and three of a fourth of a day's work each. The number of days' work done by the superintendent, teams and poor, of the establishment on the highways last year, was 607. Of the workers on the highways, six were State's poor, and three were Town's poor. Children are instructed in the town school, and the poor go to church on Sundays. No religious instruction is given in the house. Of the State poor who call for occasional aid, nearly all, if compelled to work, could earn their living. Ardent spirits are given to the poor who work. The superintendent feels the difficulties which arise from this practice, and wishes its discontinuance. But its allowance is a rule of the house. The average cost for the poor before their removal to the farm was $ 1,500 per year. None are aided out of the house.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 270 a year. A hired man has $ 14 a month, for six months, or $ 84 ; and the overseers charge for their services upon the highways, of which they are the surveyors.

None are sent by magistrates.

Waltham.—The almshouse was an old mansion-house. It is 40 feet square, and two stories high. It has five lodging rooms for the poor. It neither admits of a classification of the inmates, or has any provision for the care of the insane. The farm contains 130 acres of land, and the soil is generally good. It has a good peat bog. It has been owned by the town four years ; but during the three preceding years the poor were kept upon a farm. The cost of the establishment was $ 3,066 67.

The poor work on the farm, and on the highways. One is capable of a day's work, and three of half a day's work. About 250 days' work were done by the establishment on the highways last year. This work was done by the town's poor as far as the poor are employed. Few of the State's poor come to the house for aid. Of the wandering State's poor who are seen passing through the town, it is believed that three-fourths are able to earn their living.

The overseers are not surveyors of the highways. But it is annually voted at the March meeting, that every one who shall pay to the overseers 75 cents on a dollar of the sum which he is taxed for the highways, shall be exempted from further charge for the highways during the year ; and his tax shall be worked out by the poor of the almshouse.

Ardent spirits are allowed to the workers during the summer months.

Littleton.—The almshouse was a farm-house, and is probably seventy-five years old. It measures 40 by 30 feet, and is two stories high. The main house contains four sleeping rooms for the inmates, and there is an out-house which contains four sleeping rooms. The farm measures about 140 acres, and has upon it about 30 acres of woodland. The soil is merely of a tolerable quality, and it has no particular advantages for revenue. The establishment has been in operation since 1825, and cost $3,600.

No man on the farm is capable even of a quarter of a day's work. Two women are capable each of a day's work ; one of half, and another of a fourth of a day's work.

Of the wandering poor who call for occasional aid, nine-tenths, if detained and kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence.

Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. Children are sent to the town school. No poor were aided out of the house last year. None are aided at their houses except in cases of illness, which prevents their removal to the farm.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 200. No other salary is given.

Lexington.—A part of the almshouse was formerly an old farm-house, which measures 28 feet by 20. An addition was made to it in 1819, which measures 31 by 22 feet. The old part of the house is one story, and the new is two stories high. There are eight lodging rooms for the inmates, and from one to three sleep in a room. Great care is required for security against immoralities. The farm contains 80 acres. The soil is generally good, but has no particular advantages for income. The land has been owned by the town nearly from the date of its incorporation. The estimated value of the establishment is $2,500.

No work, which brings any income, is done by the inmates in the house. One woman is capable of a day's work; and one man and one woman each of half a day's work. Ardent spirits are not allowed in the house; none are sent to it by magistrates. The children are instructed in the town school.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 180. No other salary is given.

The average cost for the poor before the establishment of the farm is not known. The chairman of the overseers, however, knows the cost to have been as high as $1,600 in a year.

Marlborough.—Almshouse: a part of it was an old farm-house, which measures 40 feet by 30. An addition has been made to it, by which it measures 62 by 40 feet. It is two stories high; has ten lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to five sleep in a room. The house does not admit of a classification of its inmates. The farm contains 160 acres. Some of the soil is extraordinarily good, and nearly all of it is susceptible of good cultivation. Four men do more or less work on the farm. The establishment has been in operation ten years, and the cost of the whole was $4,000.

The female poor spin and knit. With the proceeds of the spinning, all the weaving is obtained from the neighbours; and from the cloth so woven, all the inmates are clothed. One man and two women are capable each of a day's work; two men of half a day's work; and one woman and two men of a fourth of a day's work. No other of the inmates is capable of any service. The increase of the inmates in winter is occasioned by the necessities of the intemperate, who live as they can in the summer, but who must be provided for in the winter. Ardent spirits are not allowed to be in the house. Few of the wandering poor come here. Those who come are required to labour, and therefore prefer to leave the house: those of this class who call at the house are quite able to support themselves; and in case they remain any number of days, as they then actually earn as much as they receive, no charge is made to the State for the care of them. The practice is to aid no poor out of the house, except in cases in which they cannot be removed to it. The average cost for the poor, before their removal to the farm, was $1,550.

Concord.—The Almshouse was built in 1826. It is two stories high, and measures 60 feet by 30. It has eight lodging rooms for the poor, in one of which is a commodious apartment, made by a partition of bars of wood, for the confinement of an insane woman whom it is necessary to deprive of liberty.—The apartment has a full-sized window in it, and is well warmed. From two to seven of the inmates sleep in a room.

The farm contains 50 acres, and its soil is of an ordinary quality. The establishment has been in operation six years. The land was long since left to the town for the support of the poor by Captain Cargill. The estimated worth of the establishment is $3,000.

No one of the inmates is capable of a day's work. One man and two women may do each half a day's work; and no others can perform any service. Ardent spirits are not allowed in the house. Children are sent to the town school. Of the wandering poor who call for assistance upon the overseers or for rest at the house, nine-tenths could, if compelled to work, earn their own subsistence.

The salary of the superintendent is $200. No other salary is given.

The annual average expense for the poor for five years before their removal to the farm was, $800 per annum. The expenditures and receipts of Concord for the poor during the last year could not be obtained.

Chelmsford.—The almshouse was a farm-house, and measures 40 feet by 30, with the addition of a kitchen, washroom, &c. It has also an out-house for the insane, which is warmed by a stove in the cellar, with an aperture in the floor for the admission of warmed air. The main house has eight lodging rooms for the poor. The farm contains 100 acres. It was bought in 1823, and cost $3,500.

"Strolling beggars" frequently pass under the notice of the overseers, nearly all of whom, it is thought, "if compelled, could earn a good living." When there are children in the house, they are instructed in the town school.

Westford.—The almshouse is nearly a century old. It was a farm-house, is two stories high, and measures about 40 feet square. It has also an out-house, with chambers, and an apartment for refractory subjects. There are six lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to six sleep in a room. Immoralities have resulted from the impracticability of classifying the inmates. The farm contains 170 acres. The soil is good, but has no peculiar advantages for revenue. The establishment has been in operation seven years, and cost $3,000. No work is done by the inmates but upon the farm. One man and one woman are capable of a day's work; five women of half a day's work, and three men of a fourth of a day's work. No others are capable of any service.

Magistrates commit to the house for intemperance. Two were so committed last year. No ardent spirits are given in the house. State's poor seldom call for aid here; and no town's poor are assisted by by the overseers, except at the almshouse. The average expenditures for the poor before their removal to the farm were from $ 10 to $ 1,200. The salary of the superintendent is $ 240.

Groton.—Almshouse. Part of it is nearly a century old. It measures 32 feet by 30, is two stories high, and has a new adjoining part, one story high, and measuring 30 by 14 feet. There are five lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to six sleep in a room. Great care is necessary for security against immoralities. The farm contains 170 acres, 50 of which are good interval land, and the remainder pretty good. The establishment has been in operation since 1827, and cost $ 2,357 04.

No work is done by the inmates for profit, except upon the farm. No man or woman is capable of a day's work. One man, and five women, can do half a day's work, and no others are capable of any service.

The children are instructed in the town school, and religious services are performed in the house once a fortnight on Sunday evenings by the ministers of the town.

There are inmates for whom the most disagreeable services are to be performed; and ardent spirits are given only when these services are rendered, and to those who render them. Of the wandering poor who are seen here, nearly all, if compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 225.

The cost for the poor before the establishment of the present system was $ 1,050, per annum.

COUNTY OF NORFOLK.

Roxbury.—The almshouse measures 100 feet by 40. It has, besides its apartments for the keeper's family, 12 lodging rooms for the poor, and space sufficient for finishing 12 other lodging rooms for them. The males live in one wing, and the females in the other. Husbands and wives are not allowed to live together, and the sexes are kept quite apart from each other. This circumstance has brought the house into disfavour with some who would otherwise have taken up their abode in it. The farm contains 32 acres of land. About 20 acres are used for tillage and mowing, and about 12 are principally valuable for the pudding-stone that is upon them, and which is used in repairing the highways. The old Almshouse had no farm connected with it. A farm, connected with repairs of roads by the poor, is found to be very profitable. The present establishment has been in operation one year, and the cost of the whole was $ 20,000.

The number of poor now capable of work is five. Their average number is seven, and their service is worth 50 cents a day. Beside the work done on the highways and farm, between 20 and 30,000 skewers for butchers are made in the house; and, when the material can be obtained, wool and hemp are picked by the inmates. The females, who are capable of work, are hired out for day service.

The number in the house last year was smaller than it has been for many preceding years, principally in consequence of the new regulations, which forbid the use of ardent spirits, and require an entire separation of the sexes. All aid is refused to the State's poor, except at the house; and they continue there but for a day or two, except in winter. No State's poor were employed either on the farm or roads during the last year.

The average number of young children is about eight or ten. They are sent to the town school. Divine service is performed in the house every Sunday evening by the clergy of the town.

Drunkards and idlers are sent to the house by magistrates; and if they abscond, and are re-committed, they are punished with solitary confinement.

Appendix (F.)

The salary of the keeper is $275; of the hired man, $313; overseers, for services as surveyors of highways, $150.

Dorchester.—The almshouse measures 62 by 33 feet, and has seven rooms for the poor, each 16 feet square, and a large garret which is the sleeping room of a number of the male inmates. There is also in the yard a building for the insane and for idiots. The farm contains 33 acres of land, 15 of which are cultivated for vegetables and hay. The estimated cost of the establishment is $5,000. The principal labour of the poor is done upon the roads. They also work upon the farm. Two are employed in shoe-making, and the females spin and knit. The worth of the labour of the poor on the roads may be fairly estimated at 50 cents a day, independent of their board. The labourers who are permanent poor are made so by the want of capacity to provide for and to take care of themselves. Two are able to do a day's work, and six or seven two-thirds of a day's work. About eight men are incapable of any service. No State's poor were employed last year. Children are sent to the town school. Ardent spirits are given to those who labour. Inmates are sometimes sent by magistrates for a term not exceeding six months.

Quincy.—The almshouse was built in 1815. It measures 40 feet by 30, and is two stories high. There are nine lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to four lodge in a room. Separate from the main house is a work-shop, and a place of confinement for refractory subjects. The farm contains 50 acres of land of a very ordinary quality; but there is on it a sand hill, which gives some revenue. The cost was $3,000. Five men are capable of doing a day's work, and one of a fourth of a day's work. Three of the women are capable each of half a day's work. The overseers are surveyors of the highways, and the poor work upon them. Ardent spirits are given to the men who work. None are sent by magistrates.

COUNTY OF BRISTOL.

Taunton.—The main house of the almshouse was built in 1827, and measures 42 by 36 feet. Contiguous is the farm-house, which was purchased with the farm, and which measures 36 by 26 feet. The main house is two stories high; the adjoining house is but one story high. There are 12 lodging rooms for the inmates, and from two to six sleep in a room. The house does not admit of classifying the inmates, and great care is required to guard against immoralities. The farm contains 130 acres of land. The soil is generally light and sandy. It has about 30 acres of wood land, and about 25 of which are good for tillage and grass. The establishment has been in operation five years, and cost $ 5,000. The inmates make tubs and baskets, pick oakum, sometimes work on the roads, and are sometimes hired out for day's work. Two women are capable of a day's work; and six men and two women of half a day's work. No others are capable of service. Of the wandering State's poor who apply for occasional aid, it is believed that the exceptions are few of those who, if kept from ardent spirits and compelled to work, could not earn their own subsistence. Till the farm was purchased, the poor were put up at auction to the lowest bidder. Great immoralities were consequent upon this manner of disposing of them; and the new provision made for them has been greatly favourable to their comfort and their virtue. Ardent spirits are given only in haying time, and then to those only who work in the wet meadows.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 200; and the overseers receive about $ 50.
The average cost for the poor before their removal to the farm was $ 1,340.

Fairhaven.—The almshouse was a farm-house. It is one story high, and measures 32 feet by 30. It has four lodging rooms for the poor, and from one to three sleep in a room. There is only one fire-place for the inmates in the house. In their lodging rooms, there is neither a fire-place nor a stove; and these lodging-rooms are about eight feet square. There are only six acres of land belonging to the establishment. The soil is poor. The cost of the whole was $ 548 25. The place was purchased by the town in 1824.

The poor work on the land, and pick oakum. No one of them is capable of a day's work. Two women and one man are capable of half a day's work, and one man of a fourth of a day's work. Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates. None are sent here by the magistrates. Of the State's poor who apply for occasional aid, nearly all, if compelled to work, might earn their own subsistence.

The salary of the superintendent is $ 200. No other salary is given.
The cost for the poor before the purchase of the almshouse was about $ 1,000 a year.

New Bedford.—The almshouse is about 12 years old. It measures about 50 feet by 40, and is two stories high, with a basement. Adjoining the house is a shed, 40 feet by 18, over which are chambers; and there is another building, the original farm-house, which measures 40 by 25 feet. The whole contains 24 rooms for the poor. The establishment does not admit of a classification of the inmates. The farm contains 96 acres of land, which is washed by the sea, and the soil is generally good: 5,500 feet of salt-works, at $1 a foot, have been built upon it, principally within the last year. The farm was bought in May 1828, and the cost of the establishment is estimated to have been $13,000. The salt works, it is believed, will hereafter contribute much more than they have yet done to the support of the poor.

The poor work on the farm, pick oakum, and assist in the charge of the salt-works. One woman, and no man, is capable of a day's work; one woman, and no man, of half a day's work; and four men, and no woman, of a fourth of a day's work. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. Before the purchase of the farm, rum was allowed to the poor; and the old almshouse, where they then were, was a common nuisance. The superintendent thinks he could not control the subjects in the house if the permission to use ardent spirits were given to them. Of the State's poor who call for occasional aid, 9 out of 10, if compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. They are dismissed as soon as may be, from a desire to keep down the numbers in the house.

The salary of the superintendent is $325; and a hired man has $14 a month through the year.

The Town has for some years appropriated $ 2,000 a year for the Expenditures of the Overseers of the Poor. With this appropriation they have obtained the present establishment, which promises soon to relieve the town of much of its present cost for the poor.

COUNTY OF PLYMOUTH.

Middleborough.—Till one year preceding last April, the poor of this town were bid off at auction to him who would take the charge of them for the smallest sum. The present establishment was begun on the 4th of April 1831. The almshouse was a farm-house. It is an L house, two stories high, and contains eleven lodging-rooms for the poor. But it does not admit of classifying its inmates. The farm contains 112 acres, about 30 of which are good for grain and grass. The cost of the whole was $ 4,500. Of the poor, one man and three women are capable each of a day's work. One woman is capable of half a day's work, and three men of a fourth of a day's work. No others are capable of any service. The poor work on the farm, and are hired out to work for individuals, and upon the roads. Of the 24 State's poor in the house last year, nine were Indians, five were blacks, and two were Irishmen. Children are instructed in the town school. Magistrates do not send any to the house. Ardent spirits are given to the working men and women. The salary of the superintendent and his sister is $ 246. The average expense for the poor for the five years preceding their removal to the farm was, $ 1,919 25 a year.

Abington.—The main house of the almshouse measures 40 by 38 feet. It was a farm-house. Two additions have been made to it; one for cooking and eating rooms, and the other for a shoemaker's work-room, and a place of confinement for the insane. The house is two stories high, and contains six lodging-rooms for the inmates. From four to six sleep in a room. Great care is required to secure the orderly conduct of the inmates. The farm contains 50 acres, and the land is good for grain and grass. It was bought four years ago, and cost $2,500. The children are sent to the town school, and on an average are put into families at eight years old. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates.

COUNTY OF WORCESTER.

Worcester.—The almshouse was a farm-house, but has been enlarged. It is two stories high, and measures 78 by 36 feet. There is a small out-building which contains two lodging-rooms for the blacks. The establishment has 18 lodging-rooms for its inmates, and from one to four sleep in a room.—The farm contains 227 acres; and the soil, taken together, is light. The establishment has been in operation 14 years, and cost $7,000. No one of the inmates is capable of a day's work. Two men and one woman can do half a day's work, and three men a fourth of a day's work. No others are capable of any labour. None are sent by magistrates. Children go to the town school. The ministers in the town alternately preach in the house once in a month. The salary of the superintendent is $350. The expense of hired help on the farm is $174. Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates. Of the wandering State's poor who call for occasional aid, two-thirds, if detained and kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. About thirty-five thus annually call for aid. The average cost for the poor for five years before the establishment of the farm was annually $2,000. The expenditures and receipts for the poor during the last year could not be obtained.

Shrewsbury.—The almshouse was a farm-house. It is two stories high, and measures 36 feet by 30. It has six lodging rooms for the poor, and from one to five sleep in a room. The farm contains 119 acres, about 22 of which are wood land. The establishment has been in operation three and a half years, and cost $4,200. The poor work on the farm, and bind shoes. One woman is capable of a day's work; and one man and one woman of half a day's work. No others are capable of any service. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. None are sent by magistrates. Children are instructed in the town school. Of the wandering State's poor, nearly all could earn their living. About 30 call in a year. The average cost for the poor for five years previous to their removal to the farm was $700. The salary of the superintendent is $265. No other salary is given.

Lancaster.—The almshouse is two stories high, and measures 50 by 25 feet. It has twelve lodging rooms for the poor, and from two to four sleep in a room. The farm contains 150 acres, the soil of which is generally good. It was bought seven years ago last spring, and cost, with the stock, $4,406 12. No work is done by the inmates except upon the farm. One woman is capable of a day's work, and three men of a fourth of a day's work. No others are capable of any service. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. Children are instructed in the town school. Religious services are performed in the house every Sunday. Few of the wandering State's poor are seen here. But of those who are, nearly all seem to be capable of earning their own subsistence. Of the 21 now in the house, 10 are there from a natural incapacity to provide for or to take care of themselves; and nine of these can do little or nothing even under the direction of others. The town has a fund of $500, left to it by Samuel Ward, Esq., the interest of which is given to poor widows. The salary of the superintendent is $225, and the three overseers receive each $15. The expenditures and receipts of Lancaster for the poor during the last year could not be obtained.

Bolton.—The almshouse was a good farm-house. It is two stories high, and measures 40 feet by 30. There is also an out-building for the insane, which is warmed by a stove. There are six lodging rooms for the inmates, and from one to five sleep in a room. The farm contains 75 acres, the soil of which is of an average quality with that of the town. The establishment has been in operation nearly six years, and cost, with its stock, $3,600.

The female inmates spin, knit and weave. One man and one woman are capable each of a day's work; four women and one man, of half a day's work, and no others are capable of any service. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. The children go to the town school. Religious services are performed in the house every Sunday. Few of the wandering poor come to the house. But those who apply for aid here, could, without exception, if kept from the use of ardent spirits, earn their own subsistence. When they come, they are set to work, and therefore soon leave the house. The rule and practice of the overseers is, to aid none out of the house. The average cost for the poor before their removal to the farm was about $750.

Westminster.—Before the purchase of the farm, the poor were annually put up at auction to be taken by the lowest bidder for them. A farm was purchased for them on the 15th of March 1830. The almshouse was a farm-house; it measures 38 feet by 30, and an addition which has been made to it, which measures 24 feet by 18. It has but four rooms for the inmates, and from two to five sleep in a room. The farm contains 100 acres, the soil of which is good. Its cost, with the stock, was $3,500. Of the adults, only one woman is capable of half a day's work. Straw is braided by five children. Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates. The children are instructed in the town school. The overseers assist none in the town except in the house. The salary of the superintendent is $200, and $20 are paid for hired work in getting in hay.

Templeton.—The almshouse is two stories high, and measures about 42 feet by 34. It has seven lodging rooms for the inmates. The farm contains 200 acres, the soil of which is good. There are upon it about 20 acres of fine timber. The establishment has been in operation six years, and cost, with the stock, $3,200. Of the inmates, only two men and two women are capable each of half a day's work. Worsteds is taken into the house for spinning, and the two men above referred to work upon the farm. Ardent spirits are not given to the inmates. When children are in the house, they are instructed in the town school, and are bound out by nine or ten years old. Few of the wandering poor are seen here; but those who occasionally apply for aid, seem to be quite capable of earning their subsistence. The overseers would be glad to receive 20 of them into their almshouse for the avails of their labour, without any State allowance for them. None in the town are assisted by the overseers out of the house. The salary of the superintendent is $200; and $20 a year are appropriated for medical attendance. The average cost for the poor before their removal to the farm, was $700.

COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

Springfield.—The almshouse is a very old building, and was formerly a farm-house: it was probably built a century ago; it is two stories high, and about 40 feet square; it has nine lodging-rooms for the poor, and from four to eight sleep in a room. No classification can be made of the inmates. Immoralities have resulted from this circumstance, but not recently. Only five acres of ground—a good garden spot—belong to the establishment. Six or seven of the inmates were more or less employed on this ground during the last year. This has been the residence of the poor for 30 years, and it is supposed that it might have cost $1,200. No work is done but upon the land, except by one of the inmates, the proceeds of whose labour are about $30 a year. Two are capable of half a day's work, and five of a fourth of a day's work. State's poor are always sent away as soon as possible. Of the wandering State's poor, nearly all could earn their living. About three a week of these call at the house. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. None are sent to the house by magistrates. Children are instructed in the town school. Religious services are performed in the house every Sunday. The salary of the superintendent is $140. No other salary is given.

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

Northampton.—The almshouse was a farm-house. It was purchased by the town, with the farm, in 1824. It is two stories high, and measures about 60 feet by 30. There is an out-building, which contains a work-room, a school-room, and lodging-rooms. This building measures 60 by 20 feet. There are 10 rooms for the inmates, and from one to ten lodge in a room. There is also a room for the insane, which is warmed by the funnel of a stove which passes through it. The sexes are effectually separated. The farm contains about 20 acres of poor soil; but it gave last year 100 bushels of corn, 125 of potatoes, 75 of peas for the market, and 10 of beans. Three or four cows are also pastured upon it. The establishment has been in operation eight years, and cost $4,600. Three men and two women, of the inmates, are capable of half a day's work; and three men and three women, each of a fourth of a day's work. The increase of inmates in winter is ascribed, in part, to the increased necessities of the town's poor in that season; and in part to the calls and demands of the wandering poor, who have done some work, and received some aid elsewhere in the summer, and at the approach of winter have been sent off to find a shelter and a home where they might. Ardent spirits are not allowed to the inmates. Children are instructed by one of the inmates in the house. Religious services are performed in the house every Sunday evening. Of the wandering poor, as many as a hundred call at the house in a year, and not less than two hundred are annually seen by the overseers. Of these three-fourths might earn their own subsistence. The State poor are encouraged thus to apply for aid by their knowledge of the provision which the State has made for them; and "they trouble the town's poor, by telling them

COUNTY OF FRANKLIN.

Greenfield.—This town has for many years had a poor-house, with a single acre of land belonging to it. It is a one-story building, which measures 30 feet square. It has four rooms for the inmates below, and a garret the length of the building. The females sleep below and the males above. It is a standing rule to aid none, except at the house, but in extraordinary cases, as of mental derangement, and when a few families may need few and small supplies for their comfort. The poor in the house are in the charge of a female housekeeper, whose wages are $1 25 per week. One of the overseers is required to be often at the house, for the superintendence of its concerns, for which he receives $10 per annum. Two females are capable of a day's work. No other of the inmates is capable of any work. The State's poor demand aid on the ground of the State allowance for them, and refuse to go to the poor-house, pleading that they have a right to that which is supplied by the State. The chairman of the overseers thinks that he sees more than a hundred of the wandering poor annually; and of these he has seen few, during the eight years in which he has been an overseer, who, if kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could not earn their own subsistence. The children are instructed in the town school, and are bound out by 12 years old. The average cost for the poor for the last five years has been $355 50.

SECOND.—Of the manner of disposing of the Poor, of Expenditures for them, &c. in Towns which have neither Almshouses nor Farms for employing and supporting them.

COUNTY OF NORFOLK.

Canton.—Canton has not had an almshouse since 1823. After that time the poor were sometimes put up at auction to the lowest bidder, and sometimes were boarded out in families by the overseers. This last disposition is now made of them, and they are boarded at 85 cents per week, the town taking the expense of clothing them.

Stoughton.—The poor of this town are annually sold at auction to the lowest bidder. He to whom they are so disposed of agrees to take all who shall be sent to him by the overseers within the current year, at the cost for each for which he takes those who are immediately committed to his care. Some are are partially assisted by the overseers, the cost for thus aiding them being less than would be incurred by putting them up at auction. Within 12 years past the expense of supporting the poor who were sold has varied from 62 cents to $1 a week for each of them. The sum for which they were taken last year was 99 cents per week for each of them. The town owned an almshouse and farm six years ago, and sold it with a view to the more economical mode of providing for the poor, by the disposition which is now made of them. The farm contained 30 acres of land, and the establishment was sold for $750. The person who now takes the charge of them for 99 cents per week incurs every expense for them, not only for clothing and support, but, in case of death, for their burial.

Framingham.—Previous to the last nine years the poor were disposed of in a mass to the lowest bidder for them. Since that time they have been placed at board in different families. For the first five of these nine years they were in the charge of one individual, who contracted to keep them for that time at $1,000 per annum; he to have, besides any proceeds of their labour, whatever sums should be paid by other towns for the charge of their poor, and the State allowance for the State's poor. In the succeeding year they were contracted for by another individual, who agreed, with the same privileges in regard to their labour, to the poor of other towns, and to the State's poor, to take them for $750 a year. And for the three following years they were taken by another individual, with the same privileges, for $535 a year. This contract extends to the 19th of next April, at which time the poor will be removed to a farm which has been purchased for them by the town. For some years previous to the last nine years, the annual cost for the poor was from 12 to $1,400 a year. The children in the charge of the overseers have been sent to the town school. Of the wandering State's poor, nearly all, if compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. Cost for the poor last year, independent of the State allowance, $535. The State allowance for State's poor, $68 18. Total cost for the poor, $603 18.

Brookfield.—The poor of this town were first collected into an almshouse upon a farm on the 10th of the last April. As opportunity has not yet been had here for a trial of the self-supporting system, it was not thought proper to place this among the towns to which reference might be had for a knowledge of the character and value of that system.

The town have adopted the rule and practice, that no one shall be aided by the overseers, except under circumstances of peculiar urgency, but at the farm. It is also a rule, that no ardent spirits shall be given to the inmates of the house. The wandering poor "appear to be able to earn their subsistence. When directed to the almshouse for relief, and told that they must labour there, they have kept on their way."

Leominster.—The permanent poor of this place are boarded, nursed, clothed and attended by a physician, if necessary, with a contractor, who takes them for three years. This has been the practice for the last ten years. The present contractor has taken this class of the poor for 70 cents per week. These permanent poor consist of those adults who, it is known, must always be a charge to the town. In case of the death of either of them, the contractor is allowed $10 for the expenses of his or her funeral. Small children are boarded out in families till they are eight years old, at which average age they are bound out. The cost for these is 40 cents per week. The poor who require only occasional relief receive it, as it is required, from the overseers. Only one man of the permanent poor is capable of half a day's work.

Brimfield.—The poor of this town are disposed of to those who will take them at the lowest price, regard being had by the overseers to those by whom they will be most justly and kindly treated. In the cases of permanent State's poor, the practice is to board them in families which will take them for the sum allowed for them by the State. Two State's poor were so boarded in the town last year. Of the poor taken by the lowest bidder, the average cost per week for adults is 75 cents. For children, 35 cents. The children in the charge of the overseers are bound out between the ages of 8 and 12 years, till they are 16 years old, at which time it is thought they may provide for themselves. They are instructed in the town school. Of the wandering State's poor, about 20 pass in a year, and nearly all, if detained and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence.

West Springfield.—Previous to the last six years the poor were separated into lots, and bid off at auction to those who would take them for the lowest sum. They were then, however, neither well fed nor well clothed, and a change was found necessary in the manner of disposing of them. The plan was therefore adopted of contracting with an individual to take the charge of them for a sum which was thought adequate to their comfortable support. Two individuals thus took them, each for a year. Another then took them for the three succeeding years; and, sixteen months ago, another contracted to take the charge of them for five years for $1,000 a year, he to be liable for expenses of every kind for the town's poor. The average cost for the poor for the last five years has been $1,000 per annum. The State's poor are annually boarded with those who will take them for the State's allowance; the town being obliged to pay between 20 and 30 dollars a year, in addition to this allowance, for their clothing, and for medical attendance upon them. Of the poor when visited, one woman was capable of a day's work, one man of half, and two men of a fourth of a day's work. Of the wandering poor, not more than six call in a year. Granville.—Till the present year, the practice of this town has been to place the poor with those who would take the charge of them for the smallest sum. They have all, this year, been taken by an individual. Those who take the State's poor receive the whole of the State's allowance for the charge of them. Westfield.—Previous to the last four years, the poor here were generally placed at board with those who would take them for the smallest sum, regard being had to the consideration that they were to be faithfully provided for. Four years ago they were contracted for by an individual who agreed to take the town's poor to his own house, to feed, lodge and clothe them, in case of need to provide a physician for them, and if they should die, to bury them. For this charge of the town's poor he received $ 448 50. In the three succeeding years they were disposed of at auction to the lowest bidder. A part of the State's poor are boarded with those who will take them for the amount per week allowed by the State; and to a part of them this allowance is given for their support. Five thus receive this allowance; two of whom are a mother and her daughter, and the three others, also females, are single persons. Of the poor now in the charge of the overseers, only one man is capable of a day's work; and two of a fourth of a day's work. Sheffield.—The poor here were formerly boarded in the families of different individuals. For five years past they have been in the charge of one individual, who has provided an almshouse, and has kept the poor together. During the year before this provision for them, 49 poor were in the charge of the overseers, and the cost for them was $1,967 00. When it was made known that the contractor who had engaged to take the support of them would give assistance to none except at the almshouse, but in cases of illness in which they could not be removed to it, only 17 of the 49 could be persuaded on these terms to accept of aid from the town. The indolent were excited to exertion, and the self-indulgent to self-denial. This individual took the poor for the first of these five years, for $825; for the second, for $750; for the third, for $625; for the fourth, for $575; and for the last year, for $475. The whole number in the charge of the overseers when this almshouse was visited, on the 27th of November last, was eight; not one of whom was capable of any service.

The largest number of the State's poor who come here are foreigners. The American States' poor come from New York and Connecticut. The State's poor are provided for with, and in the same manner as, the town's poor.—The contractor takes the whole for a given sum, agreeing to exonerate the town from all cost, except for one of the State's poor who cannot be removed to his almshouse. Of the wandering State's poor, two-thirds, if kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. As many as thirty of them have called at the house during the past year.—Some of them have pleaded their right to be assisted, on the ground of the State allowance for them. Children are instructed in the town school, and are furnished with all necessary books. They are bound out by 10 or 12 years old.

Of the State's poor, four are Americans, and three are foreigners. Of the foreigners, who are all Irish, two came to this place four years ago, from Sheffield, because they would not go to the almshouse there, and could here be supported when at liberty. Probably twenty of the wandering poor call on the poor-master in a year, three-fourths of whom could earn their own subsistence. They are principally foreigners. The travelling poor are encouraged to come into the State by their knowledge of a State provision for them. In the adjoining county of Columbia, in New York, no poor are aided but at the poorhouse. They therefore prefer to live in Massachusetts. The average cost for the poor here, for the last five years, has been $407 60.

Great Barrington.—During the last five years the poor have once been put up at auction to the lowest bidder, and at other times have been contracted for by an individual; the selectmen having advertised for proposals to take the whole who may then be, and in any way shall through the year become, a charge to the town. It is not agreed in this contract that the individual who takes the poor shall receive the amount of the State allowance for such State poor as he may have to assist or to support. This allowance goes into the town treasury. The keeper of the poor renders an account to the overseers of the arrivals, departures and deaths of the State's poor who go to him for assistance, who from this make out their account against the State. The State poor are accustomed to refer to the State allowance for them as a ground of their right to the aid of the overseers. But it is the policy of the overseers, and one of the stipulations of the bond given by the keeper, that he shall dismiss all State's poor from his charge as soon as possible. Of the wandering State's poor, as many as fifty come annually under the notice of the overseers, nearly all of whom could earn their own subsistence. The poor of this place have never been put up at auction to the lowest bidder. The contractor takes all who who shall come upon the town for aid. The State allowance passes into the town treasury. The State's poor have applied here for aid, and have demanded it, on the ground of their right to it, a provision having been made for them by the State; but no aid is given to them on this ground. They have proposed to the overseers to secure the town from all expense for them, on the condition of a payment to them of the allowance granted by the State. But very few, not more than eight or ten, of the wandering poor pass through this place. Of these, nearly all might earn their own subsistence. Should any additional State's poor come into the town, for whom assistance should be required, the contractor was to receive whatever the State might allow for them. Probably 40 of the wandering poor pass through this town; and, of these, "about all," if debarred from the use of ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. Lenox.—The poor of this town, as far as it is known to the overseers, have never been put up at auction. A part of them are aided in their own families, and a part of them are boarded in the families of others. This course is taken alike with State's and town's poor. For boarding the State's poor, the State allowance is always given in cases in which they may be so provided for. Frequently an increased expense is incurred for them by reason of sickness, &c. Of the travelling State's poor, as many as 50 pass annually; and "all, if set to work, might earn their living. We hurry them on to other towns as fast as we can." They claim the support of the town as a right, on the ground of the State allowance for them. The State's poor "talk of their rations, and ask if any are yet behind?" Pittsfield.—For twelve years past the poor of this place were contracted for by two individuals, each for a term of six years. Each of these individuals agreed, for a specified sum, to exonerate the town from all charge, both for State's and town's poor, during the term of his contract. The first contractor received from the town $1,050 per annum, he to receive in addition all that might be due from other towns for the charge of their poor, but nothing from the State on account of the State's poor. The second contractor received $1,100 per annum, all that was received from other towns for their poor, and half of the State's allowance for State's poor; the poor to be supported to the satisfaction of the overseers for the time being. Each of these contractors provided a house exclusively for the poor, where all were kept together, except those who could be placed with their friends for a smaller cost than would have been incurred for them in the house. In the first case, the town had the exclusive benefit of the State allowance. In the last, it was divided between the contractor and the town. It cannot be estimated what was the gain to either by this arrangement. In the year preceding these twelve years, the cost for the poor was $1,600. They were then boarded out by the overseers in private families. A farm was last year purchased by the town, to which the poor are now removed. About 100 of the wandering poor annually pass under the notice of the overseers; and, of these, three-fourths appear to be able to earn their own subsistence. Deerfield.—For the last ten years the poor of this place have been in the charge of one individual, who contracted to take the charge of them for that term; he to receive $450 per annum from the town, and, in addition, for the State's poor, all that the State should allow for them. He was also to receive from other towns whatever might be due from them for the charge of any of their poor. The term of this contract expired on the 1st of October last. The town is now looking anxiously for some plan for the future charge of the poor, which shall be at once the most humane and the most economical. The above contract was made in consequence of the offer of the contractor to take the poor for ten per cent. less than they had cost the town during the preceding ten years. The poor had formerly been boarded out in families by the overseers; but the contractor built a house for them, and determined to aid none except at the house he had provided. Several, therefore, who had been a town charge, were no longer aided by the town.

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

Worthington.—The practice here has been, and is, for the overseers of the poor personally to give such assistance to families which may be in want, as they shall think to be proper. When individuals who have not families must be provided for, they are placed in families by the overseers, to be boarded for the time during which they may require the charity of the town. The cost for the poor in this town has been, in 1827, $75; in 1828, $00; in 1829, $75; in 1830, $137; in 1831, $84. These sums have been voted to the overseers from year to year, and the expenses for the poor have been kept within them. Total cost for the poor for five years, $371.

Hadley.—Previous to the two last years, the overseers assisted personally those who had need of the aid of the town. When single individuals required assistance, they were boarded in families in which their service would conduce to their support. For the last two years the poor have been put up at auction; that those thus bidding them off, by availing themselves of their capacity to work, might take them for a smaller cost than that for which they had before been supported. Of the wandering State's poor, as many as a hundred are seen annually by the overseers, and of these, 8 out of 10, if kept from ardent spirits, and compelled to work, could earn their own subsistence. The average cost for the poor for the last five years, has been $706 03.

Amherst.—For two, within the last 10 years, the poor of this place were disposed of at auction to the lowest bidder. In the other of these years the overseers have boarded single persons in private families; have sometimes aided families at their homes; and have sometimes committed a certain number of families, and of single persons, to an individual, who agreed to provide a house for them, where they might live together, cook for themselves, and otherwise do what they could for each other. No distinction has been made in the provision for State and town's poor. This is the manner in which the poor are now provided for. The average cost for supporting the poor is estimated to be from 70 to 75 cents per week. The chairman of the overseers thinks that he sees a hundred of the wandering poor pass through this place in a year, and that three-fourths of them might earn their own subsistence. Children are instructed in the town school, and are generally bound out by nine years old.

UNITED STATES.

STATE OF NEW YORK.

[First printed at Albany, New York, 1834.]

REPORT of the Secretary of State, giving an Abstract of the REPORTS of the SUPERINTENDENTS of the POOR.

Made to the Legislature, February 19, 1834.

TO THE LEGISLATURE.

Albany, 8th February 1834.

IN obedience to provisions of sec. 79, title 2, chap. 20, part 1st, of the Revised Statutes, the Secretary of State has the honour to present "An Abstract of the Returns and Reports" of the superintendents of the poor of the several counties in the State.

The Tables marked (A.) (B.) (C.) and (D.) contain the required Abstract, and it will appear by a reference thereto, that the reports have been regularly received from the superintendents of all the organized counties in the State, fifty-five in number. The county of Chautauque has just completed its poor-house, and the report of the superintendents is in some respects defective, from the temporary confusion arising from the change of system.

It will be seen, by referring to Abstract (A.) that the whole number of paupers relieved or supported during the year ending at the date of the reports, was 35,777. Of these, 33,525 were county paupers, and 2,252 town paupers. The aggregate expense of relieving and supporting the whole number was $295,239.13. During the preceding year, the whole number supported in 51 counties, was 34,094, and the aggregate expense of their support was $267,767.80.

By Abstract (B.) it will appear that the sum of $4,856.83 has been paid for the transportation of paupers; to superintendents for their services, $11,313.96; to overseers of the poor, $10,932.56; to justices, $2,774.46; to the keepers and officers of the poor-houses, $21,247.64; to physicians, for attendance and medicine, $10,593.83; that the value of the labour of the paupers amounted to $31,217.20; the amount saved in consequence of the labour of the paupers, $23,670.15; and that the average expense of supporting each pauper, at the poor-house, was $32.21 per annum, or 61½ cents per week. During the preceding year the expense of supporting each pauper was $32.41½ per annum, or 62½ cents per week.

Abstract (C.) shows that there are attached to the poor-houses 5,776½ acres of land, and that the aggregate value of all the poor-house establishments in the State, amounts to $865,770.89; that the number of paupers received into the poor-houses during the year, was 10,494; that there were born in the poor-houses during the same period, 312; died, 1,138; bound out, 802; discharged, 6,833; and that 930 absconded. The number of females in the poor-houses, on the 1st December 1833, was 2,821, and of males, 3,106—total of both sexes, 5,927. Of the number relieved during the year, 4,525 were foreigners; 602 lunatics; 219 idiots; and 48 mutes.

The Table marked (D.) shows the number of children in the poor-houses, under 16 years of age, to be 1,982, of which number, 1,429 have been instructed an average period of nine months, under the direction of teachers at the poor-houses or at the district schools. In nine counties no instruction is reported; but there is reason to believe that the omission in some of these cases was accidental, and in almost all, the number of children is extremely small.

The following thirty-seven counties have abolished the distinction between town and county poor, viz.: Albany, Allegany, Broome, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauque, Clinton, Columbia, Delaware, Dutchess, Erie, Essex, Franklin, Genesee, Greene, Herkimer, Kings, Livingston, Madison, Montgomery, New-York, Niagara, Oneida, Ontario, Orange, Orleans, Otsego, Putnam, Saratoga, Seneca, Saint Lawrence, Sullivan, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Westchester, and Yates.

The following counties, eighteen in number, have not abolished the distinction between town and county poor, viz.: Chenango, Cortland, Jefferson, Lewis, Monroe, Onondaga, Oswego, Queens, Rensselaer, Richmond, Rockland, Schenectady, Schoharie, Steuben, Suffolk, Tioga, Tompkins, and Ulster.

All the counties in the State have erected poor-houses, with the exception of Cattaraugus, Queens, Rensselaer, Rockland, Steuben and Suffolk.

The practical operation of the poor-house system demonstrates satisfactorily that it has a decided advantage, on the score of economy, over every other existing mode of supporting indigent persons; and that the expense of the system, in proportion to the number of paupers supported, is regularly diminishing, as those who are engaged in its management become better acquainted with its details. In 1830, the annual expense of maintaining each pauper was \$37.03; in 1831, \$33.28; in 1832, \$32.41 $\frac{1}{2}$; and it is now reduced to \$32.21. The inducement to adopt the poor-house system is in each county in ratio of the number of persons to be permanently supported; for the expense of superintendence and management is not augmented in proportion to the increase of the number of paupers. Notwithstanding its superiority over the former plan, however, there are several counties which have not adopted it. Among these is the county of Rensselaer, which still continues to support its paupers at a house of industry, at the expense of \$1.25 per week each, in addition to the labour which they may perform. Until the last year the amount paid was \$1.50 per week. A very brief statement will serve to exhibit the loss which this county has sustained during the last three years, by omitting to establish a poor-house. During the year 1831 the expense of the paupers supported by the county was \$6,007.23, which sum, divided by the sum annually paid for each, would give an average of 75 paupers supported during the whole year. At \$1.50 per week, the expense of supporting each pauper would amount to \$78. The average expense, during the same period, of supporting a pauper at a county poor-house, was not more than \$33.28, making a loss to the county of Rensselaer, of \$44.72 for each pauper, or an aggregate of \$3,353, for the year 1831. A similar estimate for the year 1832, would make an aggregate loss to the county of \$3,737.86; and for 1833, after making allowance for the reduced cost of supporting a pauper, a loss of \$2,925.31. The county has, therefore, sustained an aggregate loss in three years of \$10,016.17, for want of a poor-house; a sum exceeding by more than fifty per cent. the average value of the poor-house establishments in all the counties in the State, excepting that of the city of New York.

It is very desirable, on the score of public convenience, that a uniform system of supporting the poor, should prevail throughout the State; and it is equally desirable on the score of economy. From the imperfect nature of the returns received from the counties in which the towns support their own poor, the whole annual expense is not often exhibited with certainty; and it is believed, that if the exact expenditure in every case could be shown, the counties would all adopt the poor-house system, and abolish the distinction between town and county poor. The county of Steuben is now engaged in making arrangements for that purpose.

Although the management of the poor-house establishments is not subject to such supervision as to bring all the details of their actual condition under the notice of the Legislature, enough is disclosed by the annual reports of the superintendents to afford just reason for believing that they are in general as well conducted under the direction of the county authorities, both as regards economy of expenditure and the comfort of the poor supported in them, as they could be under any other system of inspection. With respect to the aged and infirm, humanity dictates that every comfort should be provided for them. But with respect to those who are able to work, the system ought not, in justice to individuals or the public, to be so relaxed in its requirements, or so alluring on the score of its comforts, as to present a temptation to those to rely on it, who, with suitable exertions might provide for their own support by the labour of their own hands. If these establishments secure to the persons maintained in them, a more abundant or comfortable support than a labouring man can procure for himself and his family, the inevitable result is to offer to the indolent a premium, to be paid out of the earnings of the industrious. While, therefore, a humane and liberal regard is due to the wants and comforts of those who, from their youth, bodily infirmities, or the accumulation of years, are incapable of providing for their own support, the system should for all the others be one of unceasing employment. It should not, by holding out the prospect of greater comfort or less labour, present to any one an inducement, other than that of necessity, to exchange his independent industry for a dependence on a public establishment.

By a reference to the abstract marked (C.) it will appear that 602 lunatics have been relieved or supported during the year, embraced in the returns of the superintendents. The greater part are maintained at the county poor-houses, and it is well known that these establishments have no means of doing more than to provide for their security and mere personal comfort. It must frequently happen, therefore, from the want of necessary accommodations, that those, who require personal restraint, are so secured as to aggravate the mental disease under which they are labouring. Alienations of mind, which are but partial and which might with proper medical treatment be restored, frequently become incurable from the necessity of adopting, with a view to the personal security of the individuals affected by them, measures which are of themselves calculated to prolong the disease and render its eradication hopeless. So far as is known, no curative process is adopted at any of the poor-houses with regard to insane paupers, and it is hardly possible that it can be with much prospect of success. On the contrary, it is believed, that their condition is often of a nature the most unfavourable to their recovery. So far as it is in the power of the keepers and officers of the poor-houses to ameliorate it, the duty is doubtless faithfully performed; but their ability to accomplish the object is limited by extremely limited means. The evil is the fault of the system, and cannot be justly imputed to those who are charged with its execution.

Under every advantage of medical treatment, and with every convenience for promoting a restoration of the mind to a state of sanity; with all the mitigation which attention and sympathy can afford, the deprivation of reason is the greatest calamity which can befall our species. But it becomes infinitely more deplorable when all these alleviations are wanting, and when indigence and neglect conspire to aggravate the disease and render it perpetual. This consideration is not mitigated by the fact, that a great majority of the insane poor now reported, might, with proper medical treatment, have been restored to health and to the discharge of their social duties. It is believed, that a disclosure of their actual condition would lead to some effective measures for their relief.

It was recommended in the last annual report of the Secretary of State, that the failure on the part of the supervisors of towns in those counties in which all the poor are not a county charge, to make their annual reports, should be passed by without being reported for prosecution, as required by section 78, of the title of the Revised Statutes, providing "for the relief and support of indigent persons," inasmuch as the pamphlet edition of the Poor Laws had but recently been sent out for distribution. The delinquencies during the last year are fewer in number, excepting in reporting the number of tavern licenses and the amount of excise money in the several towns; but as the system has only been in operation for a short period, and as there is reason to believe that the delinquencies may be owing in some instances to a failure on the part of the proper officers to distribute the Poor Laws as directed, it is respectfully submitted to the Legislature, that the prosecutions to which the supervisors are liable should not be commenced at this time. This suggestion would not be made, if the Secretary of State were not confident that by taking proper measures at an early day, the reports of next year may be procured from all the persons who are required to make them, and that future punctuality may be secured.

John A. Dix, Secretary of State.

REMARKS of SUPERINTENDENTS, accompanying their ANNUAL REPORTS.

Chautauque.—Items included in the following average of expense of paupers at the poor-house, are the salaries of keeper and physician, provisions, groceries, clothing, &c. including all and only the expense at the poor-house. Our poor-house went into operation the first day of January last, and consequently the expense of transportation has been more than it will probably be hereafter, therefore, we have thought proper to make the average as below stated; and not having all the items necessary for making the second average, we have wholly omitted it; and we think the number of paupers have decreased about half, and the expense of maintaining the remainder reduced by the poor-house system, since our poor-house went into operation.

Columbia.—I am instructed by the superintendents to say, that they have undiminished confidence in the poor-house system. They are, however, at the same time of opinion, that the magistrate is not clothed with sufficient authority in relation to the drunken wretch that utterly neglects to provide for his family. He neither runs away, nor threatens to run away, but greedily devours the pittance procured by the industry of the wife or children, or furnished by the charity of neighbours. Larger expenditures for the support of persons out of the county poor-house of this description are made, than from any other. The magistrate should be clothed with authority to compel the father or mother, as the case may be, to contribute their labour to the support of their children, &c.

Cortland.—Annexed to this report is an abstract of the reports of the supervisors, received by the superintendents. The supervisors' reports are very imperfect, and not specific enough for us to arrive, with any degree of accuracy, at the correct sums expended in the different towns for the support or relief of the poor, nor for the various items of such expenses. The foregoing statement of the number of paupers and expenses, relates exclusively to the county paupers relieved and supported under our care as superintendents.

The distinction between town and county poor has not been abolished in this county, and this, together with the inaccuracies and imperfections in the reports of the supervisors, renders it very difficult for the superintendents to possess the information requisite to make a perfect and full report.

Erie.—The first item being the number of paupers relieved or supported during the year, includes those only that have been supported at the poor-house. We might ascertain and report the whole number relieved in the county during the year, but for the purpose of making or showing an expense of support by the year or week, it would be of little consequence or afford but little information. Our reasons are the following:—The city of Buffalo, which is in this county, being the termination of the Erie canal, and, therefore, a common receptacle for a large share of the poor and foreign population, it has been found expedient, and in the opinion of the overseers of the poor and superintendents, for the interest of the county, to afford partial relief to many families, which is continued only for a short time and which is sufficient only for part of their support. This is more particularly the case during the severity of winter, and when some one member of a family is sick and the others mostly able to take care of themselves. Sometimes it has been thought advisable to aid families or individuals on their journey when destitute, and wishing to join their friends where they have the means of obtaining a support, but if detained must unavoidably go to the poor-house. In addition to this, there are many persons in the city of Buffalo in the course of a year who do not require or receive aid from the overseers of the poor until after death, but are then dependent on public or private charity for interment. They, by some means, get provided for and taken care of until they die, and then their friends, being perhaps very poor themselves, are unwilling or unable to defray any further charges or procure the necessary articles for their burial. Under these circumstances, the overseers of the poor are applied to, and the funeral expenses become a public charge. This frequently happens when transient persons or parents die, and sometimes families are not able to bury their children. In many instances, therefore, and especially in this city, the only charge for a pauper is for his burial.

In reference to the actual value of the labour of the paupers and the amount saved in consequence of this labour, we would remark, that the paupers are almost entirely employed on the farm and in labouring in the garden and about the house providing firewood, &c. It is, therefore, difficult to ascertain with much certainty what their labour is worth, or how much is saved in consequence of what they do. The poor-house farm is a new one, and requires much labour to bring it into a state of good cultivation and make it productive. The paupers are kept at work as much as they are able in making such improvements as are necessary, and in cultivating the land for the purpose of raising produce. In this way, all the labour of the pauper, as well as all the produce of the farm, goes for the general support and benefit of the establishment, and lessens the average expense of support by the year or week, but it would be difficult to determine to what amount. We have no regular productive employment for paupers at the poor-house, and, indeed, most who stay for any length of time are enfeebled and debilitated subjects that cannot do much work if they would, and those that are able to work or would be if they could be kept a sufficient length of time, such as drunkards, vagrants and idle persons, committed to the poor-house as a punishment, are sure to abscond as soon as they are sufficiently recruited to take care of themselves, and renew their depredations upon the community.

Genesee.—The superintendents further report, that they are unable to ascertain the number of persons who have received temporary relief, as no account of that part was taken in settling with the different overseers of the poor in the county. The whole amount expended for temporary relief was $ 1,954.08, of which amount $ 387.45 was for services of overseers of the poor, $ 67.39 for services of justices of the peace, and $ 1,499.24 for necessities furnished for paupers who could not at the time be removed to the poor-house. This last sum includes physicians' bills and medicines.

The superintendents would further report, that it is very difficult to state with any accuracy the value of labour performed by paupers at the poor-house, or the amount saved by their labour, as those who are healthy are generally employed in taking care of those that are sick and infirm. There are but very few who are able to labour upon the farm at any time, or to do any business except about the house.

Kings.—Our official situation has enabled us to make some practical observations on the principal causes of pauperism. We have to state our belief, that about three-fourths of the adult paupers under our charge are habitual drunkards, and that three-fourths of the children are sent to the house in consequence of the intemperance of their parents.

We

We have had some difficulty with some of the overseers of the poor on the subject of their compensation. The law says they shall have one dollar a day for every day actually and necessarily employed, &c. Some of them say, this entitles them to one dollar, for signing an order for a person to be received into the poor-house, or for furnishing a pauper, on the order of a justice, with fifty cents, or more. We have not considered, heretofore, that they were entitled to a dollar for such service. We are also of opinion, that the intervention of a justice is in this county unnecessary.

Dr. A. C. Zabriskie, the physician of the poor-house, having furnished us with some remarks on the diseases and deaths that have occurred during the year, we thought it might be useful to append them. They are as follows:—

“ There have been 464 cases of disease subject to medical treatment between the 20th of April 1832, and the 10th April 1833. Of these, 34 have died. The deaths are of the following diseases :

Of those who died with cholera, four were brought in sick and two in a collapsed state. The number of deaths among the inmates of the house of this disease, four, is smaller than might have been expected, when we consider that there were at this time in the institution more than 100 individuals, nine out of ten of whom are brought there by intemperance; that the constitutions of such persons are already broken in many cases, so as to predispose them to diseases of the bowels; that it is the receptacle of the aged and infirm; and that in similar institutions in cities where the cholera has prevailed, the mortality has always been great. During the prevalence of this disease there were many cases of common cholera morbus, and almost all the paupers laboured more or less under the premonitory symptoms and the diarrhœa which prevailed so extensively through the country. At this time a number of infants who had lost their mothers, or whose parents were sick with cholera, were brought into the house. They were from the ages of three weeks to three months. These, from the change of diet, being deprived of the milk of their mothers, and from the epidemic influence of the season, when cholera was raging around them, were all immediately taken sick upon their arrival with disorders of the bowels; every exertion to save them proved in vain, they all died. An alteration was made in the diet of the house upon the first appearance of the disease, and every thing which could tend to provoke a disordered state of the bowels was immediately prohibited.

Monroe.—Enclosed we send, pursuant to statute and the directions received from your office, an annual report as superintendents of the poor of the county of Monroe. The very deficient and imperfect reports, in many cases, of the supervisors of the several towns, render it very difficult, and we may say impossible, for us to attain to that degree of correctness desirable. The present superintendents have but just entered upon the discharge of their duties, and have not yet acquired, by observation and practical experience, that information, statistical and otherwise, in relation to the poor and the operation of the poor laws which may enable us to communicate any thing of importance or use to your department. The great proportion of mendicity in this county is believed to exist among foreigners, generally emigrants, arising from intemperance, or in consequence of their arriving in this country without the means of support, and at those seasons when it is most difficult to obtain employment.

In most cases of persons seeking relief on account of disease, that disease has been found to have been superinduced by intemperance. The German emigrants are found to be much more temperate and less in want than any other foreigners.

So far as the superintendents are able to form an opinion, they are decidedly of the belief that agriculture can be prosecuted advantageously at the county poor-houses by pauper labour, and that while it contributes greatly towards defraying the necessary expenses of pauper support, it also has a tendency to lessen the number of paupers, for many, when compelled to labour at the poor-house, soon leave, and seek employment elsewhere on their own account.

The town reports, incorporated into our annual report, it will be perceived, come down only to the 23d of March last, and our report comes down to October only, that being the time of the annual report of the superintendents to the board of supervisors, and that being the time, too, to which the former reports of superintendents have reached.

Oneida.—The $5,539.05 includes temporary relief and the services of the overseers, as well as justices of the peace.

We have not been furnished from any source with the amount of excise money from any town, but the whole amount received is about $1,900.

Onondaga.—The superintendents would observe to the secretary that sections 76 and 77 (Title 1st of Poor Laws) have not been complied with, and consequently they have not been furnished with the necessary information to extend this report beyond what is required in relation to the poor-house establishment. The allowance made to superintendents, to wit, $213, is not included in the average of yearly or weekly expense of paupers.

Queens.—The poor in the different towns are farmed out to contractors, and of the particulars of the contracts the superintendents are ignorant. The poor under the charge of the superintendents are farmed out to a contractor, who is entitled to the labour of the paupers under his charge, and is also paid eighty-seven and a half cents per week for each and every person sent to his house. For the above sum and the benefit of the labour of the paupers, he boards, clothes and buries all who die at his house. The superintendents furnish beds, &c., a physician, and pay transportation bills.

Rensselaer.—The distinction between town and county paupers has not been abolished in said county, therefore the superintendents have, since the present law took effect, hired the county paupers boarded at the poor-house owned by several of the towns of said county. For the past year they have paid $1.25 per week for the board of each pauper, without distinction of age or condition, exclusive of clothing and medical aid, the institution receiving all the benefits arising from the labour of the paupers.

Richmond.—In making out the estimate of expenses, the superintendents have included the sums paid for manure, for farm-ditching, and making stone wall, which amounts to \$300, and is nearly one third of the whole expense. In estimating this sum as expenses for the year, the superintendents differed in opinion. Some were of opinion it should be added to the value of the farm, which would have reduced the expense of each pauper to 65 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per week, or \$21.62 a year.

Saratoga.—The superintendents remark, that this report refers exclusively to the poor supported in the poor-house. The accounts for temporary relief in the several towns, together with the accounts of overseers of poor, justices and physicians, not having been received, it is not in the power of the superintendents to state the number of indigent persons relieved temporarily, or the amount of expenses incurred; but from the accounts received and audited by the superintendents, they are led to believe that the whole of such expense, including services of overseers, justices and physicians, will not vary much from $1,000. We further observe, that having closed our year's accounts with the supervisors on the 11th day of November last, this our report includes one year from the 12th of November 1832 to the 11th of November 1833 inclusive.

Steuben.—I improve the first opportunity of forwarding to you the report of the superintendents of the poor of this county after receiving the reports of the supervisors.

The report is as perfect as my means would enable me to make it.

Our accounts are annually settled up to the 1st of March. It is then that contracts are made for the support and furnishing of county paupers, and they are contracted about the county among their friends, &c. &c. &c. It has, consequently, been impossible to give the exact sums and other items full and with certainty, but it is believed that they are not far from correct.

The board of supervisors of this county, at their sitting lately, resolved to purchase a farm, build a poor-house, and abolish all distinction between town and county poor.

Sullivan.—Enclosed is our annual report. About eight hundred dollars was paid for temporary relief, including one hundred and fifty paid to the town of Lumberland for debts due at the time. The distinction was abolished in 1830. Our permanent relief at the poor-house is also swelled beyond the usual sum in consequence of purchasing oxen, cows, stoves, kettles, &c., which is not added to the value of the farm.

Washington.—The law for the relief of indigent persons seems to contemplate the payment of all the costs of their support, both in and out of the poor-house, by orders drawn by the superintendents on the county treasury, and the secretary's exposition favours this construction of the law. In those counties where the poor-house and county treasury are situated near each other, no practical inconvenience will be found in following out the law. But our poor-house and county treasury are 12 miles apart, and a strict observance of the letter of the statute has been found, on trial, productive of so much inconvenience to those having small demands, and the occasion of so much additional expense to the county, that arrangements were made with our county treasurer, by which we drew the cash and paid it out ourselves at the poor-house. This plan was adopted near a year ago, and has given very general satisfaction to overseers, and indeed to all others presenting accounts for the audit of this board. And we may here remark, that the whole matter was presented to our board of supervisors, and by them was discussed and approved, although no formal order in relation to it was taken. The present practice, however, is so fully approved, that, by an understanding common to the board of supervisors, the county treasurer and this board, it is to be pursued the coming year.

On one ground it seems objectionable, and to that we would call your attention. Superintendents are by law regarded an auditing, but not a disbursing board, and hence are not required to give bail; so that on the plan pursued here, the treasurer runs the hazard of the superintendent's solvency and faithfulness. By an arrangement with our treasurer, we are to give him satisfactory security, and then to receive the whole amount of money raised in the county for the support of the poor. Now would it not be advisable to amend the statute so that superintendents (at least in counties situated like ours) shall be required to give security, upon which the treasurer shall pay into their hands the poor funds?

The increase in the expense of supporting the poor in this county for the year past, on the orders of justices, is alarming. Some overseers seem to feel that because they are elected for a town they are not required to protect any other interest than that of their townsmen, and that the treasury of the county is therefore fair game. This, together with a want of caution in some instances on the part of justices making orders for relief, accounts, at least in part, for the increase. In the way of remedy, it is our design to employ physicians by the year, and at fixed salaries, in those towns most frequently presenting accounts of the character complained of. We expect thus to save something, not only in charges for medical service, but the tendency of the measure we think will be to hasten paupers to the poor-house, instead of detaining them in the towns as at present.

LETTER from James Buchanan, Esq. to the Right Honourable Viscount Palmerston.His Britannic Majesty's Consulate, New York, 20 November 1833.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your Lordship's Letter of the 12th of August last, requiring me to procure and transmit with the least possible delay, a full Report of the legal proceedings which exist in the State of New York, for the support and maintenance of the poor; of the principles upon which such provision is founded; of the manner in which it is administered; of the amount and mode of raising the funds devoted to that purpose, and of the practical working and effect of the actual system upon the comfort, character and condition of the inhabitants.

In obedience thereto, I beg leave to reply in the order in which the Queries are set forth:

First, as to "the legal Provision which exists in the State of New York."

The Laws of the State require that the father, mother and children (who are of sufficient ability) of any poor person who is blind, old, lame, impotent or decrepit, so as to be unable to work to maintain him or herself, shall at their own charge maintain such poor person.

Upon failure of any such relative to relieve and maintain any such poor person, the overseer of the poor of the town to apply to the court of general sessions, and compel such relief.

When the father or mother, being a widow, or living separate from her husband, shall abscond from their children, leaving any of them chargeable upon the public for their support, or likely to become chargeable, the overseers of the poor may, under the warrant of two justices, seize any estate, real or personal, of the said father, mother or husband, to support those so abandoned.

Every poor person who is blind, lame, old, sick, impotent, decrepit, or in any other way disabled or enfeebled, so as to be unable to work, shall be maintained by the county or town in which he may be.

The Board of Supervisors of any county, in which a county poor-house is not already, may purchase 200 acres, and erect thereon suitable buildings; said purchase of lands and buildings not to exceed 7,000 dollars, or 1,550*l*.

Second, as to "the Principles upon which such Provision is founded."

When the supervisors of any county shall have determined to abolish the distinction between county poor and town poor, the Commissioners of Excise shall pay over to the treasurers of the county all monies received for licenses to tavern-keepers, retailers or grocers, and all penalties for violating the excise or other laws. Where the distinction between county and town poor has not been abolished, the Commissioners of Excise of the several towns shall pay over to the overseers of the poor in their respective towns, all monies received by them in virtue of their office.

The town poor (those who have obtained settlement by birth, apprenticeship or otherwise,) to be supported by a tax to be levied off the real and personal property within such town.

The county poor (such as have not obtained settlement in any town,) to be paid for by the treasurer of the county out of the general fund of the county, levied off the real and personal property in such county.

Assessors of property, real and personal, are annually chosen in each town, who also make their returns annually, and upon such returns the taxes are levied.

The parishes in England in some degree correspond with towns in this State. Towns refer to the lands or township; paupers in cities and villages are embraced under the class of town poor, unless rendered distinct by the Legislature, as is the case with New York, Hudson, Schenectady, Troy, and some other places in this State.

Third, "The Administration of the Funds for the maintenance and support of the Poor"

Is vested as follows:—The supervisors of all the towns within the county annually elect not less than three nor more than five freeholders of the respective counties, to be superintendents of the poor within such county, who hold their offices for one year, who shall be allowed such sums for their actual attendance, as the supervisors of the poor in the several towns shall deem reasonable. In this Board or Corporation is vested all matters relating to providing suitable places for keeping the poor; ordaining rules; employment of suitable persons to conduct such poor-houses or farms; and generally to judge and decide all matters in relation to the poor. But all rules and regulations, before becoming a law, or in force, to have the sanction of a majority of the judges of the county courts of such county in writing.

"The Annual Amount."

In the annual Report for expense of the poor for this State, made to the Legislature up to January 1832, the expenditure was 312,065 dollars 68 cents, or l., being an excess over the previous year of 178,874 dollars 33 cents, or l.; in the Report to 1st January 1833, for the year 1832, 383,560 dollars 80 cents, being an excess of 71,494 dollars 12 cents, sterling, l. over the former year.

“ Mode of raising the Funds.”

The tavern, grocers' and other licenses of each town, are especially set apart for the support of the poor of such town; the deficiency paid out of the funds of the town. Where the distinction between town and county poor has been abolished by the concurrence of the county, the licenses are then applicable to the general support of town and county poor, and the deficiency by a tax levied from the real and personal estate, which is annually valued, assessed and collected.

“ The practical working and effect of the actual system upon the comfort, character and condition of the Inhabitants.”

This embraces a wide field; and did I not fear to encumber this Report with matter which your Lordship might deem irrelevant, I should go at large into the subject, in the hope of rendering this Report more intelligible to those at a distance; but I am constrained to say the working is bad, and the effect bad, and so considered by every reflecting man conversant with the system, save the contractors and disbursers of the money, and by many of them equally condemned. Such a sweeping charge requires explanation, in which I shall be as brief as possible.

The primary causes are:—

First,—That the support is compulsory.

Second,—The dissolute, the idle and abandoned partake equally with the unfortunate, the destitute and the deserving.

Third,—The number of persons composing the administration in all its bearings, instead of the responsibility being limited to individuals at the head of each department.

Fourth,—The frequent change of the persons having the direct management of the poor, arising out of universal suffrage, annual elections and rotation in office.

After many years' reflection on the working of charitable institutions, I have been led to question whether the misapplication and abuse of benevolence or charity has not entailed on civilized society (where employment is to be had) greater evils than the abuse of power. Let this seemingly hazardous assertion be well scanned before condemned. I am upheld in my opinion by the facts in this State, where labour is dear and provision cheap, that for whatever class they provide, that class will increase; provide for bastardy, it will abound; provide great State workshops, food and raiment for criminals, and occupants will not be wanting. So with all charitable establishments and poor-houses. The sums levied by the corporation of this city on all strangers who arrive by sea, to guard the city against the expense of supporting such as become poor, with the liberal administration of other funds, entails great and growing evils on its population, and leads numbers from the interior of the State, and from adjoining States, to flock here, as the “ eagles to the carcass.” Sympathy is awakened; persons are not wanting to plead for a share of the funds, which are often applied to acquire personal popularity and political influence; while the numbers who divide the responsibility of distribution, prevents firmness of purpose, as exposing to the charge of hardness of heart, so that numbers who could have found employment in distant quarters come to this city, partake of the support afforded, herd with the lazy, the abandoned and vicious; lose all self-respect, and become the victims of crime. I do not fear, my Lord, to be charged with overdrawing this picture by those who take pains to investigate the subject.

No other city in any country has more ample accommodation, more splendid buildings, or abounds more in a generous disposition towards the poor. I should be unjust, did I not bear this testimony. In fact, their liberality is not meted out by country or creed, and hence thousands crowd this city to partake of the liberal provision made, and as liberally distributed, while it cannot be too often repeated: * All aid, save to the imbecile in body or mind, or on sudden and unforeseen calamities, (in a country like this, where all who will work are sure of employment, and where two days' wages is sufficient to buy necessaries for a week's sustenance) should be withheld.

With respect to poor children:—A system prevails in this city, though seemingly harsh and unfeeling, yet it has a very powerful influence to deter families from resorting to the Commissioners of the Poor for support, or an asylum in the establishment for the poor; namely, that the commissioners or overseers apprentice out the children, and disperse them to distant parts of the State; and on no account will inform the parents where they place their children.

Unquestionably this mode is one of unfeeling severity, where no discrimination is observed as to the character of the parents, but of mercy, where the parents are abandoned. A case occurred, where a poor English family, who had paid one dollar each to the corporation on landing, as commutation, (to guard the city against their becoming a charge on the poor-house,) which I beg to set forth. The husband, wife and five children not being able to obtain immediate employment, went to the almshouse on Friday. The husband left on Monday,

* I do not hazard too much when I venture to say, above 20,000 persons receive aid from pauper institutions in this city every winter, equal to $\frac{1}{10}$ th of the population.

Monday, and the wife two days after, and got employment before the end of the week (deterred by the dread of what took place.) They exerted themselves to remove their children, and applied for them, but found their eldest child had in the interim been bound an apprentice,—to whom or where the superintendent would not inform the afflicted parents. After various applications I was applied to in my official capacity, and not until after much negotiation did I obtain the restoration of the child. The system has been forced upon the superintendents, as persons who took children apprentices could not manage them while they were beset with, and subject to, the visits of their parents.

In further justification of the superintendent, it rarely occurs that the children of any but the abandoned, or orphans, have occasion to resort to the poor-house; as such is the demand for the labour of children above 10 years of age, that thousands can be yearly disposed of most eligibly, so as to render them independent of charity; and it is truly a humane act to send children out of the establishments in this State, where the vicious and abandoned are sent as associates with the poor and destitute. A workhouse and poorhouse have become synonymous terms; thus rendering the victims of crime and vice associates with those of misfortune and poverty, which has a truly demoralizing effect, and cannot be too strongly condemned.

In this State poverty and crime may very generally be called synonymous, for no man or woman need be poor unless dissolute, as there is throughout the country a cheerful, nay, an outrunning of charity towards suffering worth, or the victims of sudden calamity or unforeseen distress. Hospitals for the sick, provision for the widow and orphan, the imbecile in body and mind; for all such it is the bounden duty of every state and community to provide; but all systems which tend to generate crime, although the fruit of benevolence cannot be too strongly marked, yet few have firmness of purpose to act in accordance with such persuasion. Praying your Lordship to pardon, if in any instance I have departed from what has been required of me,

The Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston,

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE AND MAINE.

LETTER from J. Y. Sherwood, Esq. to John Backhouse, Esq.

British Consulate, New Hampshire and Maine,
Portland, 9th October 1833.

Sir,

IN compliance with the desire of his Lordship Viscount Palmerston (as per your circular dated 12th August last) requesting me to procure and transmit to your department, with the least possible delay, a full Report of the legal provision which exists in the State of New Hampshire for the support and maintenance of the Poor, &c. &c., I have the honour to enclose you herewith the same, together with a similar one for the State of Maine, which I hope will give satisfaction to his Lordship.

John Backhouse, Esq.
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.
(signed) Jos. Y. Sherwood, Acting Consul.

By the laws of the State of New Hampshire, every poor person standing in need of relief and not having relations in the ascending or descending of sufficient ability to support him or her, are maintained by the town in which he or she has a settlement. The laws prescribing the several modes by which a settlement may be acquired are not materially different from those now in force in England. Prior to the 1st of January, A. D. 1796, one year's residence without a warning to depart from the town, created a settlement. Those persons who have no settlement in any town in the State are relieved at the expense of the county in which the person may be at the time of the application for relief.

In case a person may be in any other town than the one in which he is chargeable, and may be in need of relief, the town in which he may happen to be is bound to provide the necessary relief, and in case of notice being given within 90 days by the town administering the relief to the town chargeable, the amount expended for the relief of such poor person may be recovered from the town where such poor person has his settlement. The law is founded upon sound policy, as well as upon principles of humanity and Christian benevolence. It prevents constant application at the dwellings of the more wealthy for alms, which would be a great interruption to the industrious and busy part of the community; it secures suitable and sufficient relief to all, prevents superabundance to any, and compels all the members of the community to contribute equally, according to their property.

The taxes for the support of the poor are assessed and collected in the same manner and at the same time as those for the support of schools, repairs of highways and other prudential and municipal purposes. The state and county taxes are assessed and collected at the same time.

In the assessment of taxes the polls of the inhabitants are valued at one dollar and 50 cents (equal to 6s. 9d. sterling) per poll, money at interest three-fourths of one per cent., and all other estate, real and personal, at one-half per cent. except household furniture, which is not taxable.

The taxes are assessed by assessors specially appointed by the several towns for the assessment assessment of taxes, and collected by a person or persons specially appointed for that purpose. Every town is authorized to elect not less than three nor more than nine discreet freeholders, inhabitants of the town, who shall have the care, disposition and oversight of the poor.

The amount of money raised for the support of the poor varies much in the same town in different years, it being dependant on the price of food and clothing, its prudent expenditure and other varying and accidental occurrences. In the old towns the expense is far greater than in those which have been recently settled. The cause of difference readily presents itself to every reflecting mind.

The population of the new towns is generally composed of young or middle-aged persons, who are active, industrious and pains-taking. Lazy, idle, infirm or inefficient persons never emigrate. The population of Portsmouth is about 8,000; it has for the last 10 years been nearly stationary. The annual sum during that time which has been raised for the support of the poor has been about 3,000 dollars. The expense of maintaining the poor in this town is, in proportion to its population, larger than in any other town in the State. Portsmouth has a workhouse, in which the poor for the last 60 years have been supported; it has this year purchased a farm, on which the poor are hereafter to be kept, as soon as suitable buildings can be erected. Several of the towns have farms or houses in which the poor reside.

In those towns where there are poor-houses or farms, they are well fed and clothed.

The food and clothes are of the cheapest kind and quality, but sufficient for their comfort. All are required to labour according to their capacity and ability.

The poor consist of persons who are superannuated and incapable of labour, of idiots and insane persons, of sick persons, of persons who have rendered themselves infirm by vicious and intemperate habits, orphan children, &c. &c.

The children, as soon as they are of suitable age, are bound out to service in respectable families.

The health and comfort of the poor is improved by the regular and proper food which is given them, and the system of discipline which is observed in the poor-houses.

It is generally deemed disreputable to apply to the town, and none of the natives, except those who stand in need of relief, ever do.

There is scarcely an application to individuals for money, clothes or victuals, except by travelling foreigners.

British Consulate, New Hampshire and Maine, Portland, 9th Oct. 1833.

(signed) Jos. Y. Sherwood,
Acting Consul.

The remarks made in the foregoing Report are equally applicable to the State of Maine as New Hampshire, excepting that there are no state or country paupers in Maine, and the mode by which settlements are gained in the former state; viz.

Married women follow and have their settlement with their husbands, if any they have, otherwise the settlement of the wife remains where it was prior to marriage.

Legitimate children follow the settlement of their father until they gain one for themselves.

Illegitimate children follow the settlement of their mother until they gain one for themselves.

Any person who shall at a legal meeting be admitted an inhabitant of any town, by vote of such town gains a settlement.

All persons dwelling in unincorporated places gain a settlement therein when the same becomes incorporated into a town.

Minors serving an apprenticeship in any town four years, and setting up trade therein, gain a settlement.

Five years' continued residence in any town gains a settlement, if no supplies have been furnished by the town during that period.

All settlements remain established as above mentioned, until new ones are gained agreeably to the provisions of an Act, entitled, "An Act ascertaining what shall constitute the legal Settlement, and providing for the relief and support, employment and removal of the Poor," passed 21 March 1821: vide Laws of the State of Maine, vol. 2, page 530.

The population of the city of Portland, in the State of Maine, is about 13,500; it has increased during the last 12 years about 6,000. The annual sum during that time which has been raised for the support of the poor has been on an average about 4,000 dollars.

The expense of maintaining the poor in this city is, in proportion to its population, larger than in any other town in the State.

Portland has a workhouse, hospital and other suitable buildings, in which the poor are supported, to which establishment there is attached a large farm and brick kilns, where those of the poor able to labour are kept employed. The actual expense to the city of Portland for the maintenance of the poor over and above the earnings, during the last year, was a trifle short of 3,000 dollars, or 675*l.* sterling.

Sir,

Foreign Office, February 13, 1834.

With reference to the letter from Lord Melbourne of the 10th of August last, I am directed by Lord Palmerston to transmit to you, for his Lordship's information, the copy of a Despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Mobile, enclosing a report upon the legal provision for the maintenance of the poor in the States of Alabama and the Floridas.

*J. Backhouse.*LETTER from James Baker, Esq. to John Bidwell, Esq.

British Consulate for the Floridas, &c.

Mobile, December 14th, 1833.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the circular Despatch of August 12th, from Mr. Backhouse, desiring me to transmit a full Report of the legal provision which exists in my consulate for the support and maintenance of the poor.

In reply, I beg leave to enclose an abridgment of all the provisions made by the Legislature of this State for the maintenance of the poor and orphans. In the Floridas similar regulations exist. Cases of pauperism requiring public relief are of rare occurrence in the slave-holding section of the United States. Slaves incapable of work are by law supported by their owners. Masters of vessels not being permitted to bring into the State of Alabama any persons who are likely to become chargeable on the public, of course the introduction of paupers from abroad is prevented, and thus those soliciting relief are confined merely to such aged white persons as may by accident become reduced to poverty, and have no near relations to assist them. No poor-house exists in this section of country, and I am informed by the late judge of the county court, that the expenditure for the poor from the funds of the county is confined to occasional small donations when they are needed.

I regret exceedingly that from the local position of my official residence, I am unable to answer more fully the inquiries contained in the circular Despatch on this subject. Our population in this new section of the United States is not yet sufficiently dense to test the effect and working of the laws provided for the relief of paupers. The high rate paid for labour always enables those who are capable to find work, and should they prefer applying to the county for relief, the overseers of the poor having the power to compel them to work for their support, the public is thereby relieved from any expense. The laws passed by the legislature of this State on the subject of the poor, which are enclosed, must therefore not be relied on, and should be considered only experimental, as the advantages proposed to be derived from them are not yet tested by time.

(signed) *James Baker, Consul.*ABRIDGMENT of the LAWS of the State of Alabama, on the subject of Paupers and Orphans.

IT shall be the duty of the justices of the county courts, in their respective counties, annually to appoint one or more overseers of the poor in each captain's district, to serve for the term of one year, or until another overseer shall be appointed; and the judge and commissioners may fill vacancies in the office of overseers of the poor as often as they may occur; and any person so appointed who shall refuse to serve as overseer of the poor, unless disqualified by age or infirmity, of which the justices shall judge, shall forfeit fifty dollars, to be recovered before the county court, with costs. No person holding office under the government shall be compelled to serve, so long as he holds the same. In case of the refusal or inability of any person to serve as overseers of the poor, it shall be lawful for any three justices, during the vacation of the county court, to appoint a new overseer for the remainder of the year, in room of the person unable or refusing to serve. Every overseer shall take an oath that he will discharge his duties faithfully and impartially.

It shall be the duty of the overseers of the poor, each in his respective district, to provide for the indigent, lame, blind and others not able to maintain themselves; and may also provide houses, nurses and physicians, in such cases as they shall think necessary; the expenses of which shall be provided for in the annual county levy. And it shall be lawful for the overseers of the poor to contract with any person for keeping, maintaining and employing any or all such persons, and take the benefit of their work, labour or service, towards their maintenance and support. If any poor person shall refuse to be lodged, kept, maintained and employed in such manner as the overseers shall direct, he or she shall be struck off from the overseer's list, and shall not be entitled to receive relief from the overseers during such refusal. The said overseers shall make fair entries in a book of the names of all the poor within their respective districts, with the time when each of them became chargeable, together with the amount of all charges, costs and expenses incurred under the direction of the said overseers; which books and accounts they shall be obliged to present twice a year for the inspection of the justices assembled in their county courts. And if the said justices shall approve the accounts of any such overseers, they shall issue a certificate to that effect, directing the county treasurer to pay the amount thereof to such person or persons to whom the same may be lawfully due.

Poor persons refused relief may apply to the county court, or during the recess to any two justices, who are authorized, if they think proper, to direct the overseer to receive him or her upon the list of the poor, which overseer is bound to yield obedience to the directions of the said court or justices.

The overseers shall take measures to prevent the poor from strolling from one district to another, and may make complaint before any justice that any poor person is come into their county, and is likely to become chargeable thereto; whereupon it shall be lawful for any such justice by warrant, to cause such poor person to be removed to the county where he or she was last settled: provided that such poor person hath not been resident for six months last past in the county from which it is proposed to remove him or her. But if such poor person be sick or disabled, and cannot be removed without danger of life, the overseer shall provide for his or her maintenance and cure, at the charge of his or her county, and after recovery shall cause him or her to be removed; and the county wherein he or she was legally settled shall repay all charges occasioned by the sickness, maintenance and cure of such poor person, and for removing him or her; and also all charges or expenses if such poor person shall die before removal; and it shall be the duty of the overseer of the district to which the person belongs, to receive and provide for the person or persons so removed; and in case of refusal, the said person or persons may apply to any two justices of the county for relief as hereinbefore directed. The overseer who shall have made the disbursement, being furnished with a certificate of the said expenditure by the justices of the county court of his proper county, shall apply to the justices of the county court to which the said poor person or persons shall belong; which said justices last mentioned are hereby directed to draw an order on the treasurer of their proper county for the reimbursement of the said expenses.

Where any dispute shall arise respecting the residence of any poor person, the court of any county adjacent, and not interested, is authorized to take cognizance thereof, and determine the same.

The overseers of the poor shall make returns to the county courts twice a year of the poor orphans in their districts, and of such children within the same whose parents they shall judge incapable of supporting them and bringing them up in honest ways. The said courts are hereby authorized to direct the said overseers, or either of them, to bind out such poor orphans and children apprentices to such person or persons whom the court shall appoint, until the age of 21 years if a male, or 16 years if a female. The person to whom such apprentice shall be bound shall engage, by a covenant to be entered in the indenture, to provide the apprentice with a sufficiency of good and wholesome provisions, necessary clothing, washing and lodging; to teach the said apprentice the business or occupation which he pursues for a livelihood, and also to read, write, and to cipher as far as the rule of three; and at the expiration of said apprenticeship to furnish the said apprentice with two complete new suits of clothing. It shall be lawful for the said court, upon the complaint of the overseers of the poor, or of any apprentice, by themselves or friends, against their masters or mistresses, to hear and determine; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, that such complaint be well founded, and of sufficient magnitude to make a removal necessary, the court shall have power to remove such apprentice, and bind him or her to such other person as they shall think proper.

The father and grandfather, mother and grandmother, and the descendants of any poor, old, blind, lame and impotent person, or other person not able to work, being of sufficient ability, shall at their own charge relieve and maintain every such poor person as the justices shall direct at their next county court, in their respective counties, or the corporation courts, in their respective towns, on pain of forfeiting eight dollars for each month they shall fail therein.

If any person commanding a ship, vessel or boat, shall import into this territory, or bring to the shores thereof, any infant, lunatic, maimed, aged, infirm person or vagrant, who may be adjudged likely to become chargeable to the territory, it shall be lawful for any justice of the county court, or for any magistrate of a corporation court, to compel such person commanding such vessel to give sufficient security to indemnify the inhabitants of this territory from any charge that may come or be brought upon them by such infant, lunatic, maimed, aged, infirm or vagrant person coming into or living within this territory, or otherwise to transport such person beyond the limits of this territory.

Whenever, on any criminal prosecution, it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, that there can be no reasonable expectation that the family of the prisoner will be brought up in honest courses, it shall be the duty of such court to certify the same to the overseers of the poor for the district in which such family may reside, provided the same be within the limits of the jurisdiction of such court; and the said overseers shall thereupon bind out the children of such person to honest, respectable and virtuous citizens, for the same periods of time, and under the same conditions for their instruction and maintenance as in other cases of orphans and poor children, and return the indentures to the next county court, and likewise certify to the said superior court their doings therein.

Poor persons are allowed writs, counsel, &c. free of charge.

The judge of the county court, together with the commissioners of roads and revenue in each each county, shall annually set apart such portion of the county tax as they shall deem necessary for the purpose of creating a fund for the support of paupers within such county; which fund shall be kept separate by the county treasurer; and no money shall be drawn or paid out of said fund except by order of said judge, for the support of the poor, and in that case it shall be paid to an overseer of the poor, to be by him applied to the purpose for which it is intended; and all overseers aforesaid are hereby required, at the end of the term for which they are appointed, to render an account to the said judge and commissioners of the manner in which he or they have disposed of the sum or sums of money by them received out of the poor fund the preceding year; and in case any overseer shall neglect or refuse to render such account to the judge and commissioners as hereby required, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of ten dollars for every such neglect or refusal, to be sued for by the county treasurer, for the use of the poor of each county.

Overseers are to return, in the month of August of each year, to the county court, a list of all paupers, which list shall contain the situation of the paupers, the amount of money necessary to support the same, together with such other circumstances as they may think proper, so as to enable such court to know correctly what sum it may be necessary to appropriate, in compliance with "An Act to set apart a separate Fund for the support of the Poor in each County," passed 1st January 1823.

If any overseer of the poor shall fail or refuse to make the report required by the foregoing section, without being able to render a satisfactory excuse for such failure, to be judged of by such court, either by personal appearance or by affidavit by the succeeding court, such overseer shall be liable to a fine of ten dollars, by sentence of such court.

LETTER from George Salkeld, Esq. to John Bidwell, Esq. Foreign Office.

Sir,

British Consulate, New Orleans, 20th Nov. 1833.

In reply to your circular of the 12th August, I have to inform you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that no provision by law exists in the State of Louisiana for the support and maintenance of the poor. The number of paupers in the city of New Orleans are few; the city council, who are composed of the aldermen of the different wards, have each a small sum placed at their disposal, which they distribute at their discretion.

In the country you seldom hear of paupers; the different police juries sometimes vote a trifling sum to be distributed to such as require aid. The high rate of wages renders poverty unusual, unless brought on by sickness, when the hospital is always ready to receive them.

UNITED STATES.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

My Lord,

British Consulate Office, Charleston, 20 January 1834.

IN answer to a circular from Mr. Under-secretary Backhouse, dated 12 August 1833, requiring information as to the system of Poor Laws in force within the district of my consulate, I have the honour herewith to transmit to your Lordship a Report on the legal provision which exists in the State of South Carolina for the support and maintenance of the poor, the principles upon which it is founded, and the practical working of the system.

I should have done myself the honour of reporting to your Lordship on this subject at a much earlier period, if I had not hoped on the annual meeting of the Legislature of this State to have been enabled to obtain a correct return of the monies expended in the relief of the poor during a certain number of years; but the poor-tax is so little felt in this country that the Legislature seldom gives itself any trouble on the subject, or calls for any report from the Commissioners.

The Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston,
&c. &c. &c.

I have &c.
(signed) W. Ogilby, Consul.

A REPORT upon the POOR LAWS of the State of South Carolina, the Principles upon which they are founded, and the Practical Working of the System. By His Majesty's Consul at Charleston.

TO report upon the legal provision which exists in the State of South Carolina for the support and maintenance of the poor, the principle upon which it is founded, and the practical working of the system, is, as may readily be supposed, no very difficult or laborious undertaking: for, in a country like this, where more than two-thirds of the labouring population are slaves, the property of the wealthy, scarcely can there be a necessity for any other legislative enactment for the support of the poor than that which compels the owners of slaves to supply them at all times with a sufficiency of food and clothing, even after they have become (whether from old age or bodily or mental infirmities) incapable of working, and therefore unprofitable property. Independent of this enactment, however, a provision is made by the laws of this State for the relief of the poor, the leading features of which I shall proceed to point out and offer a few comments upon; but, as regards the practical working of the system, I fear I shall not be able to furnish any very important or useful information, as my experience in this country leads me to believe, that in most cases where any superiority is to be found in the working of any of its civil institutions, it is to be attributed to accidental circumstances, or, in other words, to the newness of the country and the thinness of its population, more than to any superior excellence in either their structure or administration.

From 1712 to 1791, the oversight, ordering and relieving of the poor of each parish within the State was given in charge to the churchwardens and two overseers of the poor, appointed annually by the vestries of the several parishes on their first or second meeting after Easter; but in the latter year it was deemed advisable to alter this system, for what reasons I have not been able accurately to ascertain, and a law was passed by the General Assembly, authorizing the inhabitants of election districts, where county courts were not established, to elect, at the same times and places, and in the same manner as was usual for the election of members of the Legislature, five Commissioners of the Poor, whose duty it should be to attend to the oversight, ordering and relieving of the poor within their district; to have the children of the poor and poor orphan children educated, and to bind them out as apprentices; males until the age of 21, and females until they arrive at the age of 18, or are married.

The Commissioners of the Poor thus appointed are empowered to demand and receive all such gifts and legacies, fines and forfeitures, and any other monies or things whatsoever, as are given to the use of the poor; and in case the same shall not be sufficient for the relief of the poor and the education of their children, the Commissioners are further empowered to assess annually their respective districts with such sum or sums as shall be sufficient for these purposes. Such assessment to be made equally upon the estates, real and personal, of all and every the inhabitants, owners and occupiers of lands, tenements and hereditaments, or any personal estates within the district; and the public tax-collectors are required to collect this assessment or poor's-rate, and to pay it over into the hands of the officers in charge of the public treasury; the same powers and authority being given them for enforcing the payment thereof as are authorized by law for the collection of the public taxes. The Commissioners of the Poor are required to furnish the tax-collectors with an account of the poor-tax with which each inhabitant has been assessed, at least one month before the time appointed for making returns of the public tax; and the last-mentioned officers are bound to make a return of the poor-tax to the former in like manner as it is their duty to make returns of the public tax to the treasurers of the State; besides, the law requires that they shall furnish the Comptroller-general with a duplicate of said return, to enable him to ascertain and make known to the Legislature the gross amount of the poor-tax raised within the State.

The law above referred to was, in 1793, also made to extend to counties where county courts were established, and from that period up to the present time has continued to be acted on in all counties throughout the State. Of this law, and of the others which preceded it, not being voluminous, I shall annex a copy to this Report, in order that the changes which the Legislature deemed it expedient to make in the system may be clearly seen and understood. At the same time I must express my surprise that of late years there should have been no new legislation on this subject, considering that the system now in force has, for a length of time, been very generally condemned by the thinking part of the community, and regarded as oppressive and evil in its tendency, because it actually holds out inducements to idleness and opens a door to imposition; indeed, the prevailing opinion in this country seems to be, that "every system of laws for the good government or support of the poor which has not for its basis the encouragement of industry, by finding the poor employment, must fall short of its object and be productive of evil."

It will be seen, on reference to the Appendix, that the 37th section of the law of 1812 makes it the duty of the tax-collectors throughout the State to make a duplicate return to the Comptroller-general of the amount of poor-tax collected by them and paid to the Commissioners of the Poor in their respective districts; and it is also considered the duty of the Commissioners to make an annual report to the Executive of the State on the condition of the poor in their several districts and on the provision that has been made for them; yet, strange to say, such is the careless and negligent manner in which business is conducted in most public offices in this country, that I have found it impossible to procure an accurate return for any single year of the total amount of poor-tax collected within the State. From the Comptroller-general's office I received as correct a statement as it was in the power of the head of that department to furnish on this subject, and, according to it, the average amount of poor-tax annually levied on the inhabitants of the State, for several years back, is 30,000 dollars currency, or 6,250 l. sterling, which is equal to about 10 per cent. on the general taxes paid in the same years. In the foregoing calculation the expenses of the poor of this city are not included, as the system in operation within the limits of Charleston for the relief of the poor differs entirely from that which exists in all other parts of the State, and, in my opinion, is very preferable to it, and much more worthy of notice, as, in providing for the necessities of the indigent, it does not encourage or even admit of idleness, which in this country, as in all others, may almost invariably be traced out as the parent of crime, nor does it enable the pauper to enjoy the same degree of personal liberty or portion of the comforts of life as the independent labourer; a rule that all communities, not wishing to promote or encourage pauperism, ought to adopt and act on.

The necessities of the poorer class of the free white population of Charleston are relieved by means of a poor-house, which is supported at the expense of the citizens generally, an annual assessment being made by a Board of Commissioners, the same as in all other districts; and in consideration of the number of poor persons having a temporary residence in the city and flocking to it from other districts, the State contributes 4,500 dollars annually towards defraying the expense of this institution. All poor persons, strangers as well as citizens, may gain admission on application to one of the Commissioners, but as the inmates receive nothing else than board and lodging, and are obliged, if in health, to work for a certain number of hours every day, and furthermore, are compelled to conform to the strict discipline of the institution, and not leave the premises or go beyond its bounds without permission, the applications for admission are by no means so numerous as might be expected in a city of so large a population as Charleston.

The number of inmates averages no more than 116 during the last five years.

Rations are allowed to out-door poor where any peculiar circumstances do not admit of their becoming inmates of the poor-house. The number of persons receiving relief in this manner averaged 166 during the last five years; and the average number of rations allowed was 96, at a cost of about 12 dollars per annum for each ration. No money is ever given; but in a few instances clothing and firewood is furnished to the most needy. The annual expenses of this institution during the last five years have been as follows:

In addition to the before-mentioned institution, the city of Charleston supports an orphan asylum, at an average expense of about 12,000 dollars, or 2,500 l. sterling per annum.

There are also in Charleston several societies, such as the St. George's, the Hibernian and the St. Andrew's, that were founded for the charitable purpose of affording relief to widows widows and orphans; but their charities cannot be included in a statement of the provision made by law for the support and maintenance of the poor.

South Carolina.

The Poor Laws of South Carolina are conceived to be founded solely on a principle of benevolence and policy, and not on any acknowledgement of a right in the poor and indigent to support from the other members of society.

It is the opinion, however, of many intelligent persons in this community, that even though the laws do not recognise this right, yet that any fixed provision made by law for the relief of the poor is always likely to be more productive of evil than of good, as it leads many to depend rather on what they consider to be their authorized claim to relief than on their own economy and industry. In a young country such as this, where population is thin and labour in good demand, it must always be an easy matter to obtain the means of support, and it might naturally be supposed that a greater degree of shame would be attached to pauperism than in communities where, with the best inclination to labour, individuals may not always be able to find employment. Yet I do not think that this State or any other in this Confederacy can be quoted as an exception to what experience seems to have shown in all other countries, namely, that "all systems for the permanent relief of the poor, by fixed rates, rather tend to multiply than diminish the number of the poor," and are sure to become in time insupportable evils where they do not require a greater quantity of labour from the pauper, in return for the expenses of his subsistence, than will yield to the independent labourer a similar support.

APPENDIX to Mr. Consul Ogilby's Report.

LAWS of the State of South Carolina, providing for the Support and Maintenance of the Poor.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1712.

WHEREAS the necessity, number and continual increase of the poor, not only in Charleston, but in other parts of this province, is become very great and burthensome, being occasioned by reason of some defects in the law concerning the settling the poor, and the want of a due provision for their relief and employment; for remedy whereof, and for the preventing of the perishing of any of the poor, whether young or old, for want of such supplies as are necessary, Be it enacted, That the vestries of the several parishes shall have power, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, at any time within two months after the ratification of this Act, to nominate two or more sober, discreet and substantial persons to be overseers of the poor for that parish, who shall continue in the said office until Easter come twelvemonths, which will be in the year of our Lord 1714, and on the first or second meeting of the vestry yearly, the vestries of the several parishes in this province shall nominate two or more persons to be overseers of the poor of that parish, who shall continue in the said office until the Easter following, or until the vestry of the parish can meet and choose other overseers of the poor to succeed them; and in case of the death or removal out of the parish of any of the overseers of the poor, the vestry of the parish shall have power to nominate a fit person to supply the place of the person so dead or removed.

The vestries of the several parishes empowered to nominate yearly overseers of the poor.

The overseers of the poor so nominated and appointed as aforesaid, together with the churchwardens of the parish, shall have the oversight, ordering and relieving of the poor of the parish, and shall have power to demand and receive all such gifts and legacies, and all such fines and forfeitures, and any other money or things whatsoever, as are given to the use of the poor, and in case of refusal to deliver or pay the same, to commence and prosecute any lawful suit or action for the recovery thereof.

The overseers and churchwardens to have the ordering and relieving of the poor.

The poor of each parish shall be relieved out of all such money, goods or things, and out of such fines, mulcts or forfeitures, as shall be given to the use of the poor; and in case the same shall not be sufficient for the relief of the poor, that once in the year, at any time within two months after Easter, it shall be lawful for the respective vestry of each parish to order three sober and discreet persons to assess such sum as shall be necessary to reimburse the churchwardens and overseers the money they have expended the preceding years for the relief of the poor, and also 20 l. over, to remain as a fund in the hands of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, for the relief of the poor for the ensuing year, the said assessment to be made equally upon the estates, real and personal, of all and every the inhabitants, owners and occupiers of lands, tenements and hereditaments, or any personal estate, within the several parishes; which assessment being returned to the said vestry upon oath, who are hereby required to administer an oath accordingly, and being by them approved in open vestry, it shall then be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, by a warrant under his hand and seal, directed to any of the constables of the several parishes, to levy the sum assessed upon each person, by distress and sale of such person's goods, as shall refuse the same, returning the overplus, after reasonable charges deducted, and for want of such sufficient distress, to commit the person to prison till payment be made; and the several constables of this province are hereby required to execute such warrant, under the penalty of the forfeiture of 10 l. for every neglect.

The poor to be relieved out of such money and fines as shall be given to the use of the poor; which if not sufficient, once a year to reimburse the churchwardens by an assessment.

Churchwardens and overseers to account.

Protection given to persons prosecuted for executing this Act.

And for preventing any poor persons coming from the parish where they are inhabitants or settled, to be chargeable to any other, and to prevent all disputes concerning what shall be accounted a lawful settling; Be it enacted, That any person that hath been quietly and peaceably resident or settled in any parish, as a native householder, sojourner, apprentice or servant, for the space of three months, shall be esteemed settlers or inhabitants in the said parish; provided, that such abiding and residing is not private, as sometimes in one house and sometimes in another, nor by reason of sickness, lameness or the like, nor being hired for a particular work for a time only, the home or residing of such person being in another parish.

In case any person shall remove from one parish to another, that it is feared may be chargeable to the parish, that upon complaint made to any of the justices of the peace by the churchwardens or overseers of the parish, at any time within three months, that such person is like to be chargeable to the parish, any one justice of the peace resident in that parish where such person comes to inhabit, and in case there be no justice of the peace in that parish, then any justice of the peace of that county, may by warrant remove and convey him to the parish where he was last legally settled, as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice or servant, for three months at least, unless he give security for the discharge of the parish, to be allowed by the said justice; and if such person shall refuse to go, or shall not remain in the place where he ought to be settled, but shall of his own accord come back to the place from which he was removed, such person so offending shall be punished as a vagabond may be punished by any of the laws and statutes of England; and if any churchwarden or overseer of the poor refuse to receive such person so to be removed, and provide for him as an inhabitant, any justice of the peace may bind them to the assizes or sessions, to be indicted for their contempt.

And for the prevention of any parish being unnecessarily charged with the providing for poor persons, be it enacted, That in case any person shall be so poor as to become chargeable to the parish, which person hath a father, or a grandfather, or mother, or grandmother, or child, or grandchild, that they or any of them are of sufficient ability to relieve such poor persons, that in such case it shall be lawful for the vestry of the parish, upon complaint made by the overseers of the poor, to order some one or more, or all of such relations, to allow the poor person so much by the week as they shall think fitting; and in case of refusal to pay the same, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, by his warrant under his hand and seal, directed to any of the constables, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods of such person or persons refusing to pay, and for want of sufficient distress may commit the offender to prison till payment be made; and the several constables or any of them are required and commanded to execute all such warrants, under the same penalties for their neglect as is before by this Act prescribed for a constable neglecting or refusing to execute the justice's warrant for the general levy for the poor.

For the better execution of this Act, the churchwardens and the overseers of the poor of the several parishes shall meet monthly, at the church or some other convenient place, on the Sunday, after Divine service is over, there to consider and advise together of matters belonging to their office, and to use their utmost diligence in the execution thereof, on the penalty of 20 s. for every neglect, without such reasonable cause as shall be approved of by the vestry for an excuse.

And there shall be kept in every parish, at the parish charge, a book or books, wherein the names of persons receiving collections shall be registered, with the time they were first admitted to have relief, and the occasion of their necessity, which book shall be laid before the vestry when required; and yearly, in Easter week, or oftener, the parishioners shall meet and have such books produced before them, and the persons receiving collections, if required by any of the parishioners, shall be called, and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list to be made and entered of such as they shall think fit to allow to receive collections.

The churchwardens and the overseers of the poor, once in a year, and oftener if required, shall account before the vestry; and in case any action or suit shall be brought and commenced by and in the name of the vestry against the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, for any monies mispent by them, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms of the parish where the defendants are inhabitants, shall be taken and admitted. All the fines and forfeitures mentioned in this Act that do not exceed the sum of 40 s. shall be recovered, adjudged, levied and distrained by any one justice of the peace in this province, as in the Act for the trial of small and mean causes is directed; and the same being so recovered, shall be paid to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish where the person inhabits against whom the forfeiture is recovered, to be disposed of towards the defraying the charges of the poor of the said parish; and all fines and forfeitures mentioned in this Act exceeding the sum of 40 s., the two-thirds of such fines and forfeitures shall be paid into the hands of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish where the person inhabits against whom the forfeiture is recovered, to be disposed of towards the charge of the poor of the said parish, and the other third to him or them that will sue for the same, by action of debt, suit, bill, plaint or information, in any court of record in this province, wherein no essoin, protection, privilege, injunction or wager of law, or stay of prosecution by non vult ulterius prosecui, or otherwise, shall be admitted or allowed.

If any action, plaint, suit or information shall be commenced and prosecuted against any person or persons, for what he or they shall do in pursuance or execution of this Act, which person or persons so sued may plead the general issue, not guilty, and upon issue joined, give this Act and the special matter in evidence, and if the plaintiff or prosecutor shall become non-suit or suffer discontinuance, or if a verdict pass against him, the defendant or defendants shall recover his or their treble costs, for which they shall have the like remedy as in any case where costs by law are given to the defendant.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1713.

AND whereas, by the above recited Act for the relief of the poor, it is enacted, That it shall be lawful for the vestry of each parish to order three sober and discreet persons to make the above-mentioned assessment, but no penalty by the said Act is laid upon the persons that refuse or neglect to obey such orders of the vestry; Be it therefore enacted, That any person so ordered by the vestry to make such assessment as aforesaid, who shall refuse or neglect to give obedience to such orders, and to perform the same, shall forfeit the sum of 10 l. current money of this province, to be recovered and disposed of as the fines and forfeitures in the said recited Act for the relief of the poor by the said Act are ordered to be recovered and disposed.

ACT

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A. D. 1722.

THE churchwardens and any five of the vestrymen of each parish within this province shall and are hereby fully empowered to rate and assess all the taxable inhabitants of each parish respectively, (towards the maintenance of all and every the poor within the same parish who have resided in any such parish by the space of twelve months then last past,) and that rateably and proportionably according to the general tax or assessment for the year precedent, and shall levy the same by warrant of distress, under the hands and seals of the two churchwardens and five of the said vestry, against the goods of the said person refusing to pay the same, and shall make sale thereof, returning the overplus, after deducting thereout reasonable charges for the levying the money so assessed.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A. D. 1736-7.

WHEREAS by an Act of the General Assembly of this province, passed on the 23d day of June 1722, intituled, "An Act for advancing the Salaries of the Clergy," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that the churchwardens and any five of the vestrymen of each parish within this province shall, and they are hereby fully empowered to rate and assess all the taxable inhabitants of each parish respectively toward the maintenance of all and every the poor within the same parish who have resided in any such parish for the space of 12 months then last past, and that rateably and proportionably to the general tax or assessment for the year precedent, and shall levy the same by warrant of distress, under the hands and seals of the two churchwardens and five of the said vestrymen, against the goods of the said person refusing to pay the same, and shall make sale thereof, returning the overplus, after deducting thereout reasonable charges for the levying the monies so assessed as in and by the said Act, relation being thereunto had, more fully appears: And whereas upon the general words of the said recited Act, it has been conceived by some that the rate and assessment by the said Act directed to be made for and towards maintaining of the poor of the several and respective parishes in this province ought, in proportion to the general tax, to be rated and assessed upon the inhabitants, as well for the estates, real and personal, lying and being within the respective parishes, for the maintenance of whose poor the said rates and assessments are respectively made, as for such their estates as are lying and being in other parts of this province without the limits of the same parish:

Now for the prevention of all doubts, questions and disputes for the future concerning the manner of making such rates and assessments for the maintenance of the poor of the several and respective parishes in this province; Be it enacted, That the churchwardens and any five vestrymen, who by the hereinbefore recited Act are authorized and empowered to rate and assess the inhabitants of each respective parish in this province towards the maintenance of the poor of the same parish, shall in all rates and assessments hereafter to be made in pursuance of the said recited Act only rate and assess the said inhabitants in proportion to the general tax paid or to be paid in the preceding year for such part of their estates, real and personal, as shall or may be situate, lying or being in the parish for the maintenance of whose poor such rate and assessment shall be made.

Provided, That all and singular the estates, real and personal, of every person and persons whatsoever, which shall or may be rated and assessed in the general tax shall be also rated and assessed by the churchwardens and any five of the vestrymen in each respective parish where such estate, real or personal, shall be situate, lying or being, for and towards the relief and maintenance of the poor of every such parish respectively, and the sums which shall be so rated and assessed for and towards the relief and maintenance of the poor of each respective parish shall be levied and recovered from the owners, possessors or occupiers of such estates, real or personal, or from their attornies, agents, managers or trustees, in the like manner and form as is directed by the before recited Act, any former law, statute, custom or usage to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A. D. 1738.

AND when it shall happen any passenger so brought within this province from any other country or colony by any ship or vessel be impotent, lame or otherwise infirm, or likely to be a charge to the parish, if such person shall refuse to give security, or cannot procure sufficient surety or sureties to become bound for his saving the town or parish from such charge, in such case the master of the ship or vessel in which such person came shall be and is hereby obliged and required to carry or send him or her out of this province again within the space of three months next after their arrival, or otherwise to give security to indemnify and keep the town or parish free from all charge for the relief and support of such impotent, lame or infirm person, unless such person was before an inhabitant of this province, or that such impotence, lameness or other infirmity befel or happened to him or her during the passage, and in such case, if they be servants, their masters shall provide for them, and others shall be relieved at the charge of the parish.

And the said public treasurer of this province is hereby required to inform and notify all masters of ships and other vessels coming to him to enter of the import of this Act, and what is hereby enjoined and required of them; and the said public treasurer shall forthwith transmit all lists or certificates of passengers to the governor or commander-in-chief for the time being, and in his absence to the first of His Majesty's council, or commanding officer then in town.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A. D. 1757.

AND whereas the penalties inflicted by the said recited Acts on the churchwardens and overseers of the poor are so small that the persons appointed would rather pay the same than undertake the service; Be it therefore enacted, That any person chosen and appointed to be churchwarden or overseer of the poor in any parish of this province who shall refuse to serve in either of the said offices, instead of the penalties inflicted by any former Act, shall forfeit the sum of 10 l. proclamation money, two-thirds of which forfeiture shall be paid into the hands of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish where the offence shall be committed, to be disposed of towards the relief of the poor, and the other third to him or them who will inform and sue for the same, by action of debt, bill, plaint or information, in any court of record in this province, wherein no essoign, privilege, protection, or wager in law shall be allowed or admitted, nor any more than one imparlance.

Provided, that no person shall be obliged to pay the said forfeiture, or be liable to serve in either of the said offices oftener than once in seven years, any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

UNITED STATES.

*South Carolina.*To gain a settlement by 12 months' residence.

AND whereas, by the laws now in force, a person that hath been resident in any parish in this province for three months is to be held and esteemed a settler or inhabitant in the said parish, and entitled to all the benefits of the parish poor of the said province, which time of settlement is not only contrary to the laws of England in such cases, but greatly inconvenient to the inhabitants of the several parishes in this province, and ought to be enlarged; Be it therefore enacted, That from and immediately after the passing of this Act, no person shall be esteemed or held in law to be a settler or inhabitant of any parish in this province, so as to be entitled to the benefits provided by law for parish poor, until such person hath been resident in such parish for 12 months, as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice or servant, according to the proviso and true intent and meaning of the Act for the better relief of the poor of this province, any law, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1789.

Justices of county courts to have the same powers as to the poor as vestries and churchwardens of parishes.

BE it enacted, That from and immediately after the passing of this Act, the justices of the county courts shall be vested with all the powers and authorities within their respective counties that have been heretofore exercised by the vestries and churchwardens of parishes, so far as the same relate to the providing for the poor of the said respective counties, and to the binding out poor orphan children, any law, usage or custom to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1791.

Commissioners of the poor to be elected in the several election districts.

How to be chosen.

Their powers and

WHEREAS it will conduce much to the convenience of the inhabitants, where county courts are not established, to have commissioners of the poor; Be it therefore enacted, That the respective managers of the election for members of the Legislature in the said election districts shall and they are hereby authorized and required to open a poll for the election of commissioners of the poor, not exceeding five, the first election to be held on the first Monday in April next, and at all times thereafter at the same times and places, and in the same manner as are usual for the election of members of the Legislature; and that all persons who have a right to vote for members of the Legislature shall be entitled and have a like right to vote for the said commissioners.

And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners of the poor, elected as aforesaid, shall have the oversight, ordering and relieving of the poor in the said elective districts respectively, and shall have power to demand and receive all such gifts and legacies, and all such fines and forfeitures, and any other monies or things whatsoever as are given to the use of the poor; and in case of refusal to deliver or pay the same, to commence and prosecute any lawful suit or action for the recovery thereof.

Poor to be relieved and educated.

And be it further enacted, That the poor of the elective districts respectively shall be relieved and educated out of all such money, goods or things, and out of such fines, mulcts and forfeitures, as shall be given to the use of the poor; and in case the same shall not be sufficient for the relief of the poor, and the education of their children, and of poor orphan children, that once in every year, at any time within two months after the first day of January annually, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners in the election districts respectively to assess such sum or sums as shall be sufficient for that purpose; the said assessments to be made equally upon the estates, real and personal, of all and every the inhabitants, owners and occupiers of lands, tenements and hereditaments, or any personal estates within the several districts; and in case any person or persons shall refuse or neglect to pay the sum or sums which they may be assessed, it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, or a majority of them respectively, to issue their warrant of distress against such defaulter, which shall be levied by any of the constables in the said respective districts in the same manner, and sales shall be made on the same terms as in cases of distress or sales for public taxes.

The Commissioners of the poor authorized to levy a tax.How the tax shall be levied.Commissioners of the poor empowered to bind poor children as apprentices.Penalty for refusing to serve as commissioners.No man bound to serve more than two years in six.

And be it further enacted, That in case any poor children shall be chargeable to the respective districts, it shall and may be lawful for the commissioners of such district to bind any such child or children out to be an apprentice, until every male child shall arrive to the age of 21 years, and every female until she shall arrive unto the age of 18 years or be married.

And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners, when elected as aforesaid, shall be obliged to serve, under the penalty of forfeiting 5*l.* for each person, elected as aforesaid, refusing or declining to serve; provided nevertheless, that no person shall be obliged to serve more than two years in six; and they shall continue to exercise the duties, powers and authorities which they are hereby vested with, for and during the term of two years, to commence from the time of their respective elections, except as to the first election to be made by virtue of this Act.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1793.

Commissioners of the poor to be elected in each of the counties where county courts are held.

WHEREAS it is found necessary that commissioners of the poor be elected in those counties where county courts are established; Be it therefore enacted, That five commissioners of the poor in each of the counties where county courts are established shall be elected at the same times and places, and in the same manner and form, and the elections shall be conducted by the same persons as are named for that purpose in the Act, intituled, "An Act authorizing the inhabitants of the election districts, where county courts are not established, to choose Commissioners of the Poor," and that the commissioners so to be elected shall have all the authority, powers and privileges which are vested in, and be liable to all the pains and penalties which are imposed upon the commissioners of the poor by that Act, to the end that the said Act shall be in full force and complete operation in all the counties in this State where county courts are established.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1796.

Commissioners of the poor, their duty relative to the collection of poor-rates imposed prior to their appointment.

WHEREAS doubts have arisen whether the commissioners of the poor have power to assess and collect taxes, to discharge demands due for the support of the poor, previously to their being appointed; Be it therefore enacted, That the commissioners of the poor appointed, or to be appointed, shall be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to assess and collect taxes for the purpose of discharging all debts and demands incurred or due for the support of the poor of their respective parishes or counties, previously to their appointment, in the same manner as they are to assess and collect taxes for the payment of the like debts and demands incurred and due after their appointment.

ACT

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1797.

BE it enacted, That the tax-collectors in all counties where county courts are established shall be and they are hereby authorized and required to collect from the inhabitants of their respective counties all such rates and assessments as have been or may be hereafter laid, rated or assessed for the use of the poor; and they shall be entitled to receive as a compensation for their services the same per centage as they are allowed for collecting the public taxes; and shall have the same powers and authority to enforce the payment thereof, and have a right for that purpose to use the same compulsory means and process as are authorized by law for collecting the public taxes; and they shall collect and pay such poor-tax to the proper officers who are to receive the same, at or before the time now appointed or hereafter to be appointed by law for paying the general tax into the public treasury, and in case of any default, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are provided by law for any similar default in collecting and paying the general tax.

Provided always, That the said tax-collectors shall be furnished with an account of the poor-tax which each inhabitant is liable to pay to him, at least one month before the time appointed for making returns of the public tax.

And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the tax-collectors, in such parts of this State where county courts are not established, may be willing to undertake the same duty as is prescribed in the foregoing clause, they and each of them shall have the same powers and authority, and commissions, and be liable, in case of any default, to the same pains and penalties as are provided in the preceding clause.

ACT OF ASSEMBLY, A.D. 1812.

AND be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the tax-collectors of this State to make, on first Monday in August next, to the commissioners of the poor in the parish or district in which any poor-tax shall be by the said tax-collectors respectively collected, a return of such poor-tax in like manner as they make returns of the public tax to the treasurers of this State.

And it shall also be the duty of the said tax-collectors to make a duplicate return to the Comptroller-general of the amount of the tax so collected and paid to the commissioners.

STATE OF GEORGIA.

My Lord,

British Consulate, Savannah, 26 December 1833.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Backhouse's circular letter, dated the 12th August last, requesting me to furnish a Report upon the "Poor Laws" in this Consulate, and I have to state, in reply, that there is no legal provision in the State of Georgia for the support of the poor.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.

My dear Sir,

Washington, 3 February 1834.

I HAVE been directed by my Government to procure information respecting the legal provision which exists in the United States for the support and maintenance of the poor, of the principles upon which such provision is founded, of the manner in which it is administered, of the amount and mode of raising the funds devoted to this purpose, and of the practical working and effects of the actual system upon the comfort, character and condition of the inhabitants.

I have also received instructions from my Government to furnish a statement, for a Committee of the House of Commons, of the present laws of the United States as to the registration of births, marriages, deaths, baptisms and burials, with copies of the forms prescribed, and an account of fees paid for such entries.

As both the provision for the poor and the parochial registrations of the nature indicated probably vary in every one of the United States, I am induced to ask you to have the goodness to furnish me with some account of the system followed in those two points in the State of Massachusetts.

The liberty I take in making this request demands an apology, but I am sure that you will do me the honour to believe that nothing less than the anxiety expressed by the British Government to be made acquainted with the system prevailing in the United States, before they decide upon an alteration of their own system, should have induced me to trouble you to furnish me with the information so anxiously desired by my Government.

I TRANSMITTED your letter of 3d February to Mr. Ticknor, and I now have the pleasure of communicating to you his answer.

I am expecting every day to receive the new code of Massachusetts, respecting the maintenance of paupers, and as soon as I am in possession of it shall have the pleasure of placing it in your hands.

THE two documents enclosed will, I believe, answer all Sir Charles Vaughan's inquiries. The one in MS. touching the matters of recording births and deaths, as well as the solemnization of marriages; and the printed pamphlet touching all that relates to our pauper laws. They would have been sent ten days ago, but I have been waiting for the Legislative Report on the Pauper System,* which has been some time ordered to be printed, but is not yet out of the press. I will forward it to you as soon as I receive it. The result of both, it should be added to Sir Charles, will probably be a great change in our legislation. As it has heretofore resembled the English, it may be valuable for him to know it is now generally disapproved among us, and likely to be overturned by facts and reasonings like those in the present pamphlet and the one that will follow it. If he desires more information I will endeavour to procure it for him, and now is a favourable time in this Commonwealth.

ENCLOSURE referred to in Mr. Ticknor's Letter.

The following are the provisions in the State of Massachusetts for the recording of births and deaths:

"An Act for recording Births and Deaths by the Clerks of Towns and Districts, 1795. c. 69.

"Be it Enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of every town-clerk and every district-clerk within the Commonwealth to record all births and deaths which shall happen within his town or district, and come to his knowledge, together with the time of such birth or death, and the names of his or her parents, if known, for the fees allowed by law.

"Sec. 2. And be it further Enacted, That it shall be the duty of parents to give notice to the clerk of the town or district in which they dwell of all the births and deaths of their children; and it shall be the duty of every householder to give notice of every birth and death which may happen in his house, and of the eldest person next of kin to give notice of the death of his kindred; and it shall be the duty of the master or keeper of every almshouse, workhouse or prison, and of the master or commander of any ship or vessel, to give notice of every birth and death which may happen in the house or vessel under his care or charge, to the clerk of the town or district in which such event shall happen; and in case any person whose duty it shall be by virtue of this Act to give notice as aforesaid shall neglect to perform the same for the space of six months after the birth or death shall happen, the person so neglecting shall pay a fine of one dollar, to be recovered, with costs of suit, on complaint before any justice of the peace for the same county, to the use of any inhabitant of the same town who shall prosecute for the same; from which judgment there shall be no appeal."

With regard to marriages, the Statute of 1786, c. 3, provides, in the first place, that marriages may be solemnized by justices of the peace within the county in which they reside, and by ordained ministers of the Gospel in the towns, districts or plantations in which they reside, after certain preliminary requisitions have been followed by the parties contracting. The Statute afterwards provides "that every justice and minister shall make and keep a particular record of all marriages solemnized before them respectively, and in the month of April yearly and every year shall make a return to the clerk of the town, district or plantation in which he lives, certifying the names, both Christian names and surnames, of all the persons who have been by them respectively joined together in marriage within the year then last past, if any such have been by them so joined together.

Any justice or clergyman omitting to make such return shall be cited before the court of general sessions of the peace for the county, and, if no sufficient reason be given for such neglect, he shall be disqualified for joining persons in matrimony, for a term of time not exceeding 10 years, at discretion of the court.

Every town and district clerk is bound duly and seasonably to record such marriages as are certified to him as aforesaid.

For recording births and deaths the town-clerk is authorized to receive eight cents. each. For publishing the banns of matrimony, recording the same, giving a certificate of the publishment, and recording the marriage upon receiving the justice's or minister's certificate thereof, 50 cents., to be paid by the man published on receiving a certificate of the publishment.

There are no statute provisions regulating the registration of baptisms and burials.

ABSTRACT of the Return of PAUPERS, 1833.

To Hon. William B. Calhoun, Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Sir,

Secretary's Office, 14 Feb. 1834.

IN obedience to an Order of the 5th instant, I herewith submit to the Honourable House of Representatives an Abstract of Returns of the Overseers of the Poor, for the year 1833, from 202 towns, which are all that have been received in this department.

A separate Abstract of the Returns from the several Gaols and Houses of Correction is now in preparation, and will be completed with all possible dispatch.

I have the honour to be, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Edward D. Bangs, Secretary.

* This has been already printed in Appendix (F.) p. 57, having been obtained by the Poor Law Commissioners from another source.

Remarks:—Many of the Returns are very imperfect and confused in their statements; and several of them contain, in some columns, absolute contradictions of the particulars stated in other columns. Of course, it is impossible always to reconcile these inconsistencies. The Returns, and consequently the Abstract, will therefore afford very uncertain data, in many instances in which information was sought by the Legislature.

Sir,

His Majesty's Consulate, Philadelphia, 12 February 1834.

I HAVE the honour to send you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, answers to the queries respecting the Poor Laws in Pennsylvania, contained in your circular letter dated the 12th August last. Accompanying that document I send two pamphlets, one being the Report of the Commissioners to revise the Civil Code of Pennsylvania, the other containing the Poor Laws of Philadelphia.

ANSWERS to the Inquiries contained in the Circular Letter transmitted from the Foreign Office to Mr. Robertson, dated 12 August 1833.

I. OF THE LEGAL PROVISIONS EXISTING IN THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA FOR THE SUPPORT AND MAINTENANCE OF THE POOR.

The general law relating to the support and maintenance of the poor in Pennsylvania, with the exception of the city of Philadelphia and the districts adjacent to it, was passed in 1771, previously to the Revolution, and follows closely the Acts of the British Parliament then existing. It has been amended in some particulars since; but the essential features remain the same.

1. Of the Administrators of the Law.

Overseers of the poor are chosen annually, in the month of March, in every township and borough, by the votes of the inhabitants; the same qualification being necessary as at the general elections.

The overseers receive no compensation for their services.

They are liable to a penalty of 5 l. for refusing to serve in the office; but are not obliged to serve oftener than one year in seven.

2. Of the Funds for the Relief of the Poor.

The overseers of every township and borough are authorized (having first obtained the approbation of any two justices of the peace of the same county) to lay a rate or assessment, not exceeding 3 d. in the pound, on the clear yearly value of all the real and personal estate within the township or borough, and 6 s. per head on every freeman, not otherwise rated for his estate, in every three-penny tax, and so on in proportion for any lesser rate or assessment, which assessment may be repeated as often in one year as shall be found necessary.

There are also various fines and penalties imposed by different laws, which are directed to be paid to the overseers, for the use of the poor.

3. Of the Persons to whom Relief is to be given, and the Mode of administering it.

The 4th section of the Act of 1771 directs that the funds raised shall be employed "in providing proper houses and places, and a convenient stock of hemp, flax, thread and other ware and stuff, for setting to work such poor persons as apply for relief and are capable of working; and also for relieving such poor, old, blind, impotent and lame persons, and other persons not able to work, within the boroughs and townships respectively, who shall therewith be maintained and provided for;" following closely the words of the statute of 43 Elizabeth. c. 2.

The 5th section gives authority to the overseers to contract with any person for a house or lodging, for keeping, maintaining and employing the poor; and declares that, if any poor person shall refuse to be so kept, he shall be put out of the book and shall not be entitled to relief.

The 9th section provides that no person shall be entered in the poor book of any township or borough, or receive relief, before such person shall have procured an order from two justices of the peace, under a penalty of forfeiting the amount given, unless the entry and relief be approved of by two justices.

The law respecting settlements and removals is nearly the same as in England. There is the same settlement by birth and marriage; and a settlement is acquired in the same manner as is provided in the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12; and in addition thereto, the Act of 1771 declares, that "every healthy person" coming directly from Europe into the province shall be legally settled in the place in which he shall first settle and reside for the space of 12 months.

There is no express provision in our laws respecting the relief of persons not having a settlement anywhere within this Commonwealth; but it has been held by the Supreme Court, that the overseers are bound to afford relief to such persons who may happen to be disabled and to be in want, and it is believed to be the practice to do so.

There is a large number of persons constantly seeking relief under such circumstances, either emigrants from Europe or persons from other States of this Union. In neither case can they be well removed from this State: in the first instance, in consequence of the distance; and in the second, because there is no legislation common to the States which authorizes the removal of paupers from one to the other.

Pennsylvania.

These are the principal features of the law relating to paupers in the country districts. There are local provisions in some districts varying the general rule. In 16 out of the 52 counties in Pennsylvania there are county poor-houses, which are superintended by the "Directors of the Poor," elected by the inhabitants of the respective county. In these cases, the poor are a county, and not a township charge.

In the city of Philadelphia and its suburbs, a system exists, materially different from that established by the Act of 1771.

Until the year 1828, the poor laws were administered by persons denominated "Guardians of the Poor," 50 in number, who were chosen by the corporations of the city proper and of the suburban districts; of whom nine acted as managers of the almshouse, and the remainder had charge of the out-door poor. Each of the latter had charge of a certain appointed district, and distributed money, fuel or provisions, at his discretion, within a certain limit. The result was, great profusion on one side and improvidence on the other; indiscriminate relief and the encouragement of the worst kinds of pauperism and profligacy; an enormous increase in the poor-tax, and great facilities to speculation and fraud. The citizens became alarmed, and represented to the Legislature the evils of the prevailing law.

In conformity with their suggestions, the whole system was changed in 1828, by an Act of the Legislature, and a new mode of administration adopted, the principal features of which are as follows:

Twelve persons constitute a Board, who have corporate powers under the title of "the Guardians for the relief and employment of the poor of the city of Philadelphia," &c. They are elected in certain proportions by the corporation of Philadelphia and the adjoining districts, for the term of three years, and are renewed by rotation; one-third of the number going out of office annually.

They annually appoint a secretary and treasurer.

They also appoint six persons as visitors of the poor, who receive a certain compensation, fixed by the guardians, and give security for the faithful execution of their trust. Their duty is, on every application for relief, to visit the applicant, and after full examination, to report in writing to the next meeting of the Board the residence, name, age, sex and birth-place of such applicant, and the number of children, if any. On receipt of which report, the Board, if satisfied of the necessity of the case, directs the mode and determines the amount of relief. In case of sudden emergency, when the party cannot be removed to the hospital or almshouse, the visitor, with the consent and approbation of one of the guardians, is to administer such relief as the necessity of the case may require, and a report thereof is made to the next meeting of the board of guardians.

The taxes for the support of the poor are laid and assessed by a distinct body called "The Directors of the Poor-tax," consisting of 12 persons, who are annually elected by the same authority as the guardians. The guardians furnish them annually with an estimate of the amount of money which will probably be required for the support of the poor; and the directors then proceed to lay a rate, which is not to exceed 50 cents in the 100 dollars at any one time, upon real and personal estates, and not more than one dollar per head on every freeman in any 50-cent tax.

The rules respecting settlements are the same with those established for the commonwealth in general by the Act of 1771, already mentioned, with the addition, that illegitimate children are to be taken as settled in the place of legal settlement of their mother at the time of the birth of the child.

The Act of 1828 authorizes the erection of an almshouse in the vicinity of the city, which is now in the course of building, upon a very large scale. It is intended to provide separate dormitories for all the inmates, and to employ them in profitable work.

II. OF THE PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH THE PROVISION FOR THE SUPPORT OF THE POOR IS FOUNDED.

It is believed that the principles of the Poor Laws are nearly the same in this country as in England. In both, it seems to be held that the poor are entitled to the means of subsistence, and in both it seems to be required that there should be actual want of the necessities of life, and an inability to obtain them by means of personal labour. In the cases of the very young and the very old, of those who are disabled by sickness or accident, and of those who are disordered in mind, the rule is to give relief as a matter of course, where those who are by law bound to provide for them are unable to do so. Where there is an ability to work, the law of this State contemplates that the applicants for relief shall be furnished with materials for the purpose, and not with money or provisions; but the difficulties in the way of setting to work all who apply for relief have at some seasons been so great, that the guardians have been compelled to depart from this rule.

III. OF THE MANNER IN WHICH IT IS ADMINISTERED.

The provisions of the law already stated furnish, it is believed, sufficient information on this point, so far, at least, as respects the general rules.

There are some local laws varying the mode of administration; but the writer does not possess sufficient information to be able to state their operation or effect.

IV. AMOUNT AND MODE OF RAISING THE FUNDS DEVOTED TO THIS PURPOSE.

The mode has already been shown, in stating the provisions of the law on this subject.

The amount raised throughout the State cannot be ascertained at present. No general returns are required by law, and no means exist of procuring the information. In the country country districts in general the expenditure for the support of the poor is believed to be very small. In some townships it has happened that the fines or penalties paid for the use of the poor have so much exceeded the demands for relief, that the Legislature has directed the surplus to be applied to the repair of the roads. The demand for labour being in almost all parts of the State greater than the supply, there are few applicants for relief, excepting the old and sick, or disabled. In the city of Philadelphia and a few other of the principal towns the case is somewhat different. The amount of money raised for the support of the poor in Philadelphia for certain years is stated in the Tables subjoined. It will be seen that previously to the year 1828, when the improved system was introduced, the poor-rates were very large and rapidly increasing. Since the introduction of the new system the amount has been considerably reduced, though the population has greatly increased.

V. PRACTICAL WORKING AND EFFECT OF THE ACTUAL SYSTEM UPON THE COMFORT, CHARACTER AND CONDITION OF THE INHABITANTS.

This is an inquiry of so comprehensive a nature, that a satisfactory answer would savour more of a treatise than of the brief reply which has been given to the other points of interrogatory, and after all, would be more a matter of speculation than of authoritative conclusion.

In the country districts generally, it may be doubted whether the Poor Laws have as yet produced any decided effect upon the condition or character of the inhabitants, because the circumstances already adverted to have kept the people generally in sufficient and profitable employment. It may be added, too, that the emigration which is constantly going on to the new lands in the west tends to prevent any accumulation of the labouring population in any particular districts, and thus lessens the tendency to a pressure upon the poor-rates, while it furnishes a sufficient answer to applications for relief, when made by able-bodied persons. If there be, then, in the Poor Laws a tendency to produce or increase the evils they were intended to mitigate, as has frequently been suggested by persons abroad, there are counteracting circumstances in the rural districts of this country, which prevent at least such a tendency being developed. The same remarks may be made, with some qualifications, however, of the operation of the Poor Laws in the cities and principal towns, where the labouring population is collected into masses, and is more liable to vicissitudes of employment. That there is a considerable number of persons in Philadelphia and its neighbourhood who rely upon the guardians of the poor for relief, when disabled or out of employment, is probably true, and it may be true that the tendency of the system is to produce improvidence and aversion from industry in some of these persons; but such are in general the returns and rewards of industry in almost every occupation, that the prospect of deriving any advantages from the Poor Laws does not, it is believed, affect any considerable portion of the population, even in the cities.

The subjoined Tables contain all the returns which are accessible to the present writer.

They show that a considerable increase in the amount of the funds raised for the support of the poor has taken place within 30 years; but the population has more than doubled itself within that period; and other causes, besides the provisions for relief, may have contributed to enlarge the number of paupers.

EXTRACT from the "Fourth Report of the Commissioners appointed to revise the Civil Code of Pennsylvania, accompanied with Bills and Remarks.

A BILL entitled "An ACT relating to the SUPPORT and EMPLOYMENT of the POOR."

Remarks on the Bill entitled "An Act relating to the Support and Employment of the Poor."

THE bill now submitted relates to a subject which is of considerable importance and interest to the public. The question of the expediency of compulsory provision for the support of the poor is admitted on all hands to be one of great magnitude and difficulty. Eminent and enlightened men on both sides of the Atlantic have differed in their conclusion respecting it; and powerful arguments have been urged in favour of, and against the continuance of the system, which has prevailed for at least three centuries in England, and, with few material alterations, has been naturalized in this country. If we believed that it fell within our province to recommend to the Legislature the total abandonment of the system, we have very great doubts whether, even looking at it merely as a question of political philosophy, we should deem such a course advisable. But, whatever might be our individual opinions on the subject, we believe that our authority does not extend so far as to justify us in proposing radical changes in laws of this nature. That there are defects, however, in the system, and abuses in its practice, seems to be agreed on all hands, and these it has been our business to consider, to supply or to remove.

The principal objections to the law, as it is administered, are founded upon the relief sometimes given to able-bodied persons, and upon the provision relating to settlement.

1. We believe that the design of the law is to furnish support to those who are unable to find the means of support for themselves. There must be inability, but this inability may be physical or intellectual, or it may arise from circumstances independent of either. Actual bodily infirmity or derangement of mind, preventing bodily labour, entitle the individual to relief, both in the way of maintenance and clothing, and in medical treatment, at the expense of the public, where he is without the means. This seems to be generally admitted. But suppose a poor man to be able and willing to work, but unable to find employment in the place where he lives, has he any claim to assistance? This is denied by many, who argue that there is no natural right to aid under such circumstances, and that the consequences of admitting the claim would be the destruction of industry, and eventually of individual property. It is certain that in England great inconveniences are experienced from the pressure of this part of the community upon the poor rates, which have risen to an amount unexampled in history, and enormous, even in comparison with the great wealth of that country. The practice in many parts of England appears to have been to supply able-bodied persons with relief in money or provisions, and sometimes to add to their wages out of the poor-rates; the almost necessary consequence of which appears to be the discouragement of regular industry, and the multiplication of sturdy paupers. These abuses, however, prove nothing against the validity of the claim of a pauper to employment as the means of obtaining subsistence for himself and family. We are not prepared to say that if a poor man is thrown out of employment in a particular trade or branch of business, his only alternative is to emigrate to some place more favourable to the pursuit of his calling. We think that, for a time at least, he has a right to assistance of some kind, and we are not sure that the interests of the district are not promoted by encouraging labourers to remain in it and apply themselves to some other branch of industry, likely to yield a return. But the assistance, which an able-bodied man is entitled to receive under such circumstances, is not assistance in money but in employment. If work, and an amount of work, fully equal to that which is performed by men in the like employment, who are not paupers, be bestowed and required, there is little danger, we submit, of encouraging idleness and improvidence. A well-managed house of employment will seldom afford much attraction for the idle and profligate, although it may be useful as a refuge for the honest poor, and as an example to all. We cannot agree, therefore, with those who would, under all circumstances, confine the aid of the overseers of the poor to the infirm and helpless. But in every case in which there is an ability to work and an inability to obtain work, we would give relief in work, and in that alone, and, as the discretion is liable to abuse, we think that it should be expressly restricted. We have been guided by these principles in drawing the first six sections of the bill, which will be the subject of more particular remark hereafter.

2. Many persons have expressed opinions adverse to the restriction of relief to persons having a settlement in the particular district, and contend that, upon the whole, it is prejudicial to industry, by preventing the circulation of labour, and confining it altogether to the place of origin. It is said that if relief were administered without regard to the place of settlement of the pauper, labourers would be more likely to resort to those parts of the country in which there was a demand for labour, and thus a deficiency in one district, and an excess in another, would be corrected, and a proper level maintained. The evidence recently taken by the commissioners appointed under the authority of the British Parliament, to investigate the pauper system of that country, and which we have had an opportunity of examining, certainly shows that, in many parts of England, labourers are restrained from removing from particular parishes, where they are unable to find employment, by the apprehension that if they should want relief in the parish to which they would otherwise remove, they would be denied it, in consequence of the law of settlement.

Nevertheless, we are not satisfied of the expediency of altering the law in this particular. If a settlement could be acquired by birth only, and relief were given in the place of nativity alone, it would, in some parts of our country, render the poor laws almost inoperative, and in all of them would certainly raise strong objections to the doctrine of settlement. But, in point of fact, a settlement is gained upon such easy terms, under our law, that it can hardly be said to impose much restraint upon the circulation of labour with a population like ours. In the ninth section of the bill we have collected the several provisions of the Act of 1771, declaring in what manner a settlement may be gained; and it will be seen that the terms upon which a settlement may be obtained are by no means difficult. But what would be the effect of repealing all provisions in relation to settlement, and declaring that relief should be given to every person requiring it within the district, without regard to birth or residence? We fear the change would not be for the better: if the mere circumstance of inhabitancy is to entitle the pauper to relief, a single day's residence may be sufficient for the purpose: it will not be necessary that the district called upon for relief should have had the benefit of an hour's labour from the pauper. He may have spent the prime of his life in one township, and advanced its prosperity by his personal labour; and, if the restraints of settlement be abolished, that township will be under no obligation to maintain him, unless he be an inhabitant at the time he has become chargeable. We believe that the effect would be to cause an influx of paupers into such districts as happen to be better provided, according to their views of comfort, and to produce constant attempts at fraud, by overseers as well as paupers.

It was with a view to obviate the tendency in the law of settlement to restrain the circulation of labour that the provisions relative to certificates were introduced. Owing to the peculiar circumstances of our country, they have never been much attended to in practice; but we believe that the effect of their general adoption would be beneficial in counteracting the inconveniences which have been mentioned.

The situation of these States is a peculiar one in respect to paupers. In Pennsylvania, we are called upon to support not only those who have gained a settlement in the Commonwealth, but also persons arriving from foreign countries and the other States. With respect to the first, the question of settlement is at present of little consequence, because there seems to be no available means of enforcing it. No matter from what part of Europe they may come, it is not easy to return them; and they must be supported for the time being, if in want, in the district where they happen to be.

As respects the able-bodied European labourers, we think that there is no peculiar hardship upon our community, if they are required to furnish relief to them, after they have become disabled by sickness, age or accident, in our employment. They have earned a title to support by their labour; and our public and private works in every part of the State bear evidence of the value of their labour. It would, we think, be great injustice to deny relief to persons so situated. But a class of persons has recently been landed on our shores whom we are under no such obligations to receive or support. It is believed that some of the municipal officers in foreign countries have lately shipped off to this country whole cargoes of infirm or profligate paupers, the tenants of their almshouses and refuse of their population, finding it cheaper to pay their passage here than to support them at home. The burthen of their support is thus thrown upon us immediately upon their landing; and our own community is, besides, infected with moral and physical disorders brought over by them. We think that some decided effort should be made to prevent a continuance of this practice. It is time that Acts of Assembly have been passed, exacting payment of a certain sum for each passenger brought from a foreign country to the port of Philadelphia, and requiring security to be given that such passenger shall not become a charge; but these laws are constantly evaded by entering the vessel in some port of an adjoining State and landing the passengers there, who immediately proceed to this State. We are preparing a bill, with a view of remedying this evil, as far as the power of our Legislature, without the co-operation of Congress and the adjoining States, will permit.

With respect to paupers from other States the case is somewhat different. It is true that there is no convenient tribunal for the adjudication of questions arising under the law of settlement; but it is believed that some international regulations may be made with advantage on this subject. In the 29th section of this bill, we have suggested a proposition which, if adopted by the Legislature, may lay the foundation of a satisfactory system. But supposing that the rule of settlement might be conveniently abandoned, with reference to the internal economy of the State, how would the change work as respects other States who would retain the restriction? The consequence would be, that we should have the burthen of many of their paupers and of all of our own, since they would not support them. This would be an inequality, which only a very clear case of expediency in other respects would call upon us to sustain. We think, therefore, that the repeal of the restrictions relative to settlement would be likely to produce more evil than good.

There are other difficulties in the way of any suggestions on our part of material changes in the poor laws. We have been met at the outset of this and other matters of municipal regulation by local and temporary laws, which our commission does not authorize us to touch. In the city of Philadelphia and its vicinity, for example, the system is, in many important respects, different from that which prevails in other parts of the Commonwealth. We have reason to believe that the alterations made by the Act of 1828, in the administration of the poor laws for that district, have produced valuable results; at all events, difference of circumstances will probably prevent an assimilation of the laws for urban and rural districts. In some counties poor-houses have been established, and the poor are maintained at the charge of the county. This is the case in 16 counties out of the 52. We believe that the public interest would be promoted by making this system general, as experience has shown that the poor can be more economically supported in a general house of employment than by separate or individual relief. There are many other reasons in favour of this mode of administering assistance which might be suggested, if we were not apprehensive of too much enlarging the bulk of this report. We have not, however, felt ourselves at liberty to propose so thorough a change in the law as would follow from the general establishment of county poor-houses, believing that it would be better to leave it to the judgment of the people of the several counties, and that perhaps the alteration ought to be made by degrees, and not in all the counties at once. Besides, the situation of the several counties in respect to population and culture is so different as to render the measure less expedient in some than in others. However this may be, the variety of local provisions, which we are not authorized to disturb, would, perhaps, be sufficient to prevent the adoption of some of the suggestions which have recently been made for the alteration of the poor-laws.

We may be permitted, however, to suggest one alteration of the present law, of considerable importance. In Massachusetts and New York, and perhaps in some other States, paupers who have no settlement in the State are relieved at the expense of the State. In this commonwealth, the burthen falls upon the particular district in which the pauper may happen to be. This often occasions considerable expense to certain counties or places from which others are exempt. The construction of a bridge or canal, for instance, will draw to a particular neighbourhood a large number of labourers, many of whom may have no settlement in the State. If disabled by sickness or accident, they must be relieved by the township in which they became disabled, although their labour was employed for the benefit of the State or county, as the case may be, and not for the benefit of the township alone. If provision were made for the payment of the expenses incurred by the township in such case out of the county, or perhaps the State treasury, we think that it would be more just, and that the unhappy labourer would be more likely to obtain adequate relief than if left to the scanty resources of a single township. A case which is stated in the 2d volume of the Pennsylvania Reports, (Overseers v. M'Coy, p. 432), in which it appeared, that a person employed as a labourer on the State Canal, and who was severely wounded in the course of his employment, was passed from one township to another, in consequence of the disinclination to incur the expense of supporting him, until he died of the injury received, shows in a strong light the inconvenience and perils of the present system respecting casual paupers, and may serve to excuse our calling the attention of the legislature to the subject.

We proceed to make such brief remarks on the several sections of the bill now submitted as will, in addition to what has been already said, explain our reasons for any alterations that have been made.

Sections 1 and 2 are new in terms, but are contained in substance in the Act of 9th March 1771, (1 Smith, 332). The 2d section limits the power of giving relief, in the case of an able-bodied person, to the circumstance of his inability to obtain employment. We have already suggested, that we consider it inexpedient to encourage applications in such cases, and we think that relief ought to be granted only in cases of ascertained destitution.

Section 3 is suggested for similar reasons. No such provision exists at present; but it appears to us, that the power here given of employing able-bodied labourers on the roads or public works, will be of service to the township, and tend to lessen the disposition to apply for relief. If the labourer should find the employment an irksome one, he will have the option of abandoning it, and seeking support by other means.

Section 4 is derived from the 4th section of the Act of 1771.

Section 5 declares the duty of overseers with respect to persons not having a settlement in the district. It is somewhat singular, (as is remarked by Judge Huston in the case already mentioned of Overseers v. M'Coy, 2 Penn. Rep. 434,) that there is no direct provision to this effect in the existing law, though several passages seem to assume it. "If a pauper has no settlement in the State, the expense of maintenance remains on the township in which he was when he required relief. Our courts have always so considered it, and I believe so has every other person."—(Id. p. 435). We think it right that the duty should be stated in express terms, to prevent any doubt or evasion, although, as we have already suggested, we think that the expense should be reimbursed to the district by the county or the Commonwealth.

Section 6 is taken, with little alteration, from the 9th section of the Act of 1771.

Section 8 is derived from the 8th section of the Act of 1771.

Section 9 declares the several methods by which a settlement may be gained, which are here collected from the 17th and 18th sections of the Act of 1771, and arranged in distinct order. We have made no alteration of substance in this part of the Act. We may remark, that the object being to declare how a settlement may be gained, we have not spoken of a settlement by birth, which takes place of course in every case, unless there be a provision by law to the contrary, as in section 11, post.

Section 10 is taken from 19th section of the Act of 1771.

Section 11 is new as a general provision, although it is in substance contained in the 16th section of the Act of 5th March 1828, relating to the city of Philadelphia and the adjoining districts. The general rule being that all persons are settled in the place of their birth, illegitimate children are of course entitled to the benefits of it; but this has been found to produce inconvenience by the practice of women going out of the township to be delivered, and thus casting the burthen of supporting these illegitimate children upon another township. The extension over the State of this provision in the local law will tend to equalize the burthen, which might otherwise be unduly thrown upon the country districts, and will, it is believed, be acceptable to the people.

Section 12 is taken from the 2d section of the Act of 24th March 1803, (4 Smith, 30.)

Sections 13, 14 and 15 are derived from the 25th section of the Act of 1771, with such verbal alterations as are rendered necessary by the political changes consequent upon the Declaration of Independence.

Sections 16 and 17 are derived from the 20th section of the Act of 1771, with similar alterations.

Section 18 is copied from the 21st section of the Act of 1771, with similar alterations.

Section 19 is taken from the 22d section of the Act of 1771.

Section 20 contains a provision which is not to be found in terms in the law; and though the case probably does not often occur, in which the overseers are called upon to separate a wife from her husband, yet it may happen, as in the instance in section 10, ante, of a husband having no known settlement; and ought to be provided for.

Section 21 is derived from the 26th section of the Act of 1771.

Sections 23, 24 and 25 are derived from the 24th section of the Act of 1771, with certain alterations in the 25th section respecting the proceedings to obtain payment of costs from overseers.

The original provision seems to contemplate a personal liability on the part of the overseers, with which we think they ought not to be visited, for a fair performance of their duty. In the bill relating to counties and townships, we have suggested a mode of proceeding to obtain payment of sums due by township officers, to which this section is intended to refer.

Section 26 is derived from the 27th section of the Act of 1771, with alterations relative to the mode of proceeding against overseers, similar to those mentioned in our remarks on the last section.

Section 27 is taken from the 28th section of the Act of 1771.

Sections 28 and 29 are new. The provision contained in the 28th section, however, has already been made in New York, in nearly the same words, (1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, p. 630, § 64,) and we think that the principle of self-defence, if no other, authorizes its adoption here. We have already made some remarks upon the inconveniences which arise from the want of some common authority or rule to determine controversies between adjoining States, relative to paupers. Our tribunals and officers having, of course, no extra-territorial authority, their legal power does not enable them to remove to another State a pauper who may be brought into this State and left here, with the view of throwing the expense upon us. The consequence is, that the township into which he is brought must relieve him or suffer him to perish. The penalty imposed by the New York law applies to all cases, whether the pauper belongs to that State or otherwise, and our own overseers or other officers officers who should attempt to return to them a pauper put upon us from New York, would incur the risk of prosecution. Now we think that this inequality ought not to be permitted to exist, and that our own officers and people are entitled to protection; which, as far as it can be given at present, must be by means of prevention and counteraction. This section, therefore, is suggested for the purpose of meeting the legislation of another State, and preventing the introduction of their paupers among us, whom we are not permitted to return. But as it is always desirable to avoid collision of authority, and to produce uniformity of legislation among the States, we have suggested, in the 29th section, a proviso, which may open the door to a satisfactory arrangement of the subject.

Section 30 is taken from the 1st section of the Act of 2d April 1821, (7 Smith, 480,) intituled, "An Act to prevent the increase of Pauperism in this Commonwealth." We have, in place of the "&c." contained in the original Act, introduced the words "support and interment," which we presume was the intention of the Legislature.

Section 31 is taken from the 6th section of the Act of 1st March 1780, (1 Smith, 492,) intituled, "An Act for the gradual Abolition of Slavery."

Section 32 is derived from the 29th section of the Act of 1771. We have added "grandchildren" to the enumeration of persons under legal obligation to relieve and maintain poor relations, conceiving that, as grand-parents were already bound to support grandchildren, the obligation ought to be reciprocal. We have authority for this addition, besides, in the 29th section of the Act of 29th March 1803, (4 Smith, 50,) relating to the poor of the city of Philadelphia, &c.

Sections 33, 34 and 35 are taken from the 30th section of the Act of 1771, with little alteration of substance.

Section 36 is compiled from the 1st section of the Act of 21st February 1767, (1 Smith, 268,) which enumerates certain classes of persons whom it declares to be liable to the penalties of vagrancy. We have thought it appropriate to the bill, and have introduced as a third class, all persons who shall refuse to perform the work allotted to them by the overseers. The remaining provisions of the Act of 1767 will be compiled under another head.

Section 37 is taken from the Act of 29th March 1819, (7 Smith, 206,) with some alterations, suggested for the purpose of defining more clearly the authority of overseers and directors in the subject matter.

Section 38 is taken from the Act of 18th January 1821, (7 Smith, 347,) with some slight alterations. We have added a clause, requiring a copy of the accounts to be annually transmitted to the governor, to be by him laid before the Legislature. It has been suggested to us that this provision will probably be productive of valuable statistical information, and serve as an additional check upon the officers, and also as a guide to future Legislatures.

Section 39 is derived from the 1st section of the Act of 4th April 1803, with some alterations, the design of which is to obtain immediate payment from justices of the peace.

Section 40 is derived from the 2d section of the same Act.

Section 41 is compiled from the 1st and 6th sections of the same Act.

Section 42 is derived from the 4th section of the same Act.

Section 43 and 44 are derived from the 6th section of the same Act.

Section 45 is taken from the Act of 20th February 1804, (4 Smith, 133.)

Section 46 contains a general provision compiled from several provisions in the Act of 1771.

Section 47 is taken from the 31st section of the Act of 1771.

Section 48 is taken from the 32d section of the Act of 1771.

Section 49 defines the word "district," which has been used throughout this bill, to save the necessity of repeating the words "township, borough," &c. It also contains the exceptions which we have found it necessary to make of local provision.

CONTENTS of the Bill entitled "An Act relating to the SUPPORT and EMPLOYMENT of the Poor."

AN ACT relating to the SUPPORT and EMPLOYMENT of the POOR.

It is enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, as follows :

Section 1. It shall be the duty of the overseers of every district, from time to time, to provide, as is hereinafter directed, for every poor person within the district, having a settlement therein, who shall apply to them for relief.

Section 2. If such poor person be able to work, but cannot find employment, it shall be the duty of the overseers to provide work for him, according to his ability, and for this purpose they shall procure suitable places and a sufficient stock of materials.

Section 3. It shall be lawful for the overseers of any district, with the concurrence and under the directions of the supervisors of the township, to employ any such poor person, being a male, of sufficient ability, in opening or repairing any road or highway within the district.

Section 4. If such poor person, by reason of age, disease, infirmity, or other disability, be unable to work, it shall be the duty of the overseers to provide him with the necessary means of subsistence.

Section 5. It shall also be the duty of the overseers of every district to furnish relief to every poor person within the district, not having a settlement therein, who shall apply to them for relief, until such person can be removed to the place of his settlement.

Section 6. No person shall be entered on the poor book of any district, or receive relief from any overseers, before such person, or some one in his behalf, shall have procured an order from two magistrates of the county for the same; and in case any overseer shall enter in the poor book, or relieve any such poor person without such order, he shall forfeit a sum equal to the amount or value given, unless such entry or relief shall be approved of by two magistrates as aforesaid.

Section 7. It shall be lawful for the overseers of every district to contract with any person for a house or lodging, for keeping, maintaining and employing such poor persons of the district as shall be adjudged proper objects of relief, and there to keep, maintain and employ such poor persons, and to receive the benefit of their work and labour, for and towards their maintenance and support; and if any poor person shall refuse to be kept and employed in such house, he shall not be entitled to receive relief from the overseers during such refusal.

Section 8. It shall be lawful for the overseers of every district, with the approbation and consent of two or more magistrates of the same county, to put out as apprentices all poor children whose parents are dead, or by the said magistrates found to be unable to maintain them; males to the age of 21, and females to the age of 18 years.

Section 9. A settlement may be gained in any district :

1. By any person who shall come to inhabit in the same, and who shall, for himself and on his own account, execute any public office, being legally placed therein during one whole year.

2. By any such person who shall be charged with and pay his proportion of any public taxes or levies for two years successively;

3. By

3. By any person who shall, bonâ fide, take a lease of any real estate of the yearly value of 30 dollars, and shall dwell upon the same for one whole year, and pay the said rent.

4. By any person who shall become seised of any freehold estate within such district, and who shall dwell upon the same for one whole year.

5. By any unmarried person, not having a child, who shall be lawfully bound or hired as a servant within such district, and shall continue in such service during one whole year.

6. By any person who shall be duly bound an apprentice by indenture, and shall inhabit in the district, with his master or mistress, for one whole year.

7. By any indented servant, legally and directly imported from Europe into this Commonwealth, who shall serve for the space of 60 days in the district into which he shall first come; Provided, that if such servant shall afterwards duly serve in any other district for the space of 12 months, either with his first employer or his assignee, he shall obtain a legal settlement in such other district.

8. By any mariner coming into this Commonwealth, and by any other healthy person coming directly from a foreign country into the same, if such mariner or other person shall reside for the space of 12 months in the district in which he shall first settle and reside.

Section 10. Every married woman shall be deemed during coverture, and after her husband's death, to be settled in the place where he was last settled; but if he shall have no known settlement, then she shall be deemed, whether he be living or dead, to be settled in the place where she was last settled before her marriage.

Section 11. Every illegitimate child shall be deemed to be settled in the place where the mother was legally settled at the time of the birth of such child.

Section 12. If the last place of settlement of any person who shall have become chargeable shall be in any township which shall have been divided by the authority of laws, such person shall be supported by that township within the territory of which he resided at the time of gaining such settlement.

Section 13. It shall be the duty of every housekeeper who shall receive into his house any person who has not gained a legal settlement in some part of this Commonwealth, (all mariners coming into this Commonwealth, and every other healthy person coming from a foreign country immediately into this Commonwealth, only excepted,) within ten days after receiving such person, to give notice thereof in writing to the overseers of the proper district.

Section 14. If any housekeeper shall fail to give notice as aforesaid, and if the person so received shall become poor and unable to maintain himself, and cannot be removed to the place of his last legal settlement in any other State, if any such he hath, such housekeeper shall be obliged to provide for and maintain such poor person; and in case of the death of such poor person, without leaving wherewithal to defray the expenses of his funeral, such housekeeper shall pay the overseers so much as they shall reasonably expend for such purpose.

Section 15. If such housekeeper shall refuse to pay the charges aforesaid, the overseers shall assess upon him the amount necessary to maintain such poor person weekly, or such sum as shall be necessary to pay such funeral charges, and shall have power to collect the same by warrant of distress; but if such delinquent shall have no goods or chattels liable to distress, he may be committed to gaol, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, until he shall have paid the same or shall be otherwise legally discharged.

Section 16. If any person shall remove from any city or district within this Commonwealth into any other district, there to reside, and shall at the same time deliver to the overseers of the district where he shall come to reside a certificate such as is hereinafter mentioned, such certificate shall oblige the city or district from which he may remove to provide for the person named in such certificate, together with his family, as inhabitants thereof, whenever he shall be obliged to ask relief of the district to which such certificate was given, and into which he was received by virtue thereof; and then, and not before, it shall be lawful for such person and his children, though born in such district, and his servants or apprentices, not having otherwise acquired a settlement there, to be removed to the city or district from which such certificate was brought; and no person so coming by certificate into any district, nor any apprentice or servant to such person, shall be deemed or adjudged, by any act whatever, to have gained a settlement therein, unless he shall after the date of such certificate execute some public annual office, being legally placed therein, in such district.

Section 17. The certificate, to be delivered as aforesaid to the overseers of the district into which such person shall remove, shall be under the hands and seal of the guardian or overseer of the poor of the city or district from which he removed, acknowledging the person therein named to be an inhabitant legally settled in such city or district, and shall be attested by two or more credible witnesses, and allowed of and subscribed by at least one of the magistrates of the proper city or county; and the witnesses, or one of them, by whom such certificate shall be attested shall make oath or affirmation, according to law, before such magistrate, that such witnesses or witness did see the overseers whose names and seals are hereunto set severally sign and seal the said certificate, and that the names of such witnesses or witness are in their or his proper handwriting; and the said magistrate shall certify that the proof was duly made before him; and every such certificate, so proved before and allowed by such magistrate, shall be received in evidence without other proof thereof.

Section 18. No person who shall come into any district without such certificate (mariners and other healthy persons coming from foreign countries as aforesaid excepted) shall gain a settlement therein, unless such person shall give security, if required, at his coming into the same, for indemnifying such district; which security shall be approved and allowed by some magistrate of the county.

Section 19. On complaint made by the overseers of any district to one of the magistrates of the same county, it shall be lawful for the said magistrate, with any other magistrate of the county, where any person is likely to become chargeable to such district, into which he shall come, by their warrant or order directed to such overseers, to remove such person to the city, district or State where he was last legally settled, unless such person shall give sufficient security to indemnify such district to which he is likely to become chargeable as aforesaid.

Section 20. Provided, that it shall not be lawful, by virtue of any order of removal, to separate any wife from her husband.

Section 21. It shall be the duty of the guardians or overseers of the city or district to which such poor person may be removed, by warrant or order as aforesaid, to receive such poor person; and if any such guardian or overseer shall refuse or neglect so to do, he shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20 dollars, to be recovered as hereinafter provided, and applied to the use of the poor of the district from which such poor person may be removed as aforesaid.

Section 22. Provided always, that any person aggrieved by any such order of removal may appeal to the next court of quarter sessions for the county from which such poor person may be removed, and not elsewhere; and if there be any defect of form in such order, the said court shall cause the same to be amended, without costs to the party, and after such amendment, if the same be necessary, shall proceed to hear and determine the cause upon its truth and merits; but no such cause shall be proceeded in unless reasonable notice shall have been given by the party appellant to the overseers of the district from which the removal shall have been made; the reasonableness of which notice shall be determined by the said court, at the session to which the appeal may be made; and if it shall appear to them that reasonable notice was not given, they shall adjourn the appeal to their next session, and then determine the same.

Section 23. For the more effectual preventing of vexatious removals and frivolous appeals, the court of quarter sessions, upon every appeal in a case of settlement, or upon proof being made before them of notice thereof as aforesaid (though the appeal be not afterwards prosecuted,) shall, at the same session, order to the party in whose behalf such appeal shall be determined, or to whom such notice did appear to have been given, such costs and charges as the said court shall consider reasonable and just, to be paid by the overseers, or other person against whom such appeal shall be determined, or by the person that gave such notice; and if the court shall determine in favour of the appellant, that such poor person was unduly removed, they shall at the same session, on demand, award to such appellant so much money as shall appear to them to have been reasonably paid by the city or district appellant towards the relief of such poor person between the time of such undue removal and the determination of such appeal, with costs as aforesaid.

Section 24. If any person, ordered to pay costs or charges as aforesaid, other than overseers as aforesaid, shall live out of the jurisdiction of such court, it shall be the duty of any magistrate of the county in which such person shall reside, on request to him made, and on the production of a copy of such order, certified under the seal of such court, to issue his warrant to levy the same by distress, and if no sufficient distress can be had, to commit such party to the common gaol, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, until such costs or money be paid, or until he be otherwise legally discharged.

Section 25. If any overseers be ordered to pay costs or charges as aforesaid, and the township liable therefor be out of the jurisdiction of such court, it shall be the duty of the court of quarter sessions of the county in which such township is situate, on request to them made, and on the production of a copy of such order, certified under the seal of the court making the same, to compel payment of such costs and charges according to law.

Section 26. If any poor person shall come out of any city or district in this Commonwealth into any other district, and shall happen to fall sick or die, before he have gained a settlement therein, so that he cannot be removed, the overseers of such district shall, as soon as conveniently may be, give notice to the guardians or overseers of the city or district where such person had last gained a settlement, or to one of them, of the name, circumstances and condition of such poor person; and if the guardians or overseers to whom such notice shall be given shall neglect or refuse to pay the monies expended for the use of such poor person, and to take order for relieving and maintaining him, or in case of his death before such notice could be given, shall, on request made, neglect or refuse to pay the monies expended in maintaining and burying such poor person, in every such case it shall be the duty of the court of quarter sessions of the county where such poor person was last settled, upon complaint to them made, to compel payment by such guardians or overseers of all such sums of money as were necessarily expended for such purpose, in the manner directed by law in the case of a judgment obtained against overseers.

Section 27. If any magistrate shall refuse to grant a warrant or order of removal as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the overseers aggrieved by such refusal to appeal to the next court of quarter sessions of the county in which such magistrate resides, who shall thereupon hear and finally determine the same.

Section 28. If any person shall bring, or cause to be brought, any poor person from any place without this Commonwealth to any place within it, and there leave or attempt to leave such person, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of 75 dollars for every such poor person, to be sued for and recovered by the overseers of the district into which such poor person may have been brought; and moreover, shall be obliged to convey such poor person out of the Commonwealth, or support him at his own expense.

Section 29. Provided, that if by the laws of any other State it shall be lawful to remove from this Commonwealth to such other State any poor person having a settlement in such other State, then and in such case it shall be lawful for the competent authority to remove from such other State into this Commonwealth any poor person having a settlement in this Commonwealth.

Section 30. If any person shall bring, or cause to be brought, into this Commonwealth, any black or coloured indented servant, above the age of 28 years, such person, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, shall respectively be liable to the guardians or overseers of the city or district to which such black or coloured person shall become chargeable for such necessary expenses as such guardians or overseers may be put to for his maintenance, support and interment, together with the costs thereon.

Section 31. Every person in whom the ownership or right to the service of any negro or mulatto slave shall be vested shall be liable, to the overseers of the district in which such negro or mulatto shall become chargeable, for all expenses which such overseers may be put to for the maintenance, support and interment of such negro or mulatto, with the costs thereon.

Section 32. The father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children and grandchildren of every poor person not able to work, shall at their own charge, being of sufficient ability, relieve and maintain such poor person, at such rate as the court of quarter sessions of the county where such poor person resides shall order and direct, on pain of forfeiting a sum not exceeding 20 dollars for every month they shall fail therein; which shall be levied by the process of the said court, and applied to the relief and maintenance of such poor person.

Section 33. If any man shall separate himself from his wife, without reasonable cause, or shall desert desert his children, or if any woman shall desert her children, leaving them a charge upon the district, in any such case it shall be lawful for any two magistrates of the county, upon complaint made by the overseers of the district, to issue their warrant to such overseers, therein authorizing them to take and seize so much of the goods and chattels, and receive so much of the rents and profits of the real estate of such man or woman, as in the judgment of the said magistrates shall be sufficient to provide for such wife and to maintain and bring up such children, which sum or amount shall be specified in such warrant; but if sufficient real or personal estate cannot be found, then to take the body of such man (or woman) and bring him (or her) before such magistrate, at a time to be specified in such warrant.

Section 34. It shall be lawful for such magistrate, on the return of such warrant, to require security from such man or woman for his or her appearance at the next court of quarter sessions of the county, there to abide the order of the court, and for want of such security, to commit such person to the gaol of the county.

Section 35. The warrant aforesaid shall be returned to the next court of quarter sessions of the county, when it shall be lawful for the said court to make an order for the payment of such sums as they shall think reasonable for the purpose aforesaid, and therein authorizing the overseers to dispose of the goods and chattels aforesaid, by sale or otherwise, and to collect and receive the rents and profits aforesaid, or so much of either as in the judgment of the court shall be sufficient for the purpose aforesaid; but if there be no real or personal estate, it shall be lawful for the court to commit such person to the gaol of the county, there to remain until he or she comply with such order, give security for the performance thereof, or be discharged by due course of law.

Section 36. The following described persons shall be liable to the penalties imposed by law upon vagrants.

1. All persons who shall unlawfully return into any district whence they have been legally removed, without bringing a certificate from the city or district to which they belong.

2. All persons who, not having wherewith to maintain themselves and their families, live idly and without employment, and refuse to work for usual and common wages given to other labourers in the like work in the place where they then are.

3. All persons who shall refuse to perform the work which shall be allotted to them by the overseers of the poor as aforesaid.

4. All persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways or other roads, to beg or gather alms, and all other persons wandering abroad and begging.

5. All persons who shall come from any place without this Commonwealth to any place within it, and shall follow no labour, trade, occupation or business, and have no visible means of sustenance, and can give no reasonable account of themselves or their business in such place.

Section 37. It shall be lawful for the directors of the poor of any county, and for the overseers of any district, as the case may be, in which any person shall have become chargeable, to sue for and recover any real or personal estate belonging to such person, and to sell or otherwise dispose of the personal property, and to collect and receive the rents and profits of the real estate, and to apply the proceeds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses incurred in the support and funeral of such person; and if any balance shall remain, the same shall be paid over to the legal representatives of such person after his death, upon demand made and security being given, to indemnify such directors or overseers from the claims of all other persons.

Section 38. It shall be the duty of the directors of the poor of the several counties in which poor-houses are or may be erected once in every year, after their accounts shall have been audited and settled, to make out a full and correct statement of their receipts and expenditures for the preceding year, together with a statement of the number of poor persons supported, specifying their sex, age and infirmity, if any, and of the profits arising from all farms under their directions; and it shall be the duty of such directors annually, in the month of March, to publish such accounts and statements at least twice, in two or more newspapers, printed in such county, the expense of which shall be paid out of the county treasury, and forthwith to transmit a copy of such accounts and statement to the Governor, to be by him transmitted to the Legislature.

Section 39. It shall be the duty of every justice who shall by virtue of any law of this Commonwealth receive any fine, penalty or forfeiture, appropriated by law for the use of the poor, forthwith to enter at length on his docket the name of the person convicted, the offence committed, the amount of such fine, penalty or forfeiture, and the time when the same was paid, and forthwith to deliver a correct transcript of such entry to a constable of the township; and such justice shall, on demand, pay over the same to the overseers of the poor lawfully entitled thereto, and shall annually, if required, exhibit his docket to the inspection of the township auditors.

Section 40. If any justice shall wilfully neglect or refuse to perform the duties enjoined on him as aforesaid, touching any fine, penalty or forfeiture, appropriated to the use of the poor, he shall, on conviction thereof, in the court of quarter sessions of the proper county, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and fined, for the use of the poor of the township in which he shall reside, any sum not exceeding 20 dollars; and if he shall be convicted of neglecting or refusing to pay over, on demand, to the proper overseers any money which he shall have received as aforesaid, he shall be fined, over and above the fine last mentioned, any sum not exceeding double the amount which he shall have received as aforesaid, which sums shall be recovered by process of said court.

Section 41. It shall be the duty of the overseers of every district to demand from every justice the amount of any fine, penalty or forfeiture that may have been received by him for the use of the poor; and if the same be not paid to them within twenty days, to proceed to recover the same by suit against such justice, in the manner that debts of the like amount are or may be by law recoverable.

Section 42. It shall be the duty of the clerk of every court by whom any fine shall be imposed, which by law is to be appropriated in whole or in part to the use of the poor, forthwith to deliver a written notice of the same to a constable living in or near the township in which the person fined resides, for which service such clerk shall receive the sum of 25 cents from the proper overseers, and no more.

Section 43. It shall be the duty of the constable to whom any transcript or certificate shall be delivered by a justice of the peace or clerk of court as aforesaid, under a penalty of 10 dollars, to be recovered before any other justice of the proper county, to deliver such transcript or certificate to one of the overseers of the district to which such fine, penalty or forfeiture belongs, and for such service such constable shall be entitled to receive from such overseers the sum of 25 cents, and no more.

Section 44. It shall be the duty of every sheriff who shall have received any fine, penalty or forfeiture, which by law may be appropriated to the use of the poor, to pay the same, on demand, to the proper overseers, and if he shall fail to do so within 10 days after demand, he shall, on conviction thereof, in the court of quarter sessions of the proper county, be fined and pay to the use of the poor of the proper district, any sum not exceeding double the amount received by him, to be recovered by the process of the said court.

Section 45. In all cases where there are no poor persons supported at the expense of a district, or where there shall remain in the hands of the overseers, at the end of the year, an unexpended balance arising from fines, penalties or forfeitures received for the use of the poor, it shall be the duty of the overseers to pay all such fines, penalties and forfeitures as may have been received by them, and such unexpended balance to the supervisors of the highways, to be applied to the repair of the public roads in such district, unless the township auditors shall judge it necessary that the whole, or part thereof, should be retained as a fund for the use of the poor.

Section 46. If any overseer shall neglect or refuse to perform any duty enjoined upon him by law, and not otherwise provided for, he shall be liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding 100 dollars, at the discretion of the court, to be recovered by the process thereof.

Section 47. The several fines, forfeitures and penalties, and other sums of money imposed or directed to be paid by this Act, and not herein directed to be otherwise recovered, shall be levied and recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the delinquent or offender, by warrant under the hand and seal of any one magistrate of the city or county where such delinquent or offender dwells, or where such goods and chattels may be found; and after satisfaction made of such fines, forfeitures, penalties and sums of money, together with the legal charges on the recovery thereof, the overplus, if any, shall be returned to the owner of such goods and chattels, his executors or administrators.

Section 48. If any person shall be aggrieved by the judgment of any one or more magistrates, in pursuance of this Act, he may appeal to the next court of quarter sessions for the county in which such magistrates reside, (except in cases hereinbefore specially provided for,) whose decision in all such cases shall be final and conclusive.

Section 49. The word "district," in this Act, shall be construed and taken to mean "township" and "borough," and every other territorial or municipal division, in and for which officers charged with the relief and support of the poor are directed or authorized by law to be chosen; but nothing in this Act contained shall be taken to repeal or otherwise interfere with any special provision made by law for any city, county, township, borough or other territorial or municipal divisions.

THE LAWS relating to the RELIEF and EMPLOYMENT of the POOR, in the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark, and the Townships of the Northern Liberties and Penn.

Of the Election of Guardians—the Style and Powers of the Corporation—and of its Organization and Officers.

[ACT of 5th of March 1828.]

Election of guardians.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia, the commissioners of the incorporated district of the Northern Liberties, the commissioners of the district of Southwark, the commissioners of Spring Garden, choosing for the township of Penn, and the commissioners of the Kensington district, choosing for said district and the unincorporated part of the Northern Liberties, shall meet on the third Monday of May next, each body in its usual place of meeting, at three o'clock in the afternoon, or as soon thereafter as may be, and shall elect and choose as follows: that is to say, the said select and common councils, by joint vote, shall elect six respectable citizens, inhabitants* of the city; the commissioners of the incorporated district of the Northern Liberties shall elect two respectable citizens, inhabitants of said district; the commissioners of the district of Southwark shall elect two respectable citizens, inhabitants of said district; the commissioners of Spring Garden shall elect one respectable citizen, an inhabitant of Penn township, and the commissioners of the Kensington district shall elect one respectable citizen, residing in said district, or in the unincorporated part of the Northern Liberties, to be guardians of the poor of the said city, districts and township. And the said electing bodies shall, by their respective clerks, give notice in writing to each of the persons so chosen, within two days thereafter; and it shall be the duty of the said guardians of the poor, on the fourth Monday of May next, to meet at the almshouse in the city of Philadelphia, at three o'clock in the afternoon, and each of them shall take an oath or affirmation, to be administered by any alderman of the city, or justice of the peace of the county of Philadelphia, that he will discharge the office of guardian of the poor truly and impartially, to the best of his knowledge and ability. The said guardians shall then form themselves into a board, and shall appoint one of their own body as president, who shall preside over their deliberations. The said guardians shall then divide themselves by lot as follows: the six from the city shall be divided into three classes; two of whom shall serve for one year, two for two years, and two for three years, and the select and common councils shall annually thereafter, on the third Monday of May, in manner aforesaid, elect guardians to supply the place of those who shall go out of office. The guardians from the district of the Northern Liberties, and the district of Southwark, shall respectively divide themselves into two classes: two of whom, that is, one from each district, shall serve for two years, and the other two for three years; and it shall be the duty of the said districts respectively, on the third Monday of May in any year, when a vacancy may occur, to meet and elect as aforesaid, guardians to supply the place of those who shall go out of office. The guardians from Penn township and the district of Kensington shall respectively serve three years; and it shall be the duty of the said commissioners of Spring Garden and Kensington districts respectively, on the third Monday of May, in manner aforesaid, to elect guardians to supply the place of those whose term of office shall expire. All guardians appointed after the third Monday in May next, shall be elected for three years: Provided always, that whenever a vacancy shall occur in the said board of guardians by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the electing body in whose district the vacancy may occur, within ten days after notice from said board of guardians, to proceed to fill such vacancy in manner aforesaid; and in case such electing body shall neglect or refuse to fill such vacancy within ten days after due notice given to them in writing, then it shall and may be lawful for the said board of guardians to appoint a suitable person to fill the same: and provided, the said guardians during their continuance in office shall be exempted from the duties of jurors, and from military services; and all guardians may be re-elected as often as they are willing to serve.

SECTION 15. If any person appointed to be one of the guardians of the poor within this corporation, not having before served therein as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to take upon himself the said office, he shall forfeit 60 dollars to the said corporation, for the use of the poor of the said city, district and township, to be levied by warrant issued by the mayor of the city of Philadelphia, or of two justices of the township of the northern liberties or the district of Southwark. And if any guardian of the poor shall remove from said city, district and township, he shall, before such his removal, deliver over to some other guardian of the poor of the said city, district or township, his accounts, books, papers, money and other things concerning his office. And upon the death of any guardian, his executors or administrators shall within 40 days after his decease, or within 40 days after they undertake the execution of the will or administration of the estate of such deceased guardian, deliver over all things concerning his office to some other guardian as aforesaid, and shall also pay out of the assets all monies remaining due, which he received by virtue of his office, before any of his other debts are paid, saving funeral charges.

SECTION 4. The said board of guardians, or a majority of them, shall annually appoint one of their own body, removable at their pleasure, to act as treasurer of the said corporation, who shall, before he enters on the execution of his office, enter into a bond to the said board of guardians, with two or more sufficient freehold sureties, in the sum of 10,000 dollars, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office; and that at the expiration thereof, or his removal from the same, he, or in case of his death, his legal representatives, shall well and truly pay, and deliver over to his successor, all monies, books, accounts and papers, belonging to the said corporation which shall then be remaining in his or their hands or possession; and it shall be the duty of the collector or collectors to pay once in every week, and render an account of all monies which they shall respectively have received, for or on account of the said poor-tax, to the said treasurer, who shall give a receipt or receipts to such collector or collectors for the money which he or they shall from time to time pay to him, which said receipt or receipts shall be a good and sufficient discharge to the said collector or collectors for so much money as may be therein expressed to have been received. It shall be the duty of such treasurer to pay out of the money belonging to the said corporation in his hand all orders that may be lawfully drawn on him by order of the said board of guardians, signed by the president, or in his absence, by the chairman for the time being, and countersigned by the secretary.

The board of guardians shall appoint six suitable persons, citizens of, and residing in, the city or districts for which they may be appointed, as visitors of the poor, viz., one for the city, one for the incorporated district of the Northern Liberties, one for the district of Southwark, one for Penn township, and one for the Kensington district and one for the unincorporated Northern Liberties, who shall each receive such compensation, payable at such times as the board of guardians may from time to time think proper; that the said visitors shall be continued in office at the discretion of the board, and shall give such security for the faithful performance of their duty as may be required. That it shall be the duty of the visitors to act as agents under the direction of the board of guardians, and when called upon by an applicant for relief, or by a citizen, in behalf of any poor persons, to visit such party without delay, and after full examination, to report in writing the particulars of the case to the next meeting of the board of guardians, stating the residence, name, age, sex, colour, birth-place, number of children, if any; on receipt of which report, the board, if satisfied of the necessity of the case, shall direct the mode and determine the amount of relief to be furnished to such applicant, and shall also cause the name, residence and amount of relief directed to be furnished to be entered into a book to be kept for that purpose. Provided, that in all cases of sudden emergencies, when the party cannot be removed to the hospital or almshouse, it shall be the duty of the visitor, with the consent and approbation of one of the guardians, to administer such relief and assistance as the case may require; the particulars of the case and amount of relief to be reported to the next meeting of the guardians, who shall take such order therein as they may think proper. And provided also, that after the necessary accommodations are prepared in the hospital, almshouse or other buildings, all relief granted to the outdoor poor shall be temporary, and consist entirely of fuel, provisions, clothing, medicines and medical attendance. Provided always, that said guardians may from time to time appoint such number of sub-visitors, and also such other officers as they may deem necessary, for the purpose of carrying the objects and provisions of this law into effect.

SECTION 3. On the second Tuesday of December annually, the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia, by joint vote, shall select six members of their own bodies; the commissioners of the unincorporated district of the Northern Liberties and the commissioners of the district of Southwark shall each select two members of their own bodies respectively; and the commissioners of Spring Garden and the commissioners of Kensington district shall each select one member of their own bodies respectively, to be directors of the poor-tax; and the 12 persons thus elected shall be styled, "The Directors of the Poor-tax." It shall be the duty of the said directors of the poor-tax, on the second Monday of January annually, and at such other times as they shall be requested by the guardians of the poor, to meet at the almshouse, or such other place as may be designated by the guardians of the poor; and it shall be the duty of the guardians of the poor to make and exhibit to the said directors estimates of the probable amount of money that may be required for the relief, support and employment of the poor for the current year; and the said directors, or a majority of them, shall proceed to make and lay such rate or assessment for the purpose aforesaid as may be necessary, not exceeding 50 cents on the 100 dollars at any one time, upon the value of all the real and personal estate within the said districts and townships respectively, and not more than one dollar per head on every freeman in any 50-cents tax, and so in proportion for every less rate on the county assessment.* The directors in laying the rates as aforesaid shall be guided by the county assessments made or to be made, having due regard to every man's estate within the said city, districts and townships so to be rated and assessed; and shall cause such rates to be fairly entered in a book and signed by said directors, which shall be delivered to the said guardians; and shall also return to the respective corporations a statement of the amount of money required and the rate of assessment laid; and the said guardians shall permit any inhabitant to inspect the rates at all reasonable times, without any charge, and shall give copies on demand, being paid at the rate of six cents for every 24 names; and the said guardians shall, immediately after the rates and assessments are returned by the directors of the poor-tax as aforesaid, cause the necessary number of duplicates to be made in alphabetical order, or otherwise, as the said board may direct. Provided always, that no money shall at any time be raised by way of loan or on credit, by or on behalf of the said guardians of the poor, without the consent of the said directors of the poor-tax to the raising of such money first had and obtained, excepting the loans to be made pursuant to the authority given by the 11th section of this Act.

SECTION 6. It shall be the duty of the said board of guardians, or a majority of them, to appoint and employ fit persons, who are citizens, and each of whom shall actually reside within the city, districts or townships to which his duplicate has reference, and in which he is to collect, to be collectors of the poor-tax, assessed or imposed, or hereafter to be assessed or imposed, upon the inhabitants of said city, districts and townships as aforesaid, which said collectors so to be appointed shall, with two freehold sureties to be joined therein, severally make and execute a bond or bonds, with warrants of attorney, to confess judgment unto the said board of guardians, in a sum equal to double the amount of his or their duplicate, with a condition or conditions thereunto severally annexed for the true and faithful performance of all and singular the duties and services which shall or may be lawfully imposed upon and required from such collector or collectors respectively; upon which judgment shall be entered forthwith in the prothonotaries office of any court having jurisdiction to the amount of the penalty, and after being so entered, are hereby declared to be and operate, from the time of filling the same, as a lien upon the lands and tenements of the said collectors and their sureties, until the final

SECTION 7. The said collector or collectors, appointed as aforesaid, on the receipt of their respective duplicates, shall from time to time levy and raise from all and every the said inhabitants of the city, districts and townships aforesaid, and of and from their respective estates, chattels and effects, all such sums of money as shall be assessed and imposed upon the said inhabitants respectively, or their respective estates as aforesaid; and it shall be the duty of the said collectors to give a written or printed notice to every taxable inhabitant residing or holding property within the district wherein he is appointed to collect the said tax, or to the agent, attorney or representative of such taxable, stating the sums respectively due, and requiring him or her to pay the same within two months; and all those who shall neglect to pay their tax within the time aforesaid shall be called upon by the collector in person at least once at their respective dwellings or places of abode, and payment of the said tax demanded; and in case of non-payment thereof, he shall within 30 days thereafter distrain their goods, chattels and effects, wherever found, or of the tenant in possession therefor; which goods, chattels and effects so levied upon and distrained shall be irrepleviable, and may be removed by the said collector to his own dwelling-house, or elsewhere within the district, and sold at public sale by the collector within 10 days after the distress so as aforesaid made, five days' notice of such sale being publicly given in one of the newspapers and by handbills put up in the most public places; and it shall be the duty of the said collector, when and as often as he shall seize and make distress as aforesaid, to furnish and deliver at the time of making the same to the owner or owners thereof, a true and perfect inventory of the goods, chattels and effects so as aforesaid distrained, and also to furnish to the owner or owners a true account of the sales of the said goods and chattels; and if any surplus should remain after payment of the taxes due, and reasonable costs and charges incident to the sale and distress as aforesaid, then and in such case, the collector shall pay over to the owner or owners aforesaid such surplus; and in case of neglect or refusal within three days after such sale, if demanded, the collector shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 20 per cent., to be calculated upon the said surplus, to be recovered, together with such surplus, before any alderman or justice of the peace, any laws, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided, that it shall be lawful for any person or persons whose goods, chattels or personal property may be levied upon and sold as aforesaid, or who may pay the taxes, rates or levies as aforesaid, by action of debt or otherwise, to recover the amount so paid, or the value of the goods and chattels levied on and sold, together with all costs and damages, against the owner or owners of the real estate, or, at his or their election, to defalcate the amount thereof in payment of any rent which may be due to the owner or owners of such estate, unless such defalcation or recovery would impair any contract or agreement between them previously made: And provided also, that the provisions of the Act of the 3d of February 1824, intituled, "An Act relating to taxes on certain real estate in the city and county of Philadelphia," be and the same is hereby extended to all rates and assessments which shall be laid by virtue of this Act. And it shall be the duty of the said collector or collectors to keep an exact account of all sums of money rated and collected by them, and all such sums of money as are rated and not collected by them, and the examination and final settlement of the accounts of the said collector or collectors shall belong to the said board of guardians, who shall have full power and authority to allow and deduct such parts thereof only as to them shall seem just and reasonable; and the powers hereby given and granted to the said collectors shall in such case remain in full force, until the whole of their respective duplicates shall be collected, unless the said board of guardians shall think fit to rescind and annul such powers, which they may at any time, when to them there shall appear to be a reasonable cause, have power to do.

SECTION 16.* If any person who has or shall come to inhabit in the said city, district, or townships, shall for himself, and on his own account, execute any public office, being legally placed therein, in the said city, district or townships, during one whole year, or if any person shall be charged with, and pay his or her share towards the public taxes or levies for the poor of the said city, district or townships, for two years successively, or if any person shall really and bonâ fide take a lease of any lands or tenements in the said city, district or townships, of the yearly value of 10 l., and shall dwell in or upon the same for one whole year at one and the same time, and pay the said rent, or shall become seised of any freehold estate in any lands or tenements in the said city, district or townships, and shall dwell in or upon the same for one whole year, or if any unmarried person, not having children or child, shall be lawfully bound or hired as a servant in the said city, district or townships, and shall continue and abide in such service during one whole year, or if any person shall be duly bound an apprentice by indenture, and shall inhabit in the said city, district or townships, with his or her master or mistress, for one whole year, or if any indented servant, legally and directly imported from Europe into this State, who shall serve with his or her master or mistress in the said city, district or townships, six months immediately after his or her arrival, or who, after having so served in any other place within the State, shall duly serve any master or mistress in the said city, district or townships, for the space of one year, such persons, in any of these cases, shall be adjudged and deemed to gain a legal settlement in the said city, district or townships: Provided, that every illegitimate child shall be held and taken to be legally settled in the place of legal settlement of the mother at the time of the birth of such child: And provided also, that any married woman shall be deemed, during coverture and after her husband's death, to be legally settled in the place where he was last legally settled; but if he shall have no known legal settlement, then she shall be deemed, whether he is living or dead, to be legally settled in the place where she was last legally settled before marriage.

Persons coming into the city with a certificate.

How to be removed.

SECTION 19. If any person or persons shall after the publication of this Act come out of any borough, township or place within this State, into the said city, district or township of the Northern Liberties, there to inhabit and reside, and shall at the same time procure, bring and deliver unto the guardians of the poor of the said city, district and township, a certificate under the hands and seals of the overseers of the poor of the borough, township or place whence he, she or they removed, to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, thereby acknowledging the person or persons mentioned in the said certificate to be an inhabitant or inhabitants legally settled in that borough, township or place, every such certificate, having been allowed of and subscribed by one or more justices of the peace of the county where such borough, township or place doth lie, shall oblige the said borough, township or place, to provide for the persons mentioned in the said certificate, together with his or her family, as inhabitants of that place, whenever he, she or they shall happen to become chargeable, or be obliged to ask relief of the said city, district and township; and then, and not before, it shall and may be lawful for any such person, and his or her children, though born in the said city, district or township, and his or her servants and apprentices, not having otherwise acquired a legal settlement therein, to be removed, conveyed and settled in the borough, township or place whence such certificate was brought: and the witnesses who attest the execution of the certificate by the overseers, or one of the said witnesses, shall make oath or affirmation, according to law, before the justice or justices who are to allow the same, that such witness or witnesses did see the overseers of the poor, whose names and seals are thereunto subscribed and set, severally sign and seal the said certificate, and the names of such witnesses attesting the said certificate, are of their own proper handwriting; which said justice or justices shall also certify that such oath or affirmation was made before him or them; and every such certificate so allowed, and oath or affirmation of the execution thereof so certified by the said justice or justices, shall be taken and received as evidence without other proof thereof; and no person so coming by certificate into the said city, district or township, nor an apprentice or servant to such person, shall be deemed or adjudged by any act whatsoever to have gained a legal settlement therein, unless such person shall, after the date of such certificate, execute some public annual office, being legally placed therein, in the said city, district or township.

Persons coming in without certificate not to gain a settlement, unless, &c.

SECTION 20. No person whomsoever who shall come into the said city, district or township, without such certificate as aforesaid, (mariners and other healthy persons coming from Europe excepted) shall gain a legal settlement therein, unless such person shall give security, if required, at his or her coming into the same, or within three months thereafter, for indemnifying and discharging the said city, district and township, to be allowed by any one alderman of the said city, or justice of the peace residing in the district or township aforesaid.

Settlement of negroes.

SECTION 28. And whereas negroes and mulattoes liberated after the age of 28 years, and others not having legal settlement within this corporation and elsewhere, frequently come to inhabit and reside

* This section re-enacts the 16th, 17th and 18th sections of the Act of 1803, with this difference, that by the 17th section of that Act, an indented servant imported from Europe could gain a settlement by serving with his master 60 days; now the service must be six months.

As to all other persons coming from Europe or elsewhere, they can gain no settlement except in the manner pointed out in the section.

Of Orders of Removal.

[ACT of 29th of March 1803.]

SECTION 21. Upon complaint being made by the guardians of the poor of the said city, district and township, to any one or more of the aldermen of the said city, or to one or more of the justices of the peace of the county, residing in the said district or township, that any person or persons therein is or are likely to become chargeable, it shall and may be lawful to and for any two aldermen of the said city, or any two justices of the peace of the county residing in the said district or township, by their warrant or order directed to the said guardians of the poor, to remove and convey such person or persons to the borough, township, state or place where he, she or they was or were last legally settled, unless such person or persons shall give sufficient security to discharge and indemnify the said city, district and township. Provided always, that if any person or persons shall think him, her or themselves aggrieved by any order of removal made by any of the said aldermen or justices, such person or persons may appeal to the next mayor's court for the said city or the next court of quarter sessions of the peace for the said county from whence such poor persons shall be removed, and not elsewhere, which said court shall determine the same; and if there be any defects of form in such order, the magistrates or justices composing such court shall cause the same to be rectified and amended, without any cost to the party, and after such amendment shall proceed to hear the truth and merits of the cause; but no such order of removal shall be proceeded upon unless reasonable notice be given by the said guardians of the poor unto the overseers of the borough, township or place from which the removal shall be, the reasonableness of which notice shall be determined by the court to which the appeal is made; and if it shall appear to such court that reasonable time of notice was not given, then the appeal shall be adjourned to their next sessions, when and where the same shall be finally determined.

Orders of removal,
how to be made.

Appeal allowed.

SECTION 22. For the more effectual prevention of vexatious removals and frivolous appeals, the mayor's court for the city, or the court of quarter sessions for the county of Philadelphia, upon any appeal concerning the settlement of any poor persons, or upon any proof before them there to be made of notice of any such appeal to have been given by the proper officer to the guardians of the poor of the said city, district and township, or to the overseers of the poor of any borough, township or place, (though they did not afterwards prosecute such appeal) shall at the same sessions order to the party in whose behalf such appeal shall be determined, or to whom such notice did appear to have been given, such costs and charges as by the said court in their discretion shall be thought most reasonable and just, to be paid by the guardians, overseers, or any other persons against whom such appeal shall be determined, or by the person that did give such notice; and if the person ordered to pay such costs and charges shall live out of the jurisdiction of the said court, any justice of the peace where such person shall inhabit, shall, on request to him made, and a true copy of the order for the payment of such costs and charges, certified under the hand of the clerk of the court, by his warrant cause the same to be levied by distress, and if no such distress can be had, shall commit such person to the common gaol, until he pays the said costs and charges, or be otherwise legally discharged; and if the said court on such appeal shall determine in favour of the appellant, that such poor person was unduly removed, they shall at the same session order and award to such appellant so much money as shall appear to them to have been paid by the city, district, borough, township or place, on whose behalf such appeal was made towards the relief of such poor person, between the time of such undue removal and the determination of such appeal, with the cost aforesaid, the said money so awarded, and the cost, to be recovered in the same manner as costs and charges awarded against an appellant are to be recovered by virtue of this Act as aforesaid.

Penalty on overseers refusing to receive a pauper removed by warrant.

SECTION 25. If any person be removed by virtue of this Act from any borough, township or county to the said city, district of Southwark, or township of the Northern Liberties, by warrant or order of any two justices of the peace of any county, under their hands and seals, or from the said city, district or township to any other township, borough, county or place, by warrant or order of any two aldermen of the said city, or two justices of the peace residing in the said district or township, under their hands and seals as aforesaid, the guardians or overseers of the poor of the city, borough, township or place to which such person shall be so removed are hereby required to receive the said person; and if any of the said guardians or overseers shall refuse or neglect so to do, he or they so offending, upon proof thereof by one or more credible witnesses, upon oath or affirmation before any one of the aldermen of the said city, or justices of the peace residing in the said district or township, or justices of the peace of any township, borough or county, where the offender doth reside, shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20 dollars, to the use respectively of the poor of the said city, district and township, or other township or borough from which such person was removed, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and seal of the said alderman or justice of the peace as aforesaid, which he is hereby required and empowered to make, directed to the constable of the city, district, township or borough where such offender or offenders dwell, returning the overplus, if any there be, to the owner or owners; and for want of sufficient distress, then the offender to be committed to the gaol of the county where he dwells, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for the space of 30 days.

Bill of expenses in relieving a poor person sworn or affirmed to by a guardian, and certified under corporate seal, to be evidence, but not conclusive evidence, of the amount against the township, &c. bound to pay the same.

SECTION 27. And whereas it may frequently happen that the place of last legal settlement of poor and indigent persons may be far distant from the city of Philadelphia, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where any person not having legal settlement within the city of Philadelphia, the township of the Northern Liberties, or the district of Southwark, shall be relieved and provided for temporarily by the guardians of the poor in the city of Philadelphia, district of Southwark, and the township of the Northern Liberties, it shall and may be lawful for the said guardians to transmit with the poor or indigent person or persons so as aforesaid relieved to his last place of legal settlement a bill containing the amount of monies expended in the relief of such poor indigent person or persons, certified under the seal of the corporation, and attested by the oath or affirmation of the guardian furnishing or expending the same, which said bill, so certified and attested, shall be received by the overseers or justices of the township or place where the said poor or indigent person or persons were last legally settled as evidence, but not conclusive evidence, of the amount, if upon an appeal the settlement shall be affirmed; and in case the overseers of the place or township to which such poor and indigent person or persons shall be removed, or the parties removing, as the case may be, shall appeal from the judgment of the said justices to the court of quarter sessions of the county to which such removal shall be made, the said court shall receive the said bill so as aforesaid certified and attested as evidence, but not conclusive evidence, of the amount; and the overseers of the place or township to which such poor and indigent person or persons shall be so as aforesaid removed shall be liable to pay the amount adjudged to be due, whether notice has been given to them or not, of the paupers being within the corporation of the guardians of the poor in the city of Philadelphia, district of Southwark and the township of the Northern Liberties, any law, usage or custom to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

Of Paupers too ill to remove.

[ACT of 29th of March 1803.]

Poor persons coming from the country into the city, &c., and falling sick or dying, guardians to give notice to the overseers of the place where such persons last had a legal settlement.

Mode of proceeding in case of refusal to reimburse expenses.

SECTION 26. If any poor person or persons shall remove out of the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark and the township of the Northern Liberties, into any other township, borough, or place within this State, or shall remove out of any borough, township or place into the said city, district or township of the Northern Liberties, and shall fall sick or die before he or she hath gained a legal settlement in the said city, district and township, or other township or borough to which he or she shall come, so that such person or persons cannot be removed, the guardians of the said city, district and township of the Northern Liberties, or overseers of the said other township or borough, into which such person or persons is or are to come, or one of them, shall, as soon as conveniently may be, respectively give notice to the overseers of such township or borough, or to the guardians of the said city, district and township of the Northern Liberties (as it may happen to be necessary) where such person or persons had last gained a legal settlement, or to one of the said overseers or guardians, of the name, circumstances and conditions of such person or persons. And if such overseers of a township or borough, or guardians of the said city, district and township of the Northern Liberties, to whom such notice shall be so given, shall neglect or refuse to pay the money expended, as well before as after the said notice, for the use of such poor person or persons, and to take order for relieving and maintaining such poor person or persons, or in case of his, her or their death, before notice can be given as aforesaid, shall on request being made, neglect or refuse to pay the money expended in maintaining and burying such poor person or persons, then and in every such case, it shall be lawful for any two aldermen of the said city, or justices residing in the said district or township of the Northern Liberties, or for any two justices of the peace (not residing in the said district or township of the Northern Liberties) of the county where such poor person or persons were last legally settled, and they are hereby authorized and required, upon complaint made to them, to cause all such sums of money as were necessarily expended for the maintenance of such poor person or persons during the whole time of his, her or their sickness, and in case he, she or they die, for his, her or their burial, by warrant under their hands and seals, to be directed to some constable of the said city, district or township of the Northern Liberties, or of such other township or borough, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said guardian or guardians, overseer or overseers of the poor, so neglecting or refusing to be paid to the guardians or overseers aforesaid, where such poor person or persons happened to be sick, or to die as aforesaid; and the overplus of the monies arising by sale of such goods, remaining in the constable's hands, after the sum of money ordered to be paid, together with the cost of distress, are satisfied, shall be restored to the owner or owners of the said goods. Provided always, that if any of the said guardians of the poor, or the overseers as aforesaid, shall think him or themselves aggrieved by any sentence of such justices, or by their refusal to make any order as aforesaid, he or they may appeal to the next mayor's court for the said city, or to the next court of quarter sessions for the county where where such guardians or overseers reside, and not elsewhere, who are hereby authorized and required to hear and finally to determine the same.

Of Persons Chargeable, or likely to become so, brought into the District—and the Remedies against those who bring them or entertain them.

SECTION 23. Upon information given to the mayor or recorder of the city of Philadelphia for the time being, together with one of the aldermen of the said city, or to any two justices of the peace of the county of Philadelphia, residing in the said district of Southwark or the township of the Northern Liberties, that any old persons, infants, maimed, lunatics or any vagabond or vagrant persons are imported, come or are brought within the said city, district or township, the said mayor or recorder and alderman as aforesaid, or any two justices of the peace for the county of Philadelphia, residing in the said district or township, shall cause such aged person, infants or impotent vagrant persons to be brought before them; and if upon examination they shall judge that such person or persons are likely to become chargeable to the said city, district or township, it shall and may be lawful for the said mayor or recorder and alderman, or two justices of the peace as aforesaid, by warrant or otherwise, to send for the master or merchant, or other person, who imported any such infant, lunatic, aged, maimed, impotent or vagrant person or persons as are likely to become chargeable as aforesaid, and upon proof made of their being the importers or owners of such ship or vessel in which such infant, lunatic, aged, maimed, impotent or vagrant persons who shall be judged likely to become chargeable as aforesaid, were imported, then the said mayor or recorder and alderman, or any two of the justices as aforesaid, shall and may compel the said master, merchant or importer of such infant, lunatic, maimed, aged, impotent or vagrant person or persons, to give sufficient security to carry and transport such infant, lunatic, maimed, aged, impotent or vagrant person or persons, to the place or places whence such person or persons were imported or brought from, or otherwise to indemnify the inhabitants of the said city, district and township from any charge that may come or be brought upon them by such infant, lunatic, maimed, aged, impotent or vagrant person or persons. Provided always, that if any person or persons shall apprehend him or themselves aggrieved with any such order or judgment, the person or persons so aggrieved may appeal to the next mayor's court for the city or the next court of quarter sessions of the county of Philadelphia where such order shall be made, whose judgment shall be final; but before such appeal be allowed, the person or persons appealing shall enter into a recognizance, with one good surety at least, to pay the cost and charges of such appeal in case the said order be confirmed.

SECTION 24. If any housekeeper or inhabitant of the said city, district or township shall hereafter take into, receive or entertain in his or her house or houses any person or persons whomsoever, (all mariners coming into this State, and every other healthy person coming from any foreign port immediately into the said State, only excepted) being persons who have not gained a legal settlement in some other township, borough or place within this State, and shall not give notice in writing, which they are hereby required to do within three days next after the taking into or entertaining any person or persons in his or her house, within the said city, district or township, to the guardians of the poor, or some one of them, of the said city, district and township, such inhabitant or housekeeper being thereof legally convicted by testimony of one credible witness, on oath or affirmation before any one alderman of the city of Philadelphia, or before any one justice of the peace residing in the said district or township, shall forfeit and pay the sum of four dollars for every offence, the one moiety for the use of the poor of the said city, district and township, and the other moiety to the informer, to be levied on the goods and chattels of the delinquent, in the manner hereinafter directed; and for want of sufficient distress, the offender to be committed to the gaol of the city and county of Philadelphia, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for the space of 10 days. And moreover, in case the person or persons so entertained or concealed shall become poor, and unable to maintain him or herself, and cannot be removed to the place of his or her last legal settlement in this or any other State, if any such he or she hath, or shall die, and not have wherewithal to defray the charges of his or her funeral, then and in such case the housekeeper or person convicted of entertaining or concealing such poor person, against the tenor of this Act, shall be obliged to provide for and maintain such poor and indigent person or persons; and in case of such poor person's death shall pay the guardians of the poor so much money as shall be expended on the burying of such poor and indigent person or persons; and upon refusing so to do, it shall be lawful for the guardians of the poor in the said city, district and township, and they are hereby required to assess a sum of money on the person or persons so convicted, from time to time, by a weekly assessment, for maintaining such poor and indigent person or persons, or assess a sum of money for defraying the charges of such poor person's funeral, as the case may be; and in case the party convicted shall refuse to pay the sum of money so assessed or charged to the guardians of the poor for the uses aforesaid, the same shall be levied on the goods and chattels of the offender, in the manner hereinafter directed: but if such person so convicted have no goods or chattels to satisfy the money so assessed for him or her to pay, then it shall and may be lawful for the said aldermen or justices to commit the offender to prison, there to remain until he or she hath paid the same, or until he or she shall be discharged by due course of law.

Of Passengers arriving in Vessels from Foreign Voyages.

[ACT of 5th March 1828.]

SECTION 17. Every master or commander of any ship or other vessel, arriving at the port of Philadelphia, from any country out of the United States, or from any other of the United States than this State, shall, within 24 hours after the arrival of such ship or vessel in the said port, make a report in writing, on oath or affirmation, to the mayor of the city of Philadelphia, or in case of his sickness or absence, to the recorder of said city, or to any alderman or justice of the peace, of the name, place of birth, and last legal settlement, (if known,) age, and occupation of every person who shall have been brought as a passenger in such ship or vessel, on her last voyage from any country out of the United States, into the port of Philadelphia, and of all passengers who shall have

SECTION 18. It shall be lawful for the said mayor, recorder, alderman or justice to require, by a short endorsement on the aforesaid report, every such master or commander of any such ship or vessel to pay to the guardians of the poor the sum of * two dollars and 50 cents. for each passenger not being a citizen of the United States, or, at the option of the said guardians of the poor, to be bound with two sufficient sureties, (to be approved of by the said board of guardians,) to the said guardians of the poor of the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark, and the townships of the Northern Liberties and Penn, in such sum as the said mayor, recorder, alderman or justice may think proper, not exceeding 150 dollars for each passenger not being a citizen of the United States, to indemnify and save harmless the said guardians and their successors, and the inhabitants of the said city, districts and townships, from all and every expense or charge, which shall or may be incurred by them, for the maintenance and support of any such person, or for the support of the child or children of any such persons which may be born after such importation, in case such person, or any such child or children, shall at any time within two years from the date of the said bond become chargeable to the said guardians of the poor, or to the district or townships; and the costs of the proceedings before the mayor and recorder shall be paid by the said master or commander, and a sum not exceeding two dollars for preparing said bond: and that if any such master or commander shall neglect or refuse to pay the aforesaid sum of two dollars and 50 cents. for each passenger, or to give such bond within five days after such vessel have so arrived at the said port of Philadelphia, every such master or commander, and the owner or owners, consignee or consignees of such ship or vessel, severally and respectively, shall be subject to a penalty of 500 dollars for each and every person, not being a citizen of the United States, for whom the mayor or recorder shall have determined that bonds should be given as aforesaid, to be sued for and recovered as hereinafter provided.

SECTION 19. Every ship or vessel on board of which any such person, not being a citizen of the United States, may have been a passenger, shall be liable for the said penalties; and for the purpose of enforcing such liability, a writ in the nature of a writ in an action of debt, may issue from any court, or from any magistrate having jurisdiction of the amount claimed, directed to the sheriff of the city and county of Philadelphia, wherein the masters, owners and consignees of the said ship or vessel, by the said terms and without adding their names, shall be defendants, and a clause shall be inserted commanding the sheriff to seize and attach said ship or vessel, her apparel and furniture, and to keep possession thereof, for the satisfaction of such penalties as may have been incurred during or since the last voyage of said ship or vessel; and said attachment may be dissolved by the said master, owner or consignee of said ship or vessel, giving bond, with sufficient security, to the sheriff for the payment of the said penalties, and every of them, or for paying the value of such ship (to be determined by the most convenient warden of the port and inserted in the bond) or vessel, towards the satisfaction of said penalties, and for the appearance of said master, owner or consignee, to answer to the said suit, which shall then proceed against the said master, owner or assignee, any or all of them thus giving bond, (all of whom, if uniting in the bond, shall be made defendants,) and shall proceed to final judgment; and the persons thus giving bond shall not be permitted to deny their joint or separate liabilities for the said penalties, if the facts be proved; and in such suit the plaintiffs shall be permitted to file a statement of the cause of action, and no judgment shall be reversed for any matter of form, and the said bond, to dissolve the attachment, shall be assignable in the manner of a bail-bond; and if the said attachment shall not be dissolved within 10 days after the return day of said writ, judgment by default shall be given against the masters, owners and consignees of said ship or vessel, for the amount of the penalties claimed in said statement; which statement shall be filed, as well in proceedings before a magistrate, as in those in court; and upon such judgment a fiери facias shall issue to the said sheriff directed; and if the proceedings be before a magistrate, a transcript of his judgment shall be filed in the court of common pleas, and a fiери facias shall issue from said court, under which writ the said ship, apparel and furniture, shall be sold, and the balance, after paying the debt, interest and cost, shall be paid into court for the benefit of those whom it may concern; and the service of said writ, so far as concerns the summoning of masters, owners and consignees, shall be by nailing a copy thereof to the mast of the said vessel or ship.

[ACT of 31st of March 1812.]

SECTION 5. The husband of every wife, whose father or grandfather, mother or grandmother, children or grandchildren, shall be poor, blind, lame, impotent, or otherwise unable to maintain himself or herself, and being within the said city, district or township, not able to work, shall, if of sufficient ability, at his or their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person as the mayor's court for the city, or the court of quarter sessions for the county where such persons reside, shall order and direct, on pain of forfeiting seven dollars for every month he shall fail therein; Provided, that such relief, so furnished by such husband, shall be demanded only where such husband shall have obtained possession of personal property, or be entitled to the rents and profits of real estate belonging to his said wife, and then only to the extent of the value of such property so acquired by his marriage.

Husbands bound to maintain the parents, grand-parents, children and grandchildren of their wives to the extent of the value of the property acquired by their marriage.

SECTION 6. And whereas it sometimes happens that men separate themselves without reasonable cause from their wives, and desert their children, and women also desert their children, leaving them a charge on the said city, district and township, although such persons may have estates, rights and credits, which should contribute to the maintenance of such wives or children; Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful for the guardians of the poor in the said city, district and township, having first obtained a warrant or order from two aldermen of the said city, or from two of the justices of the peace of the county, residing in the said district or township where such wife or children shall be so left or neglected, to take and seize so much of the goods and chattels, rights and credits, and receive so much of the annual rents and profits of the lands and tenements of such husband, father or mother, as such two aldermen or justices shall order and direct, for providing for such wife, and for maintaining and bringing up such child or children; which warrant or order, being confirmed at the next mayor's court for the city, or quarter sessions for the county, it shall and may be lawful for the said court there to make an order for the guardians of the poor to dispose of such goods and chattels, rights and credits, by sale or otherwise, or so much of them for the purpose aforesaid as the court shall think fit; to receive the rents and profits, or so much of them as shall be ordered by the said court, of his or her lands and tenements for the purposes aforesaid; and if no real or personal estate, rights and credits of such husband, father or mother can be found, wherewith provision may be made as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said court to order the payment of such sums as they shall think reasonable for the maintenance of any wife or children so neglected, and commit such husband, father or mother to the common gaol, there to remain until he or she comply with the said order, give security for the performance thereof, or be otherwise discharged by the said court; and on complaint made to any alderman of the city of Philadelphia, or to any justice of the peace residing in the district of Southwark, or township of the Northern Liberties, of any wife or children there being so neglected, such alderman or justice shall take security from the husband, father or mother neglecting, as aforesaid, for his or her appearance at the next mayor's court or court of quarter sessions, there to abide the determination of the said court, and for want of security to commit such persons.

Mode of proceeding in case of father or mother deserting their children, or husbands deserting their wives and children, and leaving them chargeable.

Collection of Property belonging to Paupers.

[ACT of 29th of March 1819.]

SECTION 1. Whenever any person is chargeable on any township, county or city, the overseers of the poor, or the directors of the poor-house, in any county, as the case may be, shall, and they respectively are hereby authorized to sue for, recover and collect any money due, or property belonging to such person, to be applied in defraying the expenses of keeping such pauper; and if after the death of any such pauper, any debts or property shall be discovered, which were due or belonging to him or her, the said overseers or directors shall have power to sue for and collect the same, and to apply the whole, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by the support and funeral of the said pauper; and if any balance remain, the same shall be paid over by said overseers or directors to the legal heirs and representatives of such pauper, upon demand, and the delivery of a bond to them, with sufficient surety, to indemnify such overseers or directors from the claims of all other persons.

Debts and property of paupers may be collected by the overseers of the poor, &c. After death.

Guardians not to be concerned in Contracts.

[ACT of 2d of April 1821.]

SECTION 1. From and after the first day of May next, it shall not be lawful for any guardian of the poor of the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark, and the township of the Northern Liberties, to be, directly or indirectly, concerned in any contract for the supply or delivery of any article of goods, wares, merchandize, food, or other thing intended to be used or consumed in the almshouse, house of employment or children's asylum; and if any such guardian shall be convicted before any alderman or justice of the peace, of having been directly or indirectly concerned or engaged in any such contract, he shall pay a fine of 100 dollars for the use of the poor of the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark, and township of the Northern Liberties, to be recovered as penalties are now recovered for offences under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.

Guardians of the poor, &c. not to be concerned in any contract for supplies.

Penalty.

Audit of Accounts.

[ACT of 2d of April 1821.]

SECTION 2. It shall be the duty of the auditors of the county of Philadelphia, who now are or shall be elected by virtue of the Act of Assembly of this Commonwealth, passed the 16th day of March 1809, to audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of the guardians of the poor, and managers of the almshouse of the city of Philadelphia, the district of Southwark and township of the Northern Liberties, and of the inspectors of the prison, agreeably to the provisions of the Act of Assembly, passed the 30th day of March 1791, subject nevertheless to the right of appeal as contained in the fifth section of the said last-mentioned Act.

Auditors to settle and adjust the accounts of the guardians of the poor, of the managers of the almshouse, &c.

QUERIES circulated by the Poor Law Commissioners amongst His Majesty's Consuls, and Answers by James Buchanan, Esq., Consul at New York.

THE following Questions apply to customs and institutions, whether general throughout the State, or peculiar to certain districts, and to relief given—

- 1st. By the voluntary payment of individuals or corporate bodies.
- 2d. By institutions specially endowed for that purpose.
- 3d. By the Government, either general or local.
- 4th. By any one or more of these means combined.

And you are requested to state particularly the cases (if any) in which the person relieved has a legal claim.

VAGRANTS.

Question 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer. The number of paupers during the year 1833 in the State of New York amounted to 35,777. I confess I do not comprehend, as applicable to this State, the term “under what form does mendicity prevail?” but I would observe that street-begging is contrary to law, yet it prevails.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—A. There is no authorized relief, yet aid is generally granted to pass paupers to their own State by the overseers of the poor rather than support them, although such expense becomes a charge on the town or county to which such pauper belongs, if a citizen of the State.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are they or any part of their families billeted or quartered on householders?—A. No provision made for able-bodied persons, therefore they do not appear as paupers.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. No such accommodation.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—A. No aid nor compassion for such. “Go, work!” “Ye are idle!” “Ye are idle!”

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates or by giving them alms?—A. The Jews and Society of Friends, called Quakers, with one or two obscure bodies of Christians who adopt the Apostolic practice, alone provide for their poor brethren. The Roman Catholics make provision for orphans of any communion.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—A. No regulations exist for able-bodied people, save such as proceed from private benevolence.

Q. 6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—A. No provision for such characters.

Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families, at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. The commissioners of the almshouse and overseers of the poor exercise a discretionary power during the severity of winter in the city of New York, but alone dispensed after Christmas (sic).

Q. 8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—A. The commissioners of the poor apprentice the children out and send them to distant parts of the country out of the reach of their parents, so that rarely are they called on to provide for children whose parents are alive. There are no schools where children are fed and clothed apart from the pauper establishments of the city, town or county to which they belong.

Q. 9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—A. The father, mother and children, who are of sufficient ability, of any poor person who is blind, old, lame, impotent or decrepit, so as to be unable to work, shall relieve and maintain such poor person, as the overseer of the poor shall approve. In case of refusal, the court of sessions of the peace shall order such support, or part thereof, as those liable are able to sustain.—N. B. This law is rarely enforced.

Q. 10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—A. No such assistance is afforded.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. No peculiar almshouse or institution for the aged.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—A. Answered to No. 7 of preceding queries.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. No

A. No such arrangement prevails; greatly indeed is all such to be deprecated, as producing in children an incentive to cast their parents on such misapplied bounty.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—No such custom prevails.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—A. Answered in No. 9 of preceding queries.

SICK.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. Hospitals are provided in some places, in others medical men are paid for attending the sick in the alms or poor-houses.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. Alone through benevolent associations.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. Same as No. 2.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. Lying-in institutions have not been regarded. None exist apart from private benevolence, and such of a narrow character, being confined to married women only. This puritanical display of charity is altogether at variance with the principle its advocates pretend to regard, who are peculiarly pious Christians; yet Mary Magdalene would have no chance with these devout people.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—A. There are partial associations (only in cities) called dispensaries, which unhappily produce a disposition to take medicine, because it can be obtained without payment; no region can be in a healthy state where such infectious establishments exist. This assertion is not made on light grounds.

CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall, wholly upon the mothers or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The reputed father and mother; in case of inability, to be supported by the county or town in which it shall be born. The property of such liable should they abscond.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. Not liable.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. They are clothed, educated and apprenticed out when qualified. Superintendents or overseers bound under a penalty of 250 dollars or 56 l. 5s., or imprisonment, if they neglect to provide for any bastard neglected or abandoned.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	ORPHANS.	FOUNDINGS.	DESERTED CHILDREN. Whose Parents are known.
Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?	Provision as above	Provision as above	Ditto; but parents prosecuted and rendered liable.
Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?	No such provision	No such provision	No such provision.
Q. 6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?	- - Ditto - -	- - Ditto - -	- - Ditto.
Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	- The same as to paupers.	- - Same - -	- - Same.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—A. Same as paupers. The State has lately erected an establishment to which the several counties or towns may send their mutes, on certain terms, and to a certain extent free, while others are aided according to the inability of their parents, where these mutes are instructed, dieted and clothed. There are two of these State establishments: one at New York; the annual charge is 29 l. 5s. sterling; the other at Canagoharie, at 18 l. The number supported by the State at these institutions, at the city 96, at Canagoharie 24. There are at the two places this year, 1833, 168 deaf mutes receiving education upon the most improved principles.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—A. No such practice prevails; the overseers of the poor have charge of such persons.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. Same answer as No. 2.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. Same answer as in No. 9, as to paupers; no distinction made.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—A. There has been erected at the expense of the State, near the city of New York, an asylum, where the most approved system of medical treatment has been happily administered, to which the overseers of the poor of the several counties in the State may send their poor insane, and for which they pay three dollars a week or 13s. 6d. The numbers during the year 1833 were, lunatics, 602, idiots, 219, in the State establishments.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—A. No such system prevails.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. They are not boarded when not kept at the county poor-house; they are sent to the establishment at the city of New York or Canagoharie.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—A. The same as in case of pauperism.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect—

Q. 1st. On the industry of the labourers?—A. The labour is chiefly performed by emigrants, who soon learn that provision is made for their families. Having no elevation of character to sustain, and from the rate of wages being so much above what they were accustomed to, they are, it may be stated, universally improvident. The evils of such provision I have shown in my Report on the Poor Laws, lately forwarded to Viscount Palmerston, to which I beg leave to refer*.

Q. 2d. On their frugality?—A. Highly injurious.

Q. 3d. On the age at which they marry?—A. No influence, as there is employment for all who will work.

Q. 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—A. The national evil is want of filial reverence; the ills produced by all the other consequences of democracy fall short of this. This sin is cherished by the poor laws.

Q. 5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the "Extracts.")—A. Those supported in the almshouse and prisons much superior to the self-supported labourer: the latter in this climate suffer from fever and ague in summer, and cessation of work in winter. The pauper or felon knows no change; his provision, his comforts are sure.

You are also requested to read the accompanying volume†, published by the English Poor Law Commissioners, and to state the existence of any similar mal-administration of the charitable funds of the country in which you reside, and what are its effects?

You are also requested to forward all the dietaries which you can procure of prisons, workhouses, almshouses and other institutions, with translations expressing the amounts and quantities in English money, weights and measures, and to state what changes (if any) are proposed, in the laws or institutions respecting relief in the country in which you reside, and on what grounds?

In replying to the following Questions respecting Labourers, you are requested to distinguish Agriculturists from Artisans, and the Skilled from the Unskilled.

Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—A. House-carpenters, millwrights, rope-makers, sail-makers, iron-founders, brass-founders, bricklayers, plasterers, stone-cutters, house-painters, glass-blowers, glass-cutters, tailors, hatters, sadlers, shoemakers, harness-makers, one dollar and a half a day generally; in winter and dull times one-fourth may be deducted. Ship-carpenters generally and stone-cutters have higher wages, but throughout the year not better for a constancy. House servants have, viz. men from 2l. 10s. to 3l. a month; maids, 1l. 10s.; gardeners, without board, board, 4 l. a month; drivers of coaches, the same. Man and horse at labour 8 s. a day; yoke of oxen and plough 11 s. 3 d. a day.

Q. 2. Is piece-work general?—A. Very general, in winter particularly.

Q. 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A. The average of a day-labourer throughout the year may be 3 s. 6 d., deduct for sickness, &c. one-fifth, leaves 44 l.; his board, lodging, washing, &c. 26 l.; if married he pays for a room 10 l. a year, 3 l. a ton for coal; other charges equally great. Agricultural labourers hired by the month, at from 1 l. 10 s. to 2 l. 5 s., board, washing and mending included; in harvest 4 s. 6 d. a day, with board.

Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—A. Labourers who remain in the city rarely become independent; they are kept poor by their children, who as soon as they can earn wages, leave their parents. Education is gratuitous, but not valued; all who can pay prefer doing so. The teachers acting as such from necessity, abandon their vocation as soon as they can. Religious teachers are generally liberally paid; depending on the free will of their hearers, they are assiduous and exemplary. A poor family pays their religious teacher about 1 l. 5 s. a year.

Q. 5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—A. There is no specific employment for women and children, save in cotton factories.

Q. 6. What can women and children under 16 earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A. Women, washing, scouring, &c. 3 s. 6 d. a day; binding shoes and hats, 2 s.; tailoring, 1 s. 6 d. & 2 s.; without board: no field-work done by females, except picking fruit. Young girls are in demand as servants, from 13 s. 6 d. to 18 s. a month, with board; in factories they earn 2 s. a day, without board, for which they pay 10 d. a day.

Q. 7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A. Labourer's wives in this country rarely can earn wages; they are occupied in their house-work; for as soon as their children are able to earn their living they abandon their parents' dwelling to shift for themselves. No fee is required with apprentices, therefore the child is independent of the parent; on the contrary, wages is paid the apprentice in the city. Some earn by washing, &c., as noticed in No. 6.

Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A family united could subsist well on their aggregate earnings, have tea, coffee, and meat twice a day; but no such order prevails. Democracy destroys restraint, dissolves parental authority, early inculcates freedom from authority; all are equal, all have equal rights, all may become president, &c. &c. &c., and thus poverty is entailed, and the mutual ties of parent and child reduced to a bearing of the name.

Q. 9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—A. Answered in the foregoing.

Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—A. No such class exists as labourers provided for in this way.

Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—A. Like answer.

Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—A. None.

Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—A. Labourers of lands frequently work on shares. The owners of the land furnish the implements of husbandry, the oxen, and the seed for the first crop; the labourer and his family have their living, and they divide the produce with the landlord.

Q. 14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—A. Returns are not kept save in the cities of New York and Albany; the deaths may be estimated at one in 30.

Q. 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—A. No returns kept.

Q. 16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—A. No returns kept.

Q. 17. The average number of children to a marriage?—A. Five. No registry: this number collected from men of observation; while three come to maturity.

Q. 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—A. No registry kept.

Q. 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—A. Twenty-seven per cent.*

Q. 20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—A. Forty-nine per cent.*

Q. 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—A. Fifty-three per cent.*

Q. 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—A. Females, in the country, 18; in cities, 20. Males, in the country, 21; in cities, 27. Early marriages are encouraged, as preventing illicit intercourse. No fear of want if industrious.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. No cause intervenes; parents not consulted; no hindrances. All clergymen and magistrates can solemnize marriage; much evil evil is prevented by the facility. Early marriages greatly promote virtuous affections; every hindrance in the way of marriage is productive of sinful indulgences and depravity: universally so with men.

* In the city of New York. No registry kept in other parts of the State save Albany and Hudson; I believe latterly at Utica.

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—A. The unmarried save more generally, but invariably to get married.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—A. In the savings' bank, which pays 5 per cent. The shares in joint-stock companies are so small, as to be within the reach of all; many shares being so low as 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.

[Note.—Where shillings and pence are set forth, sterling money is used, as also with £. sterling is meant; the New York shilling is eight to the dollar, while sterling 4 s. 6 d. The shilling varies in different States.]

QUERIES of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS circulated amongst HIS MAJESTY'S CONSULS.

SOUTH AMERICA.

VENEZUELA.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity exists to a very considerable extent in most of the larger towns of this Republic. Wednesdays and Saturdays are the two days in usage for begging from house to house, when multitudes of paupers, chiefly old women and men, swarm in the streets. Poverty amongst the once respectable and opulent families is very great indeed; and their chief resource for relief is on the arrival of the above days.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—None.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—No regulations exist of the kind.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—No regulations exist of the kind.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—No houses of industry exist.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—None exist.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—There are no regulations of the kind.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—There are no regulations of the kind.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—There are no regulations of the kind.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—There are no regulations of the kind.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—There are no regulations of the kind.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—There are no regulations of the kind.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—None exist at present in Venezuela. During the time of the Spaniards, many of the chief cities had establishments of the kind; but the Revolution destroyed them, as well as many other charitable institutions.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—None exist.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—None exist.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—None exist.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—None exist.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—One hospital for sick, and that originally established (viz. since the Revolution) for military patients, but at present is open to others; it is in Caracas, and but a wretched institution in every way. There is another of old existence, for the leprosy alone, containing about 50 wretched beings.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—None.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—None exist.
4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—None exist.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None exist.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The support of hundreds of the illegitimate children falls wholly upon the mothers, in consequence of the mothers not being able to fix upon the fathers; however, a law does exist to compel the father to support the infant, but it is seldom resorted to, from the intricacy of parochial law, as well as expense, as a small bribe on the part of the man to the alcalde will put an end to the proceedings.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—None exist to compel maintenance by relatives of parents under such circumstances.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—No public institutions exist for the reception of infants thus born; but when dead, if left at the cathedral door, are buried at the expense of the church. Hence, weekly, many children of all ages, from a month to four or five years, are thus exposed, often during a whole day.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

	Orphans.	Foundlings.	Deserted Children, whose Parents are known.
4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?	-- No establishment for orphans or foundlings exists.	Ditto - -	-- No instances of deserted children, whose parents are known, occurs; but many infants are found within the passage-doors of the dwelling-houses, left early in the night by their mothers: thus entailing their future existence, &c. on the charity of the master or mistress of the house. Many in Caracas are thus brought up.
5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?	-- None exist -	Ditto.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives? 5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The answers to the foregoing questions fully supply those to the above request.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with or without provisions, in summer and in winter?—Per diem, four rials (or 1 s 6d.), with the usual provisions.

2. Is piece-work general?—Not general.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—No harvest-work in the Republic; wheat but little cultivated; nearly all supplied from the United States of North America.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—It is not possible to answer this question, as most of the peons or labourers have small spots of land somewhere, either on the estate they work for, or not far distant, which they cultivate in Indian corn, beans, and other vegetables or fruits, for the support of their families.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Yes; in picking and cleaning coffee.

6. What can women and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—From three to four rials per diem, being paid by the almod (12th part of 100 lbs.), as much depends on the number gathered. The coffee crop lasts about three months.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged fourteen, eleven, eight, and five years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—About 90 current dollars during the three months of the crop, and but little, if any thing, during the rest of the year; in sterling money about 15 l.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—Maize cakes, vegetables, and fruit, form the chief aliments of the peon and his family; and they can with little difficulty subsist, if they choose to work, on their aggregate earnings.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—The peons here are never so provident.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—About an acre.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Large estate-holders.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The common labourer seldom or never pays rent, land is so plenty and so much uncultivated.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—About an acre or two, at from three to five dollars per acre.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—No regular registers being kept, cannot be ascertained.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—No regular registers being kept, cannot be ascertained.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—No regular registers being kept, cannot be ascertained.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Very prolific; six, eight, and ten.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—The proportion of illegitimate births is very great.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year? 20. Proportion that die before the end of their tenth year? 21. Before the end of their eighteenth year?—No register kept.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Males, from 20 upwards, and females from 15 to 18 and 20; after the last-named age, from climate, they soon become, apparently, old women.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Great poverty.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Few or any instances in either case amongst the lower classes; for they are a sad improvident set, and very fond of gambling of various descriptions.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—None whatever.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—To a very limited extent, say under one per cent. of the population, and that confined wholly to the towns on the coast.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—None whatever, nor is it customary for persons of this class to pass through the country.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—The facilities of procuring food, clothing, &c. with but very little labour, is the cause that there are none of this class of poor in this country.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Same as the preceding answer.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c. and in which they are set to work?—Same; and there are no district-houses.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—No assistance is granted or required by the destitute able-bodied in this country.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—This is never done here.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—The same; and the public works are supplied from convicts or hired labourers.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—This is never practised or required here.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—There are no regulations, but children or relatives support their parents if they become destitute and unable to work.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—There is no compulsion used except in extreme cases, which rarely occur.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—(No answer.)

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are only two institutions in this city which admit the aged sick or infirm. The convent of San Juan de Dios receives about 50 of both sexes, who are supplied with medical assistance, food, &c. through the year; and twice in each year the poor (not inmates) who apply receive food for the day, and a small sum in money (6*d.*) It is supported by bequests of individuals; it is under the patronage of government, and the direction of the bishop. The Obra Pie admits 30 sick, of the female sex only, who are supported as above; it was founded and endowed by individuals, and is under their control.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—No relief is afforded.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Not practised here.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—Same as the preceding.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—There are no regulations, nor is there any compulsion except in very extreme cases, which rarely ever occur.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—See the answer under the head "Impotent through Age," No. 1. In addition, there is, about five miles from town (to leeward), an establishment to which all lepers are sent, in number from 50 to 60.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—This is not practised here; medical men assist, from charitable motives.

3. To

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there any institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—Same answer as No. 1.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Same; but at the Obra Pie medical aid is given to persons in this state.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None, except through voluntary donations.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—They are supported by either father or mother, according to their means; but more generally by the mother.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—This very rarely occurs, and when it does, they are compelled to support the child according to their abilities.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—There is now no establishment of the kind here, nor are they supported by the public.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—There are no establishments, except the hospital of San Juan de Dios or the common jail.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—Not practised here.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—In the first degree.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—There can be no comparison made, as no able-bodied labourer is supported here by alms or charity.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—About four rials, equivalent to 2s. sterling, in the towns, and from two to three rials in the country, daily, when work is to be obtained; in both cases, the labourers find their own provisions.

2. Is piece-work general?—Very much so, in the country parts.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—About 60 dollars per annum. This is uncertain, as neither in town nor country is there any species of employment permanent.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—About 60 dollars per annum, or 12*l.* sterling. Their children are taught gratis in parochial schools.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—None, except as house-servants, &c.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—They are employed as above, and earn about one-third of men's wages.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy,) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—About 250 dollars, or 50*l.* sterling.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Very comfortably, chiefly on animal food.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—Such a thing is rarely thought of here by this class.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—Land being so abundant, there is no fixed quantity.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The lowest class, or coloured and black population, and Indians.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—Rarely any rent is paid, except in some cases a trifling sum for the land they wish to occupy; the habitations or huts are built by the labourers.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Same as the preceding.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—Not easily ascertained; probably six to eight per cent.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Probably from eight to ten per cent.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—This cannot be accurately ascertained, as the cohabiting of the sexes is more frequent than matrimony amongst the lower orders.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—From four to five.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Cannot be ascertained accurately; probably the illegitimate exceed the legitimate as six to five.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—The number cannot be ascertained, but they are considerable; say one-half the deaths occur in this class.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—About a sixth of the preceding.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—Very limited; say about five in the hundred.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Twenty-one years males, females from 15 upwards.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The promiscuous intercourse of both sexes, and their frequent practice of cohabiting, amongst the lower class; add to this their demoralized state, and the force of bad example in their superiors.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Such a thing is rarely ever thought of in this country; their wants are few, and the means of attaining them abundant.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—This is never practised here; they never save or look to the future.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity prevails to an inconsiderable extent, and is confined to the aged, crippled, blind or diseased.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—There is no relief whatever provided; in either of these cases, they would have to depend entirely on private charity.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? 2. Or boarded with individuals?—No such provisions under any circumstances.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no establishments of the kind in Hayti.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There is no religious institution in Hayti that can be called upon to afford relief to mendicants of any description.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—Work is not provided for any persons except in case of vagabondage, when persons who are found idle, without being able to give a satisfactory account of themselves, are liable to imprisonment and forced labour.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—Able-bodied beggars or vagabonds are liable to an imprisonment, from six days to one month; after which they are compelled to work in the fields (à la culture), under the superintendence of the rural police.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—None.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—Children are never taken from their parents, there being no establishments of the kind for their reception.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—I am not aware of any law that compels relations to take care of each other; there is, however, a strong feeling of relationship amongst the Haytians, and they seldom suffer each other to want the absolute necessities of life, which in this climate, amongst the lower orders, are very few and easily procured.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—The loan system is unknown.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—There are no almshouses or other institutions of that nature in the Haytian republic.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—None of these articles are afforded, except in cases of private charity.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—The aged, crippled, blind or diseased are permitted to beg, under certain circumstances, on Saturdays, when, I imagine, their collections are sufficient to support them the remainder of the week.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—No regulations for quartering or billeting them in private houses.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—There is no compulsion in the case.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—No such institutions in Hayti.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own houses?—None provided for. Surgical or medical aid must depend on private charity.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—No institutions of this nature.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Dependent, in such cases, on private charity.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—None whatever.

CHILDREN :

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The support of illegitimate children is generally voluntary on the part of both parents: there being little or no distinctions between legitimate and illegitimate children in Hayti.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—There is no compulsion in the case.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Not supported, under any circumstances, at the public expense.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—No establishments for orphans, foundlings, or deserted children.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—Not billeted or quartered, under any circumstances.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—Not boarded, under any circumstances.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—No compulsion in any of the cases mentioned.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1, 2, 3, 4. Same answers as to the four immediately preceding questions.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1, 2, 3. There are no establishments for the reception of idiots and lunatics; nor are they billeted or quartered on householders, nor boarded with individuals.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—There is no compulsion by law that I am aware of; custom, however, has made it obligatory for the relations of idiots and lunatics to support them, and they are in general allowed to go at large.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers?—As no person has a legal claim on charity, the labouring population are obliged to work sufficiently to obtain their subsistence, which in this climate requires very little labour.

2d, On their frugality?—The creoles in Hayti are as improvident and thoughtless as children.

3d, On the age at which they marry?—Marriage is rarely solemnized; young people, however, are "placé" as soon as they arrive at the age of puberty; and to be able to support a "chère amie" is probably the greatest excitement to industry a Haytian has got.

4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—A strong affection in general prevails between Haytian parents and children; the latter generally support the former in their old age and sickness.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—I have already stated Hayti as without public charities. Taking the climate into consideration, the condition of the labouring population is good, a sufficiency of food and clothing being obtained at the expense of very little labour. That of the wretched beings who subsist by begging is much the same as in other countries.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The wages of an artisan is about one dollar a day; exchange from 3 s. to 2 s. 6 d. That of an agricultural labourer 25 cents, or about 7 d. a day.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is common.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—It is impossible to say what a labourer may obtain by piece-work, as that must depend on the bargain made. It is only necessary to ascertain the daily wages, rejecting Sundays and holidays, which will give the artisan about 300 dollars a year, or about 38 l., and the labourer 75 dollars, or about 9 l. 10 s., both of which are ample to supply their respective wants.

4. State

4. State as nearly as you can the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—I should imagine the labourers spend to their last farthing; or if they do save money it is invariably for the purpose of adding to the number of their wives. This class of people rarely, if ever, think of sending their children to school, the expense being too great for their means.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—None, except as servants and as labourers in their husband's fields.

6. What can women and children under 16 earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women, when hired as servants, receive from four to eight dollars—10s. to 20s.—per month.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—Except in the capacity of servants, I do not think that women would hire themselves at all. A few are employed in the towns as sempstresses or shopwomen.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A family can easily subsist on the earnings of their parents. Their food consists of what are termed "Ground Provisions," i. e. plantains, sweet potatoes, and other vegetables and fruits, which, if not raised by themselves, are obtained at a cheap rate.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—I should say very little could be laid by, even by a very frugal family.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—A labourer can obtain any quantity of land at a merely nominal rate of purchase; every person resident in the country has a small piece of land (sufficient to maintain his family, and probably producing a surplus) attached to his hut.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—The labourers in general own their houses themselves.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—I believe the labourers, even when working other people's land, do not pay rent for their habitations, which are given them, in addition to wages, or a participation in the production, as the case may be.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—I do not know an instance of a labourer renting land; if he takes land of another person, the terms are the division of the profits.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—I have no means of ascertaining exactly. They must, however, be nearly equal, as the population is considered stationary.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Same answer as preceding.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—Legitimate marriage rarely takes place, and never amongst the labouring population; connexions which are considered equally binding are formed between the sexes in almost every case when they arrive at the age of puberty.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Three or four to each connexion just mentioned.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Probably one legitimate to one thousand illegitimate.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—I cannot state the exact proportion, but it is large when compared with other countries, owing to a want of judicious treatment.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year?—The above answer applies to this question.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—After reaching ten years, I consider the Haytians to be a hardy race of people; many of them live to a great age.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males and females?—Males in general procure themselves wives in the manner before stated at the age of twenty. Girls are considered marriageable at fourteen.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Nothing that I am aware of ever delays the forming marriages, such as they are, in this country, except the total inability of the man to support his wife, which very rarely occurs.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Savings are rarely made in either case, except for a specific purpose, such as to pay for a service to release the souls of departed relations from purgatory, when the savings of years will be expended in paying the priest, and entertaining their friends on the occasion.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—When money is saved it is generally buried, or otherwise hoarded, by which a great deal is supposed to be annually lost. There are no securities in which to invest savings.

I add, as an addendum, the heads of laws affecting mendicity and vagabondage, which, however, are rarely put into execution.

Able-bodied beggars are liable to an imprisonment of six days to one month, and afterwards compelled to work in the fields. Beggars, even unable to work, or cripples, if employing threats, or entering a house or inclosure, without the permission of the proprietor, or feigning sores or infirmities, or begging in gangs, unless husband and wife, parents and young children, cripples or blind with leader, are liable to imprisonment of three months to one year.

Beggars or vagabonds disguised or armed, or having in their possession implements for housebreaking, even though not having made use of them, are liable to from one to three years' imprisonment; or in the event of committing any acts of violence, to the penalties thereunto attached likewise.

Penalties in force against bearers of forged certificates or forged passports to be enforced with the utmost rigour in the case of vagabonds and beggars. In every instance after the expiration of their punishment able-bodied beggars or vagabonds are sent to cultivate the soil, whilst those who are unable to work remain under the surveillance of the police from one to three years.

All persons who are neither proprietors nor farmers in the district of their residence, or who have not contracted with a proprietor or farmer, are considered as vagabonds, and liable to imprisonment until they have contracted to work according to law. (The law states, that persons not employed in the service of the state, either as soldiers or workmen, and whose profession it is to cultivate the ground, or to cut wood for exportation, are obliged to make a legal compact with a proprietor or farmer of their district.) If the person so detained has not, at the expiration of a week, taken measures to work as a field-labourer, he will be employed on public works of the town where he has been detained, until the time he shall have entered into the aforesaid compact.

Any labourer found idle on a working day, and during working hours, considered as a vagabond, and liable to be treated as such; and every individual found idle and unable to give a satisfactory account of himself to be treated as a vagabond.

With regard to the dietary of prisons it consists of a small proportion of ground provisions, the rest being made up by charitable contributions.

His Majesty's Consul in Hayti.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Vagrants in France are punishable by the law, which recognises different shades of vagabondism, and thus great confusion often takes place before the magistrates. In the Department Loire Inférieure there is no asylum for mendicants; but Nantes has a species of workhouse, "St. Joseph's House," supported entirely by private subscriptions. To this house the tribunals often send vagabonds, in virtue of the 274th Article of the Penal Code, although the directors of the establishment have contested, and still contest, the right assumed by the judges to do so; and they never receive any person so sent as a criminal to be detained a certain number of days at labour as if in a prison, but merely give him a refuge as an act of charity, and liberty to leave the place, if he likes to go, before the time expires. The number of vagrants that formerly infested Nantes (strangers to the department as well as to the city) have decreased to about a tenth part since begging in the streets was prohibited, and the paupers sent to this establishment.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—The hospitals of Nantes receive all workmen, travellers, and needy strangers that fall sick in the city (if foreigners, at the charge to their consuls of 1 s. 3 d. sterling per day for men, and 10 d. for women.) If a man, and his family also, being destitute, wishes to return to his native place, and has not rendered himself liable to be committed as a vagrant, the préfet has the power to give a passport to him for that place; on the production of which at the mairie of the commune from which he sets out he receives from the public funds of the department three halfpence per league for the distance from thence to the next place he is to be relieved at, and so on to the end of his journey, each place he has to stop at being set down on his passport; if he deviates from the route designated, he is arrested as a vagabond.

There is in France throughout the whole country a general union for each of several trades, the carpenters, bakers, masons, tailors, &c. In each city or town of consequence, each society has a member who is called "the mother," who receives the weekly contributions of those who reside in that place, affords relief to all of its members passing through it, and is obliged to procure work for the applicant, or support him at a fixed rate, established by their bye-laws, until a situation be provided for him there or elsewhere. Those unions sometimes assume a very dangerous power, by compelling masters to hire all their members that are without work, before they engage one man who does not belong to them.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no laws nor regulations on the subject.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—In Nantes there are poor persons who receive travelling paupers, resident poor, and poor labourers, for the trifling sum of a penny per day. The propriety of placing those houses under police regulations has often been considered, for the purpose of introducing regularity, order, and cleanliness, but as yet nothing more has been done than to subject them to the visits of a commissary of police, to ascertain if they contain any felons escaped from justice. The persons who keep these houses are themselves generally poor labourers. For the penny per day the lodger has the half or a third part of a bed, has the use of the candle, and of the fire to warm himself, and has his soup made for him, i. e. his bread boiled in cabbage-water, a pint of which is the usual allowance served up with his bread. Poor families seldom live with such persons; they occupy a room from 30 to 40 francs per annum; frequently three or four old women hire an apartment between them; they spin, and the Bureau de Bienfaisance (a charity under the auspices of the mayor and the control of a board of administration) gives them some trifling assistance in bread, from 6 to 12 lbs. per month, fire-wood, straw, and medicines. Thus they subsist, or rather exist, until sickness increases their misery; when being unable to pay their proportion of rent, they are obliged to have recourse to the hospital or to St. Joseph's.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no establishments of the kind; the "St. Joseph's" is called a refuge and workhouse, but the labour required of the inmates is a regulation with a view to the preservation of order and prevention of laziness more than to the object of gain; the proceeds of the work done there is divided with the labourers; the average of each person's work does not produce above a penny per day.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are no religious institutions that receive the poor, or give alms to them, or provide work for them; on the contrary, the convents in the city are all feebly supported, and several of them are always on the look-out for work for themselves, of which they would deprive those who live by needle-work in the city, if they were not strongly recommended to charge the same prices, or at the lowest rate, not to work for less.

Appendix (F.)

FRANCE.

La Loire Inférieure.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—In times of political commotion, of unforeseen events, of rigorous seasons, when the usual courses of labour are stopped, the civil administrations create temporary workshops, furnish tools, &c., to the labourers, and enter into contracts for repairs to the streets, quays, bridges, roads, &c., from which a large city, as well as the country parishes, can always draw some advantages for the money so distributed to employ those persons who would otherwise be supported without work by the same funds. The money required on those occasions is furnished by the treasury of the city or commune, assisted by private subscriptions from nearly all persons in easy circumstances. The want of regular or parish workhouses for labourers, unemployed, is in some measure supplied by private charities, for a great number of wealthy families and others of the middling class give employment to old men, women and children, in spinning, and in weaving of coarse linen, at prices far beyond those that the articles can be purchased at in the shops; but this plan is adopted to prevent a disposition to idleness, although at a greater sacrifice, perhaps, than would be made by most of the promoters of it, in a public subscription.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture, or on public works?—Refer to the previous reply. In the winter 1831–32 the shipwrights, ropemakers, sailmakers, &c., of Nantes, were in great distress, arising from the few ships that were being built, and the total want of work in not fitting out those that were in port. A subscription was raised for their relief; when, in lieu of giving the money to the men to support their families until confidence in the government and situation of France might be restored, and commerce become more active, a committee of merchants and others was formed to superintend the building of three ships, from 300 to 400 tons burthen each, which provided employment for nearly all those who required it, and who worked on those vessels only when unengaged elsewhere. The ships so built met a ready sale, and thus a great many families were supported at a trifling expense; good workmen saved from the shame attending the life of a pauper, and at the same time kept from a state of idleness.

In various parts of the country the government occasionally employs a number of labourers in draining public lands, and cutting or improving canals; the greater part of the money expended on the former is considered as given in charity, and the time, the extraordinary length of time, that is occupied on the works connected with the canals (the one from hence to Brest, for example), makes it appear as if it were work for the labourers only when in want of employment, instead of a communication that is required by the public between the towns situated on it. The unemployed labourers of the country are generally set to work on the roads in the winter; but there are not many in this part of France that are not required on the farms, that give them work in the summer. The number of hands hired by the farmers regularly is so small that there always remains a sufficient quantity of ordinary work, such as digging trenches, topping trees, cropping hedges, &c. during the winter. The new roads that are being cut in La Loire Inférieure and La Vendée will give employment for all the labourers not otherwise occupied in the two departments for at least four years; that is, if the same inactivity be observed in the completion of those works as has been observed in all others. There is some idea of establishing in Lower Brittany a colony similar to that of Fredericksvord.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money, distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The Bureau de Bienfaisance distributes annually about 80,000 fr.; the chief part, or very nearly the whole, to poor families at their homes, in clothes, food, fuel, and sometimes money; but of the latter as little as possible. Les dames de charité (ladies of the first families, who are appointed annually to visit and give relief to the poor, each having a fixed district) distribute about three-fourths of that sum, which would be insufficient for the indigent if it were not assisted by distributions made by the priests of the different parishes and other persons employed to do so by private families, who give their alms in that manner, and not at their own residences. It is generally supposed that, in the whole, not less than 250,000 fr. are so distributed annually in the city of Nantes. In making this distribution care is always taken to prefer invalids to those in health.

8. To what extent, and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—A law has lately passed the chambers for the free instruction of the children of poor persons in every parish; but Nantes has had her schools for some time. About 3,000 of both sexes are educated by private subscriptions. Boys receive instruction only, but girls receive in addition a proportion of clothing and nourishment. About a tenth of the boys are apprenticed out from the funds when they leave the school.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—The law requires parents to support their children in a direct line, and children their parents, according to their means. The judges have to consider those means, and to award assistance accordingly. It is not often a case comes before the tribunals, although the refusals of workmen to assist their infirm parents.

parents are very numerous, they arise sometimes from a life of debauchery, or from ingratitude; but oftener from inability to spare any part of their earnings from the money required to support their wives and children.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—The city of Nantes has a "monte de piété (a pawnshop, under the direction of the government; no other is permitted), which, with a capital of 250,000 fr., lends annually 500,000 fr. upon an average of 70 to 80,000 deposits, at the rate of 12 fr. Two-thirds of the estimated value of the articles is the sum generally advanced.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—In the city of Nantes there is a general hospital called the "Sanitat" for the reception of the old and impotent; at present it contains about 800; it answers to an English workhouse; the inmates are lodged, fed, clothed, and are taken care of in every way; they are employed about trifling work, but the average gain by it does not exceed 20 fr. per annum for each. The average cost appears to be about 11 to 12 sous per day for each person. The establishment of St. Joseph's, already alluded to, is in fact a sort of assistant to the Sanitat (although supported by private charity) for the 100 to 120 old people it contains. The Sanitat has a ward for dangerous as well as ordinary lunatics; is under the same board and direction as the Hôtel Dieu (the general hospital for the sick); but each is supported by its own funds, arising from bequests and donations from private persons and from the city funds; yet if either hospital should require any assistance, the money wanted would be voted by the city treasury.

The general council for the department votes about 1,200 to 1,250 francs annually to the Sanitat from the departmental funds.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders?—5. And to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—These questions have been replied to in the answers respecting the destitute able-bodied.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—Nantes has a general hospital (Hôtel Dieu) for the sick, containing 600 beds, 300 of which are reserved for the indigent of the city. The expense of this establishment is about a franc to 25 sous per day to each person. The military are received at 20 sous per man per day, which is paid by the government. It is supported by its own funds, arising from bequests and donations, and grants made from time to time by the city; is under the same board and direction as the Sanitat. If a poor person becomes sick in the country, he is either relieved by the curé of the parish or by some of the more wealthy neighbours, or he comes into Nantes and resides there for a week or ten days before he makes an application to the mayor to be admitted into the hospital; he is then sent there as an inhabitant of the city. The authorities in the country have not the right to send a patient to the Hôtel Dieu, yet a great number arrive at the hospital sent by country practitioners, who have not the skill, or perhaps the leisure or inclination, to attend to them; and they are always received if it be possible to take them in. The students at the hospital are ever ready to admit any difficult cases or fractures from the country, for their own improvement.

There are also hospitals for the sick at the following places in the Loire Inférieure: Ancenis, for the town and commune; Chateaubriand, Paimbœuf, Savenay and Clisson, for the towns only.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—Besides the succour afforded to the poor at their homes by the Bureau de Bienfaisance, there are three dispensaries supported by that establishment for administering relief to the sick, who are attended at their homes if necessary by the nuns of St. Vincent de Paule; 12 or 14 of whom are kept in the pay of and are wholly supported by the Bureau. They carry to them soup and other victuals, remedies, &c., and lend them linen and clothes, if wanted. There are a number of young men, who are either studying or have just completed their study of medicine, who are anxious to give their assistance gratis, and who are in constant attendance on those who are receiving relief from the dispensaries. It is impossible to state the extent to which such relief is given; the nuns are paid by the Bureau de Bienfaisance, which also pays for the medicines, &c. they distribute; but the sum that is thus expended bears but a small proportion to the amount that is distributed by the hands of those sisters, who, from the accurate knowledge they possess of the real situation and condition of each person they visit, are employed by numerous wealthy persons to distribute privately such charities as they feel disposed to give; and can thus be well applied in providing those little comforts for the invalids, as cannot be sent from the Bureau to all those who require them, although the funds are increased from time to time by the proceeds of representations at the theatre, public concerts, &c. given for that purpose.

Independent of the foregoing, there are several tradesmen's societies on the plan of benefit societies in England; the members of which pay five or six sous per week, and receive in case of sickness all necessary assistance in medicines, &c., besides an indemnity of a franc to a franc and a half per day, during the time they are unable to work.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—The dispensaries, as observed at No. 2, supply food, clothing and medicines from the Bureau de Bienfaisance, which gives as little money as possible, fearing the abuse that might be made of it by the parents or children of the invalids.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—The Hôtel Dieu possesses a medical school, superintended by the most distinguished physicians and surgeons of the city, who give lectures daily; it has a branch for midwifery, and in that department are received and treated gratuitously 15 to 20 women daily; they are admitted, if they wish it, a month to six weeks before their expected delivery, and they leave the hospital when they are re-established. Those who are confined at their homes are under the care of the dispensaries. There is also a "Société Maternelle" in the city, for giving assistance at their homes to poor married women of good character, that provides yearly for about 100 at their accouchement, supported by private contributions. The city treasury voted 2,000 francs per annum to be paid to this society. To each woman on her delivery is given some bed-linen, shifts, &c.; a basket of all necessary baby-linen, and 12 francs in money. Another basket of baby-linen in three months, and five francs per month for 10 months. A physician, surgeon and midwife attend them gratuitously.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—Answered above by observations on the Hôtel Dieu, dispensaries, Société de Maternité and the benefit societies. One of the latter receives very liberal subscriptions annually, (probably from those who have been members of it, and are now in easy circumstances,) which enables it to give more extended relief to its claimants than it could otherwise grant.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The laws of France prohibit any search for the father of an illegitimate child; it is the mother who must provide for it.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—It does not appear that the parents of a woman are obliged to support her illegitimate children; if the mother should die, and the parents possess no tenderness for their grandchild, then it becomes abandoned, and would be received as such at the hospital.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—The directors of the hospitals at Nantes, with a view to the preservation of children, allow 3 to 4 francs per month for three years to all single women who present themselves with their child and a certificate that they are unable to support it. No one is refused, yet the number of children thus supported during three years has seldom exceeded 120 at a time. It has been observed, that the mortality of children so left under the care of their parents is considerably less than among those who are abandoned and provided for by other means than through the mother.

Orphans, Foundlings or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception? 5. Or billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals? 7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—The law requires an establishment (a tour) in each department, for the secret reception of children. Every arrival is particularly noted and described in a register kept for that purpose, that the infant may be recognised if it should be claimed. The children, after having received all necessary assistance and baptism, are confided to women in the country, (a regulation of this department only,) to dry-nurse them, (au biberon); they are paid eight francs per month for the first year, seven for the second and third, six until the ninth year, and four francs per month from that time until the child is 12 years old; when the nurse who has taken care of one from its birth to that age receives a present of 50 fr. for her attention; a basket of requisite linen is given with the child, and a new suit of clothes annually for seven years. These regulations are observed for orphans and foundlings. The registers for the last 20 years give an average of 360 to 370 admissions annually; more than one-half of them die under one year old; therefore, with the deaths at other ages, and the claims that are made for some of them before they attain 12 years, the establishment has seldom at its charge more than from 1,200 to 1,300, of all ages from 0 to 12. Vide note, p. 178.

The parents being unknown when they place their infants in the "tour," cannot be traced afterwards unless they acknowledge themselves; they are, however, as has been observed before, liable for the expenses of their offspring; and whenever they are discovered, whether by claiming their children or otherwise, the right to make them repay the costs they have occasioned is always maintained, and they are compelled to pay the whole, or as much as their finances will admit of.

Deserted children of the city, or the children of poor persons who cannot support them, are received and treated in a similar manner, without being placed in the "tour;" they are admitted according to the state of the finances appropriated to such branch of the establishment, which in general permits from 80 to 100 to be on it. Certificates are required that the parents are dead, the child abandoned, or that the mother is totally unable to support it, or that she has a number of young children. Independent of the 1,400 children thus received by the Hôtel Dieu, the Bureau de Bienfaisance supports 200 legitimate children, and the Société Maternelle from 60 to 80, until they attain the age of 18 years.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Or are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—All these are received at the hospitals as if they were old and infirm poor; but if the parents or children are in such circumstances as will justify the demand, they have to pay for the support of their relatives, or a small allowance towards it. There is no special establishment for those unfortunate beings, further than the directors allow a certain sum to a professor in the city, for instructing such deaf and dumb children as may be at the hospital. When it was proposed, some time since, to have an asylum for the latter class exclusively, it was ascertained that there were but 90 deaf and dumb of every age, sex and condition in the whole department.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Answered before.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Or are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. Are their relatives compelled to support them?—A new hospital in lieu of the buildings hitherto occupied as the "Sanitat" is nearly completed. The apartments for idiots and lunatics are calculated for 400, besides accommodation for 50 or 60 epileptics, who will be treated after the most approved process of modern science. Private apartments will be allotted to those whose families will pay for them. The others will receive the same attentions as the poor invalids in the Hôtel Dieu; but, if sent from the country, or any other department, the commune that sends the patients will have to pay 300 fr. per annum for each. The convent "La Maison de Providence" receives a few females, at a pension of about 800 to 1,000 francs per annum; and Dr. Drouet has a "Maison de Santé," where he receives all invalids, lunatics, &c., and charges, according to circumstances, from 100 to 300 francs per month. Relatives are compelled to support them, as explained before respecting destitute able-bodied, No. 9.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect, 1st, On the industry of the labourers?—There can be no doubt that the prospect of an asylum for the indigent creates amongst the working class a disposition to idleness and debauchery, whilst at the same time there are those who look down with disgust on their miserable brothers who are compelled to accept a public charitable support; and the shame which they consider attaches to a man who does it stimulates them to avoid the doors of an hospital, by industry and sobriety. The number of these however is very small, whilst the applications for admittance to the Sanitat and to St. Joseph's are so very numerous, so far beyond the accommodation that can be granted, that after the name of an applicant is registered he has (frequently) to wait 18 to 24 months for his turn. For the sick, however, at the Hôtel Dieu it is not so; for arrangements are made that no delay takes place with any case requiring immediate relief or treatment.

2d, On their frugality?—Frugality in Nantes with the labouring classes is the effect of necessity more than of virtue. Drunkenness is common, and temperance almost a stranger to them. In the country it is nearly as bad; nine out of ten of the little farmers who come to this market, Wednesdays and Saturdays, and particularly at the fairs, return home in a state of intoxication. The life led by them when on military duty, from the age of 20 to 28, most certainly demoralizes them.

3d, On the age at which they marry?—Marriages are not contracted at a young age, seldom under 25; domestic women-servants get married when they have saved from 200 to 400 francs by their wages, which are from 100 to 150 per annum; by the time they have saved such a fortune they have attained the age of 30 or perhaps 40; and then they marry men younger than themselves, who look more to the money than to the happiness of the women.

4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—There appears to be but little affection on the part of the men. In general the wife and children either support themselves, or are supported by charity, whilst the husband spends all his earnings in debauchery.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—The shades between the healthy labourers of the lowest class that support themselves, and those who obtain relief from charitable institutions, are so slight, that it is almost impossible to state the difference in their conditions. No man has a legal claim upon any of the charities; in the distribution of which, however, there is but one fixed rule that governs the distributors, and that is, to compel the applicants for relief to work to their utmost power, and to give such relief only in each individual case as they suppose to be necessary with the wages he can or ought to earn, according to the demand for labourers at the time.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—In Nantes the wages of workmen, without provisions, are,

Masons, from 2 to 2½ francs per day,	1 s. 8 d. to 2 s. 1 d.
Stone-cutters, 2½ to 3 fr. *	-	2 s. 1 d. to 2 s. 6 d.* (* sic.)
Shipwrights, 2 to 3 fr. *	-	2 s. 1 d. to 2 s. 6 d.*

Rope-makers, painters, tailors, carpenters and others generally are the same.

Labourers get from 1½ f. to 1½ f. or 1 s. 0½ d. to 1 s. 3 d. per day.

In the country, workmen obtain about two-thirds to three-fourths of the foregoing prices.

Agricultural labourers get, per day, without food,

Men, 15 to 20 sous	-	-	-	or 7½ d. to 10 d.
Women, 8 to 16	-	-	-	or 4 d. to 8 d.
Men during harvest, 25 to 30,	or 1 s. 0½ d. to 1 s. 3 d.
Women ditto	-	20	-	or 10 d.

If supplied with food, a deduction is made from these rates.

Men, hired as servants, are lodged and boarded with the farmer, and their wages vary from 120 to 200 francs, 5 l. to 8 l. 6 s. 8 d. With allowances at harvest, and other little presents, a man-servant is supposed to cost his master yearly 250 to 300 francs, or 10 l. 8 s. 4 d. to 12 l. 10 s.; a woman-servant 150 to 200 francs, or 6 l. 5 s. to 8 l. 6 s. 8 d. With the exception of harvest and vintage, the wages are the same in the summer as they are in the winter.

2. Is piece-work general?—Contractors generally hire the workmen by the piece, but the finances of the latter are not improved by it; for if they work extra hours in five days, they will spend the sixth in a debauch.

The difference between the price of an ordinary day's labour and the earnings of a man by piece-work is, in nine cases out of ten, so dissipated, either daily after leaving work, or on the Sunday or Monday following.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A workman (mechanic or trades-journeyman) in Nantes is supposed to be employed, on the average, 250 days in the year; the average wages are about 2½ francs, or 2 s. 1 d. per day, which will give him yearly 26 l. 0 s. 10 d. A labourer in Nantes, on the average, obtains nearly the same number of days' work, at 1 s. 0½ d. to 1 s. 3 d. per day, which will give him yearly 13 l. 0 s. 5 d. to 15 l. 12 s. 6 d.

In the country, a labourer, on the average, obtains nearly 300 days' employment, which, at the average rate of his wages, 9 d. per day, will give him yearly 11 l. 5 s. The extra wages at harvest do not amount to 20 francs, and perhaps 10 more will fully compensate the farmer for any sustenance or douceur that he may give him. From 12 l. to 12 l. 10 s. is the utmost sum of his wages and emoluments.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—According to the price of lodgings, victuals and clothing in Nantes, a steady labourer at the highest rate of his wages, 1 s. 3 d. per day, supposing he had 300 days' employment in the year, is considered to be able to support a wife and three young children; if he has a larger family, is out of employ, or is at a lower rate of wages, without his wife and children being able to gain a little, he is regarded as indigent, and in need of succour. A labourer, his wife, and three children consume in the day from 8 to 10 lbs. of bread, which is their chief food, and will cost him 240 fr.; his cabbages and other vegetables, butter or fat for his soup, 90 fr.; his room, 50 fr.; leaving 70 fr. or 2 l. 18 s. 4 d. for clothes, fuel, &c.; which make up the sum of his wages for 300 days at 1½ fr., or 1 s. 3 d. per day. The wife in general adds a little to the husband's earnings by spinning, and sometimes weaving; but it is not much when the family is young. They are at no expense for teachers, as already explained.

In the country, the children have been instructed by some nuns of the same order as those who attend at the hospitals; but the whole population is so scattered, and the distances so great from one village school to another, that very few of the peasants' children get any instruction at all.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—Women are employed in some of the manufactories in Nantes, as washers, &c. When they have not an infant at the breast, the mother confides her child or children to the care of some aged neighbour, which enables her to go out to a day's work. Examples are but too frequent of the husband dissipating all he earns, whilst the poor wife is obliged to exert herself for her own and children's support.

To

To prevent the increase and lessen the present state of disorder into which the greater part of the labouring class and mechanics of Nantes has fallen, a number of master tradesmen and proprietors of factories will not employ those men who do not agree to allow a certain sum weekly to be retained from their wages for the use of the wife and family. The example spreads, and will no doubt become more general; but this circumstance shows forth, in strong colours, the immoral state of the working class in France.

6. What can women, and children, under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women in the city earn from 12 sous to a franc, 6*d.* to 10*d.*, per day; children under 16 years get from 6 to 10, and even 12 sous, 3*d.* to 5*d.* and 6*d.*, per day. A great number of women and girls are employed by tailors and slop-sellers, who not only supply the numerous ships' crews and the bargemen of the inland navigation, which is immense, but export considerable quantities of clothing to the colonies. The most part of this work is done by the piece, but it seldom gives more to the labourer than is above stated. In the country they get as stated at No. 1.

On some farms in Lower Brittany the women sow the corn, but in general they are occupied in household work, knitting and spinning, and also in attending upon the cattle. The cows are daily led out to the wastes, public roads and paths, by women or girls, who remain with them until they are brought home again, the women being occupied all that time in spinning or knitting. They also carry the produce of the dairy to market.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8, and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—In Nantes there are several instances of a woman with a family of four children, from the age of 5 or 6 to 16, gaining together from 360 to 400 francs, or 15*l.* to 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, during the year. In the country it must be considerably less, as the children cannot be so profitably employed.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—If the father obtains constant employment, as stated at No. 4, and applies the whole of his earnings to the support of his family, and his wife and children are enabled to add 200 or 300 francs thereto, he may have it in his power to buy a little bacon or other meat now and then, and maintain his family without assistance from the Bureau de Bienfaisance; but it was observed at No. 4 that there remained only 70 francs to provide fuel and clothes for the whole family, after the hire of a room, the bread, and vegetables for the soup had been paid for out of the father's wages.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—The foregoing replies show the impossibility of any saving.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation? 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations? 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale? 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—There are no cottages for labourers, as are seen in England: the chief part of the work on farms in this part of France is done by servants in the house of the farmer, or by married labourers, to whom an acre or two, sometimes as high as 10, according to the quality, is fenced off from the estate for the use of the man and his family; for which he has to give a certain number of days' work. If such patch of land requires to be ploughed, the farmer does it for him for an additional number of days' work. Besides those, there are an immense number of little proprietors, having from an acre and a half to 10 or 15 acres; and they give their labour also to the farmers of larger estates, receiving in return either assistance with oxen, carts, ploughs, &c., or an equivalent in some produce which they do not raise on their own land. Very little money, if any, passes between them. These little properties have sprung up from labourers and others fencing in small patches of commons or waste lands. Nearly all the vineyards in the Loire Inférieure are cultivated by labourers, who have a small spot of ground partitioned off from the main estate; it is for married men only that ground is so divided; the single men live with their families in the villages, or in public-houses, but generally in the latter. In regard to these questions, it must be observed that almost every farmer who hires an estate takes such a one as will just sustain his family, without the aid, or with the assistance only of a man or a man and woman servants, and that therefore very few daily labourers find employment. Few estates run to 200 acres, and, if so large, a daily labourer is only hired during harvest, so wretchedly is the husbandry of the country managed.

The cottages or houses in villages for labourers are in general the property of the owners of the large estates in the neighbourhood, as well as those that are built on the patches of land for the use of those who are married; some of the latter, however, are built at the joint expense of the farmer and labourer. A cottage or cottages in a detached place from a village, or a house in such a situation, with a little plot of ground for a garden for each apartment, lets for about 20 to 30 francs a year per room, whether the building consists of one or of four rooms. In the villages the rent is a little higher, from 30 to 50, and sometimes as high as 80, if the garden be large to a cottage with only one room. These buildings are so seldom on sale, that the price cannot be stated with accuracy.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The population of the Loire Inférieure being 470,093, and the deaths (1832) having been 11,999, gives one death to every 39.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—The births during the same year were 13,840, which gives one birth to every 34.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—The number of marriages the same year was 3,182, which gives one to every 147.

La Loire Inférieure.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—The number of legitimate births was 11,805, which gives $3\frac{2}{3}$ to each marriage.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—About 8 to 1 in Nantes, 12 to 1 in the country.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—The number of deaths in 1832, under one year old, 1,970. Chateaufort states, for all France, 33 deaths, under one year old, out of every hundred births, which is nearly double the number of deaths of that description for this department; but the mortality is much greater amongst the orphans, foundlings and deserted children of this city received at the hospital. An account, made up to the year 1828, gave an average of 52 deaths, under one year old, of every hundred children received there; and since that date it has increased considerably. A similar calculation for the city of Paris gives $62\frac{9}{10}$.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—The number of deaths under 10 years old was $\left\{ \begin{smallmatrix} 1,970 \\ 2,504 \end{smallmatrix} \right\} 4,474$.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—The number of deaths under 18 years old was $\left\{ \begin{smallmatrix} 4,474 \\ 616 \end{smallmatrix} \right\} 5,090$.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—The average age of the men, about 25; women, 30.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The greater part of the men look out for women who have saved a little fortune from their wages, and have realized from 200 to 400 francs. By marrying a woman who has been able to accumulate this sum, they calculate on two advantages: first, the money; and secondly, the chance of having fewer children, as she has in general attained the age of 30 to 35 or 40 before she can have saved so much.

Farmers' sons and daughters marry rather earlier in life; but the union of a young couple is often delayed by an unproductive harvest, and they remain single until after a good one, when the parents of each set them out in the world by giving them a cow, an ox, and perhaps a few sheep and some seed-corn.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save? 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—In Nantes the unmarried workmen and labourers save nothing, and it has been already shown that the married cannot lay up anything. There is a savings' bank of about 12 years' standing in the city, which receives so small a sum as a franc, and allows $3\frac{1}{2}\%$ interest, but does not permit above 2,000 fr. to be invested in one name. Servant-girls generally deposit their earnings with it. Master tradesmen, and women who keep small shops, students, merchants' clerks, children whose parents are dead and have left them a small pittance, with other children who have received presents in money, form the greater part of the proprietors of the stock in the bank. Some of the foregoing classes place their money in the hands of notaries to be lent at a higher rate of interest than is paid by the bank; but this is not the case so frequently as it used to be before the establishment of the bank, the proprietors being so liable to be and being so often cheated by the notaries, who never fail to state the money has remained unemployed for many months, although it may have been at interest from the time it was placed with them.

Henry Newman,

His Majesty's Consul at Nantes, Department Loire Inférieure.

Note respecting Orphans, Foundlings, &c.

When they have attained their twelfth year, they are brought into the city and placed in a building at the Sanitat appropriated to that purpose, unless the woman who has nursed the child or any other person in the country wishes to keep it, which frequently happens. They are provided for at the Sanitat, taught to work, and instructed until they attain the age of 18, if they are not previously taken from thence by housekeepers for servants, or by tradesmen for apprentices, subject to the control and surveillance of the administration until they arrive at that age, when they are free to go where they please, and to act for themselves.

There are women in the city who make it their business to place infants in the "Tour," and who afterwards attend the delivery of them to the country nurses, and thus, knowing where certain children are placed, give notice to the parents, who can visit them without being discovered. Children thus recognised are frequently demanded by their parents for servants, in the ordinary way; and by this plan they screen themselves from the payment of the child's support.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Mendicity is not allowed by law; still it exists to a considerable extent amongst the old and infirm, which is tolerated by the police.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—The only relief granted to persons passing through the country seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging, is a passport gratis, and three sous per five kilometres (1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling) for 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ British miles, allowed by the mayor from the funds of the town.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—There are no regulations respecting destitute able-bodied persons, nor are they, or any part of their families, ever billeted or quartered on householders.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—They are never boarded.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—There are no religious institutions for assisting the able-bodied destitute.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—There are no institutions or regulations for finding them work either at their dwellings or otherwise; they are entirely dependent upon private individuals.

6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—As the above, No. 5.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—There are no regulations for their relief; in severe winters private subscriptions are raised and placed at the disposal of a committee of ladies, who distribute tickets for bread, soup, wood and clothing, according to the merits of the case, but never sufficient to support, but merely to assist them to live.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—Persons proving that they cannot educate their children, receive an order from the mayor to admit them to a free school paid by government; they are taught reading, writing, arithmetic and the principles of religion; but are not fed or clothed.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—There are no regulations to compel persons to assist their destitute relatives in any way.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—There are no loans made to them.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there almshouses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—The impotent through age are admitted to the hospital by an order from the mayor (see Annex A. 1, p. 182); they also receive relief from the Bureau de Bienfaisance (see Annex B. 3, p. 182.)

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—When received into the hospital they are clothed and fed (see A. 5, 6, 8); and they are also relieved by the Bureau de Bienfaisance in food and clothing (see B. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14.)

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals? 4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders?—They are never so boarded, quartered or billeted.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Persons are not obliged to assist their relations.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—The sick are received into the hospital (see A. 2); there are no other institutions for their reception.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—They receive surgical and medical relief at their homes from the Bureau de Bienfaisance (see B. 14, 15, 16.)

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—The Bureau de Bienfaisance gives relief to those on their lists; (see B. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14); seldom money. Others when not in the hospital are dependent on private charity.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—Lying-in women are received at the hospital, or relieved by the Bureau de Bienfaisance (see B. 14 and 16.)

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes of public assistance in Havre; and the sick are often dependent on individual charity.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall, wholly upon the mothers or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The support of illegitimate children falls wholly upon the mothers.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—The relatives of mothers or fathers of bastards are in no way compelled to assist them.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—When abandoned at the door of the hospital they are received and supported by that establishment to the age of 12 (see A. 4.)

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?—They are received into the hospital (see A. 4.)

5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?—They are never billeted or quartered on householders.

6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—When infants they are put out to nurse by the hospital.

7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Relatives not obliged to support them.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—Never so billeted or boarded.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—Relatives not compelled to support them, except the father and mother, if able.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—No establishment here; they are sent to Rouen.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—They are not so quartered or boarded.

4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—The fathers and mothers are alone obliged, when able to do so.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The relief is so trifling from the public institutions, that no persons will enter the hospital if they can possibly obtain a miserable existence out of it, and I think this is a great incentive to industry and frugality. Men and women generally marry young, but they never do so until they are in some regular employ; children are generally careful of their parents.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 and 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts*.")—I consider a labourer in average employment able to live with comfort to his ideas, that is, he has sufficient bread and a little cider; whereas those in the hospital are sparingly fed and confined to the building; an able-bodied beggar is never seen here.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The average amount of the wages of a male labourer is in the country 2 fr. = 1 s. 6 d., in summer, and 1 fr. 50 c. = 1 s. 2 d., in winter, without food; in towns it is 2 fr. 50 c. = to 2 s. a day, all the year.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is seldom or never done.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A labourer ought to make 600 fr. a year, = 24 l.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Labourers are not able to save much, nor am I able to state in what proportion they spend their gains; religious instruction is given gratis to the poor children.

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—There is no regular employment for women and children, as we have no manufactories; they are employed as servants, &c. &c.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A woman generally makes 1 fr., or 10 d. a day, with her food; children are so seldom employed, that I cannot say.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—I should suppose 1,000 fr. (40 l.), provided the two eldest children are employed.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Families do subsist and are respectable upon these earnings. Their food is bread, a few vegetables and cider, never animal food, or very rarely; coffee and treacle is also used.

9. Could

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—I do not think they can lay by anything; those that do so put it into the savings bank.
10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—None.
11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—No particular class.
12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—Rent from 50 fr. to 100 fr., = 2 s. to 4 l. a year.
13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—None.
14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—About $\frac{1}{34}$.
15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—About $\frac{1}{26}$.
16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—About $\frac{1}{110}$.
17. The average number of children to a marriage?—About 3.
18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—About $\frac{1}{5}$.
19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—About $\frac{1}{6}$.
20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—About $\frac{1}{3}$.
21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—About $\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$.
22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—Men about 22 to 24; women 18 to 20 years.
23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—No causes to delay marriages, if the parties and their parents consent.
24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—I cannot say, so much depends upon the character and employment of the individual.
25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—Savings are generally invested in a saving bank, guaranteed and sanctioned by Government.

Annex (A.)—HOSPITAL REGULATIONS AT HAVRE.

1. AGED persons of 60, without distinction of sex, are admitted into the hospital upon a certificate of indigence delivered by the mayor of their district, and a ticket of admission signed by one of the directors of the establishment.
2. The sick are admitted if they can produce a certificate of indigence from the mayor or curate of their parish, and every care is taken of them at the expense of the establishment.
3. Sailors, wounded or sick, are admitted without regard to age, provided they are French. If the sailor has any pension from Government, the hospital receives it, and places the amount to the credit of the establishment, allowing him 3 fr. (2 s. 6 d.) a month for his private use.
4. Orphans, foundlings, or deserted children are admitted, provided they are under 12 years; they are then engaged as servants or apprentices, but should they get out of employment from no fault of their own, they are at liberty to return until the age of 21 years.
5. Food for each man, 1 lb. of bread per day, and 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. of cheese or butter; for each woman, 3 lbs. of bread every four days, and 2 oz. of cheese or butter four times a week; for men and women 1 quart of soup, 2 oz. dressed meat, with potatoes, to each person three times a week.
6. Drink, a quart of cider per day to each man; half-quart ditto to each woman.
7. The principal of the establishment receives 84,000 fr. (3,360 l.) for the maintenance and relief of 600 persons, and the support of the institution.
8. The inmates, male and female, have woollen clothing in winter, and linen in summer.

Annex (B.)—REGULATIONS OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE BUREAU DE BIENFAISANCE, OF HAVRE.

1. NONE are admitted but those whose poverty is well known, and who have lived 12 months in the town. The number of persons to be relieved is fixed by the Bureau, whose names must be entered in a register, stating their age, date of application, place of residence, number and age of their children.
2. There is a second register for such poor who, having resided one year in Havre, shall apply after the closing of the register mentioned in the above article. This inscription is made in order of their dates, and the paupers carried upon it will only be entitled to relief in turn, and as vacancies occur in the first list, by departures, deaths or discharge.
3. No poor of either sex can receive relief more than 15 years old, or under 50. This exclusion is not applicable to widows with young children, or with four children under 15 years. In all cases they must produce a certificate that their children attend the free school, and are diligent.
4. The inscription in the register mentioned in No. 2 can only take place after inquiry has been made respecting the claimant, and authorized by the Bureau, which meets for this purpose once a month.
5. No children can be admitted to the assistance of the Bureau, nor into the classes of instruction and work, above the age of 15, and without having been vaccinated.
6. If the number of children attending the classes and work shall be too many, either on account of the size of the building or the attention of the instructors, preference will be given given to the children whose parents are already on their lists, and who are known to require assistance for the education of their children.

7. Every year, at the period of the first communion, a certain number of children shall be clothed. But to be admitted to this assistance they must produce a certificate from the clergyman appointed to give religious instruction, or from the nuns of the convent, that they have been attentive and are deserving. The boys are clothed in brown cloth; the girls in coloured calico.

8. Every year the sum of 650 fr. (26 l.) shall be given to the clergymen of the town, in tickets of 1 fr. (9 d.), and 50 c. (4 ½ d.), to be distributed where they think proper, of which only those who are past 60 or under 15 can participate.

9. Each person shall receive 3 lbs. of bread, two in the same family 6 lbs. of ditto, three to five persons in the same family, whose children are under 15, 12 lbs. of ditto, for 15 days. The number admitted to this relief to be regulated each year, so that the distribution shall not exceed 3,000 lbs. a month; these distributions will take place to the most needy each Monday and Friday, from 9 to 12 o'clock, after which no more will be given.

10. In the distribution of clothing, which will be made once a year, each individual will only be clothed once in two years.

11. When the establishment is enabled to give woollen clothing, it will only be to such as are above 60 years, or to children under seven years, and those the most destitute; this relief once in two years.

12. If any one who receives bread and clothing from the Bureau sells or pawns the same he shall be struck off.

13. All clothes given by the establishment shall be marked, so that they may be known.

14. Assistance to lying-in women, new-born children and sick, will be rendered at their houses; those who are not on the lists cannot be assisted until their case is examined; money will not be given to women in labour but when absolutely necessary; soup is distributed on Mondays and Wednesdays, from two to three o'clock.

15. There is attached to the establishment a doctor, at 400 fr. (16 l.), and two assistants, at 500 fr. (20 l.) each per year, who attend such as are named by the Bureau; and also women in extraordinary cases of labour.

16. A midwife is attached, at 200 fr. (8 l.) a year, who attends all women designated by the Bureau.

17. In hard weather, if it should be thought expedient to make a subscription, the poor who are upon the second list (article 2) will be relieved from it.

18. Each year, in the month of October, there will be a general meeting, who will examine the registers.

POLICE INTERIEURE.

Titre 1^{er}. Service du Portier de l'Extérieur.

Art. 1^{er}. TOUTES les portes qui communiquent à l'extérieur resteront constamment fermées.

2. Aucun étranger ni externe ne sera admis pendant la nuit dans la maison, excepté pour des cas extraordinaires et urgents, et sur l'autorisation expresse du directeur.

3. Le portier ne laissera entrer ni sortir, pendant le jour, aucun individu sans un permis ou laissez passer du directeur.

S'il s'agit d'affaires concernant les bureaux ou les travaux de l'établissement, les personnes admises seront conduites par le portier de l'intérieur aux lieux indiqués, de manière à empêcher toute communication avec les mendiants.

4. Le portier visitera soigneusement tous paquets, outils, meubles, et autres effets entrant ou sortant de la maison; il en fera mention sur son registre et retiendra les permis de sortie qui doivent accompagner les objets.

5. Il est défendu à toutes personnes sans exception de stationer dans la loge du portier.

6. Il est défendu expressément et sous peine de destitution aux portiers de l'extérieur et de l'intérieur, ainsi qu'à tous autres préposés du dépôt, de favoriser, ou de permettre aucune commission, communication ni correspondance des reclus avec l'extérieur; les lettres des mendiants ne seront reçues ou expédiées qu'après avoir été communiquées au directeur, afin de prévenir toute atteinte au bon ordre et à la sûreté de l'établissement.

7. Les employés de toute classe ne peuvent sortir ni s'absenter sans le permis du directeur, qui fixera la durée de leur absence. Dans tous les cas, les préposés quels qu'ils soient, devront être rentrés, en hiver, à neuf heures du soir, et en été à dix heures; après quoi toutes les portes seront fermées, et les clefs déposées à la direction.

8. Il est enjoint au portier de l'extérieur de se conformer ponctuellement aux articles ci-dessus, à peine de destitution et de répondre personnellement des effets de sa négligence.

Appendix (F.)

Titre 2. *Portier de l'Intérieur.*Foreign Communications.

FRANCE.

Rouen.

Art. 1^{er}. Le portier de l'intérieur aura sa loge dans la première cour et s'y tiendra tout le temps qu'il ne sera pas en fonctions.

Une cloche particulière sera destinée à l'avertir quand son service l'appellera ailleurs.

2. Il est chargé spécialement de sonner la cloche aux heures fixées par le règlement.

3. Afin d'empêcher toute communication des mendiants des deux sexes et d'âges différents, il lui est enjoint de tenir fermées, aux heures prescrites, les portes des dortoirs, des ateliers, des cours de récréation et autres lieux occupés par les détenus aussitôt qu'ils les ont évacués.

4. Il tiendra la main conjointement avec les servants et surveillants, à ce que les reclus soient exactement renfermés dans leurs appartements respectifs; il fera des rondes pendant le jour, pour s'assurer de l'exécution de cette partie essentielle du règlement.

5. Tout mendiant qui sera trouvé à des heures indues, et sans permis, hors de son district sera saisi et conduit au surveillant ou chef des ateliers, qui en fera son rapport au directeur, afin qu'il soit puni suivant le cas.

6. Il est expressément défendu au portier de l'intérieur de confier aucune clef ni passe-partout, soit aux caporaux de garde ou sergent pour relever les sentinelles intérieurs soit aux préposés, surveillants ou servants pour conduire les ouvriers au travail, soit aux ouvriers extérieurs occupés dans l'établissement, en un mot, à qui que ce soit et sous aucun prétexte, sous peine d'être personnellement responsable et puni des abus résultants de l'infraction du présent article. Il ouvrira et fermera lui-même les portes.

7. Le soir, après l'appel et pendant le souper des reclus, il fermera les portes des jardins et cours de récréation, et veillera à ce que tous les feux et lumières soient éteints dans les lieux qui auront été évacués.

8. Le portier veillera à ce que les loges de correction soient tenues proprement et balayées par les reclus, et leur paille renouvelée aussi souvent qu'il sera nécessaire.

9. Aucun détenu ne pourra sortir de sa loge (si ce n'est pour le travail) pendant la durée de sa punition.

Titre 3. Dortoirs.

Art. 1^{er}. La cloche annoncera le reveil à quatre heures du matin, depuis le 1^{er} Mars jusqu'au 30 Sept^{re}, et à six heures depuis le 1^{er} Oct^{re} jusqu'au 28 Fev^{er}. Aussitôt les surveillants et servants des dortoirs tiendront la main à ce que les reclus s'élèvent avec décence et tranquillité.

2. Après le lever, chaque reclus fera son lit, videra son pôt aux latrines et le videra dans les baquets à ce destinés, il lavera ses mains et son visage, et se rendra dans son dortoir pour assister à la prière, qui ne durera qu'un quart d'heure.

3. La prière finie à six heures en été et à sept heures dans l'hiver, les reclus se rendront accompagnés des surveillants dans leurs ateliers respectifs pour se livrer au travail; les dortoirs seront fermés après avoir été balayés et nettoyés par deux reclus désignés tour à tour dans chaque dortoir pour cet emploi.

4. A neuf heures du soir, en toute saison, la cloche sonnera le coucher. Les reclus se rendront aussitôt dans leurs dortoirs respectifs; le surveillant fera l'appel nominal, et l'on entendra avec recueillement la prière, qui ne durera qu'un quart d'heure; après la prière chacun se couchera tranquillement et le plus profond silence regnera dans les dortoirs.

5. Chaque servant des dortoirs et les surveillants dans les ateliers, veilleront à ce que les appartements soient aérés et ouverts pendant le jour, et les croisées arrêtées soigneusement avec leurs crochets, afin de prévenir les dommages que pourroient résulter par l'effet du vent ou autres causes.

6. Les servants et surveillants, le chef d'atelier et tous autres préposés en ce qui les concerne sont chargés de tenir la main à la stricte exécution des règlements, et de dénoncer au directeur dans leur rapport journalière ou aux inspecteurs de semaine, toutes les contraventions dont ils auront connaissance, afin que les contravenans soient punis selon les cas.

Titre 4. Refectoires.

Art. 1^{er}. Le déjeuner aura lieu pendant le semestre d'été à huit heures précises du matin, et à neuf heures pendant le semestre d'hiver; il durera un demi-heure.

Les reclus retourneront au travail immédiatement après le déjeuner, jusqu'à midi et demi précis, heure du diner en toute saison.

2. Il est enjoint aux servants de servir la soupe avant le son de la cloche, afin que les reclus trouvant leurs rations à leur place, on évite toutes difficultés au sujet des distributions.

3. Les détenus prononceront leur bénédiction à haute voix avant le repas et rendront grâce à la fin.

4. Le plus grand ordre devra regner pendant le repas, après lequel chaque reclus lavera sa gamelle et son assiette et les portera aux lieux indiqués.

Les refectoirs seront balayés avec soin après chaque repas et les tables bien nettoyées par les détenus qui seront de corvée.

5. La récréation qui suivra le diner se prolongera jusqu'à deux heures en tout saison, sous la surveillance immédiate d'un servant dans chaque district. A deux heures précises la cloche annoncera la reprise des travaux, et les surveillants feront l'appel dans leurs ateliers respectifs.

6. A huit heures du soir en tous tems la cloche sonnera le souper; chaque reclus se rendra rendra au refectoire dans le même ordre qu'au diner, jusqu'à neuf heures au plus tard, heure à laquelle on rentrera dans les dortoirs.

7. Le même régime sera observé dans les dortoirs et les refectoirs des deux sexes, exceptés pour les malades et les vieillards et les infirmes.

Titre 5. Cuisines et Dépense.

Art. 1^{er}. Les clefs des cuisines, offices, dépense et des armoires, qui en dependent sont confiées aux sœurs hospitalières chargées du service, qui veilleront à la conservation et à l'économie des comestibles et provisions de bouche commis à leurs soins et sous leur responsabilité.

2. L'entrée des cuisines, office et de la dépense est interdite aux reclus, hors le cas où ils y seraient employés par corvée et pour le service domestique, mais en aucun cas les reclus des deux sexes ne pourront être de corvée ensemble dans le même lieu ni pour service permanent.

3. Il est interdit aux préposés, surveillans et servans de toute classe de stationer dans les cuisines notamment aux heures des distributions, et des repas ni de s'y introduire sous aucune prétexte, hors les cas où ils y seraient appelés par leurs fonctions ou pour service domestique.

4. Les distributions journalières se feront en ce qui concerne la nature, et les quantités d'aliments, d'après le tableau de semaine affiché interieurement sur la porte de la cuisine.

5. Il est enjoint à la cuisinière en chef de veiller avec le plus grand soin à l'appret, à la salubrité, et à la parfaite cuisson des alimens; de mettre la plus scrupuleuse impartialité dans le partage et la distribution des rations, ainsi que dans l'assaisonnement des mets destinés tant aux reclus qu'aux employés; lesquels dans leurs classes respectifs doivent participer aux mêmes soins.

6. La cuisinière en chef tiendra la main à ce que les alimens soient prêts à porter aux refectoirs aux heures fixés pour les repas et avant la cloche, afin que le service n'éprouve ni retard ni interruption et que chaque reclus trouve en entrant sa ration à sa place.

7. L'aide des cuisines est spécialement chargé de la surveillance des chaudières, marmites et autres ustenciles de cuisine, qu'elle fera recurer et nettoyer jour par jour, afin de les entretenir dans la plus grande propreté.

Les tables, tablettes et potagères seront pareillement lavés et nettoyés chaque jour à l'eau bouillante, et toutes choses remise en place, afin de maintenir le bon order et l'arrangement.

8. Il est expressement defendu de distribuer aux employés et servans leurs rations crues ou en nature pour les emporter chez eux; toutes les rations, au contraire, seront apprêtées ensemble à la cuisine et distribuées par le guichet aux heures indiquées, afin d'éviter les préférences et la confusion.

9. Il sera remis tout les soirs, par la cuisinière en chef chargé des livres de dépense, au jardinier un bulletin des legumes à cueiller dans les jardins, pour les besoins du lendemain; le jardinier gardera ces bulletins pour être recensés à la fin de chaque mois par le commis aux entrées, qui en dressera un état sommaire, pour être inscrit en recette sur le registre de la dépense.

10. Il est expressement defendu à toutes personnes, et sous quelque pretexte que ce soit, de cueiller ou faire cueiller des fruits et legumes du jardin sans un bulletin dans la forme prescrite par l'article précédent, lequel restera pareillement aux mains du jardinier.

Titre 6. Ateliers.

Art. 1^{er}. Les surveillans attachés aux ateliers veilleront à ce que chaque ouvrier s'occupe assidûment et ne perde pas son temps.

Ils feront regner l'ordre et la tranquillité, dans leurs departemens respectifs, et en cas de desordre ou d'insubordination, ils feront leur rapport aux chefs des ateliers chargé du maintien de la discipline, qui infligera la punition après en avoir referé au directeur.

2. Les ateliers seront fermés pendant le travail, afin que les reclus n'en sortent que pour leurs besoins et aux heures indiquées.

3. Les reclus valides devront être imposés à une tâche de travail proportionnée à leur force et à leur aptitude; tout ouvrier qui ne fera pas sa tâche journalière ne sera payé qu'en raison de la quantité qu'il aura faite; il sera mis au pain sec et restera dans l'atelier pour travailler pendant les heures de récréation.

4. Tout ouvrier qui pendant trois jours consecutifs manquerait à faire sa tâche, restera durant les heures de repas et de récréation et pendant la nuit enfermé dans la loge de discipline, au pain sec de punition et à l'eau jusqu'à ce qu'il ait atteinte la tâche qui lui est imposée.

5. Tout ouvrier qui par négligence ou par méchanceté gâterait les matieres, outils, et ustensiles confiés à ses soins payera les dommages sur son tiers de réserve et sera puni en outre selon l'exigence du cas.

6. Tout ouvrier soigneux de son travail et qui fera plus que sa tâche ordinaire aura à son profit, independamment du tiers de réserve, les deux tiers de l'excédent de sa tâche, à titre de recompense et d'encouragement.

7. Tout reclus qui aura encouru la peine d'emprisonnement, subira sur le produit, de son tiers de réserve, une retenue de cinq centimes pour chaque jour de prison.

Le montant de ces retenues joint au produit des autres rétributions de l'oratoire, amendes, etc. formera un fonds de reserve qui sera reparté deux fois en forme de prime d'encouragement, aux reclus qui par leur bonne conduite et leur travail se seront fait distinguer parmi leurs camarades.

Titre 7. Oratoire.

Art. 1^{er}. Conformément au règlement général, il y aura instruction de religion et de morale deux fois par semaine dans la chapelle les Jeudis et Dimanches à sept heures du soir.

Tout les reclus valides sont tenus d'y assister dans le silence et le recueillement, sous l'inspection de leurs surveillans respectifs.

Les Dimanches et jours de fête maintenu par le concordat, tous les reclus et les employés du dépôt assisteront à la masse, qui se dira à huit heures et demi du matin, et aux vêpres, qui se diront à une heure et demi après midi.

2. Indépendamment de ces exercices religieuses il y aura, aux époques déterminées par l'autorité ecclésiastique, une instruction particulière pour les enfans destinés à faire leur première communion; cette instruction durera deux mois.

3. Les reclus une fois entrés dans la chapelle ne pourront en sortir qu'après l'office; c'est pourquoi les surveillans seront tenus de leur rappeler, en entrant cette disposition, afin qu'ils prévoient tous leurs besoins avant de se placer.

4. Les surveillans tiendront la main à ce qu'il n'y ait aucune communication pendant l'office entre les reclus et les assistants extérieurs; il leur est sur tout expressément défendu de rien recevoir par les barrières pour être remis aux reclus sous peine de punition exemplaire suivant le cas.

5. Le portier de l'intérieur chargé de l'ouverture et la clôture des portes de l'église veillera particulièrement au bon ordre et à la tranquillité dans la partie de la chapelle occupée par le public.

6. Les bulletins du produit de la quête et de la location des chaises seront remis le lendemain des fêtes au directeur pour être enregistrés.

7. En cas d'infraction au présent règlement il en sera référé par les surveillans et proposés à Monsieur le Directeur du dépôt, qui prononcera suivant les cas les peines encourues par les reclus.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—It has been calculated that the average number of beggars in this department (the Mouths of the Rhone) is 1,060, whereof 900 are natives and 105 strangers, besides 240 who traverse the department. The calculation having been made some years ago, the numbers may have increased with the population, which was then 313,000, and is now 359,000.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—The only relief granted to the poor travelling is by giving them a "passport d'indigent," furnished by the local authorities, in which their exact route is designated, and not to be deviated from; they receive, as they pass through each commune, three sous for every league of distance, equal to a halfpenny per mile, and lodging for the night: beggars have no relief but private charity.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? 2. Or boarded with individuals?—They are never billeted or quartered on householders or individuals, except it may be for the night, as above stated.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no houses of industry in this department.

4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—The religious institutions do not give assistance to the destitute, except it may be casually, and excepting the distribution to the poor by the priests of the money collected at the different churches.

5. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves? 6. Or in agriculture or on public works?—No work is provided for the destitute, as alluded to in these questions. In times of great distress, arising from scarcity or otherwise, the government may set forward some public work for the express purpose of giving employment to the poor; but it is by no means a regular system, and is seldom resorted to.

7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—The principal establishment of this nature at Marseilles is the Bureau de Bienfaisance, whose revenues, arising partly from the remnant property of some charitable institutions existing before the Revolution, partly from an annual allowance granted by the budget of the commune, partly by a tax on theatrical admissions, and from private subscriptions,

scriptions, amount altogether to about 140,000 francs, or 5,600 l., of which the major part is distributed in money to the "pauvres honteux" (those who have seen better days), and in providing necessities and medical assistance to the poor in general, by five directors, and at their sole discretion. Similar establishments exist in the other arrondissements of this department, but, with the exception of Aix, with very small means, principally dependent on the communal budgets, which in many cases furnish nothing. I am informed that in this commune, with a population of 140,000 inhabitants, the bureau relieves, more or less, 800 families of "pauvres honteux," and 4,000 families of indigent poor. There is also at Marseilles a Société de Bienfaisance, supported principally by private charity, whose chief object is the establishment of soup kitchens and dispensaries for the relief of the poor, and a school for the education of their children from four to nine years of age. No relief is ever given in money. Their annual revenue is about 40,000 francs, or 1,600 l.; and in times of great distress the local administration increases its funds, and supplies the poor with soup through its means.

8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—The number of children received in the school above-mentioned is about 200: they receive two meals a day and sleep at home; they are taught various trades, and apprenticed at the expense of the commune; there are also several gratuitous day-schools for children of the age of seven years and upwards, and who bring their own food.

9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—By the articles 203 to 211 of the Code Civil, relations are obliged to assist each other reciprocally when in a direct line of descent. A reference to those Articles will explain this subject more fully, and in greater detail, than I can at present give.

10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—I am not aware of any assistance being granted by loans.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—The only public establishment for the reception of this class is that called "La Charité," in which those are admitted who have attained the age of 70, and none before; the number of those individuals at present is about 350: they are there boarded, clothed and fed.

2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—They partake, in common with the other classes of the poor and destitute, of the relief afforded by the charitable establishments before-mentioned in No. 7.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?
4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders?—They are never so boarded, quartered or billeted.

5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—See the foregoing No. 9.

SICK.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—There are no district institutions for the reception of the sick, except the general hospitals. The average number of sick in the hospital of Marseilles may be about 450.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes? 3. Are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—None is afforded, except by the charitable establishments before mentioned in No. 7.

4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—There is a branch of the general hospital at Marseilles particularly destined for the reception of lying-in women; by its regulations unmarried women are obliged to remain 15 months after their confinement as nurses to the infant foundlings. There is also an institution at Marseilles, called "La Société de Charité Maternelle," whose funds amount to about 1,000 l., raised by private charity and by an allowance from the commune, whose object is to assist lying-in women at their own houses who have more than two children.

5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are no other modes, except the above mentioned, that I am aware of.

CHILDREN:

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—The French law does not consider an individual to be the father of an illegitimate child, or to be charged with its support, unless he voluntarily

Appendix (F.)

Foreign
Communications.

FRANCE.

Marseilles.

admits himself to be the father, and takes upon himself the consequences of such admission. Although the French code does not appear to notice the point, it is understood that a mother, proved to be such, is liable for the support of her illegitimate child. No such proof is allowed to be brought against the reputed father; his liability must be voluntary.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—I presume that the relatives of the mothers or fathers are in nowise compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—One large branch of the administration of hospitals of Marseilles is “La Charité,” which receives, as before mentioned, old men, and also all children under 12 years of age, whether illegitimate, orphans, foundlings or deserted; they are there received, and, when infants, principally nursed in the country. At this time there are 2,240 infants in this situation, and on their return they are boarded, lodged and educated.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children.

4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception? 5. Or billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals? 7. And to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—These questions are answered by the foregoing; they are never billeted on householders, nor boarded with individuals, except with their nurses.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. And to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no public establishments peculiar for the reception of these classes of the indigent poor; they obtain relief with the poor in general. In other respects these questions are answered by the foregoing.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?—Another branch of the administration of hospitals of Marseilles extends to the care of these classes, who are received into the hospital of St. Lazare, peculiarly destined for them; the establishment is very confined, and can hardly contain more than 120 individuals, although in some years it has been found necessary to admit a greater number, and it is now intended to build one much larger at the expense of the commune. There are also some private establishments, but which do not, I presume, come within the meaning of these inquiries.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. And to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to support them?—These classes are similarly situated, with reference to these questions, to the other classes of the poor, as before detailed.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives? 5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law “Extracts.”)—As the relief, as detailed above, can afford no encouragement to idleness, (although it may to immorality, from the facility with which illegitimate children are disposed of,) the expectation of it can have no prejudicial effect with regard to the points alluded to in these questions, and I should decidedly be of opinion that the individual subsisting on alms or public charity is a condition less eligible than the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class.

LABOURERS.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions in summer and in winter?—A day-labourer would obtain from 15 d. to 18 d. a day, without food; and a labourer by the year from 7 l. to 8 l. a year, with board and lodging.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not general.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—About 400 to 500 fr., or 16 l. to 20 l. a year; but owing to the climate being very fine, the wants of the labourer are less, and a comparison of his earnings with those of a labourer of a more northern climate might form an erroneous datum whereon to judge of their comparative well-being.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—This question is so very general, and would require such a mass of detailed information to form any thing like a correct general result, that it is impossible for me to reply to it.

5. Is

5. Is there any, and what employment, for women and children?—The employment of women and children is in the lighter labours of agriculture, the care of animals, and domestic services.

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—Women would earn, on an average all the year round, 7 d. to 9 d. a day; children under 11 cannot be counted upon to earn their bread; from 11 to 16 they would earn about the same as women.

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—This is replied to in the preceding.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—They could subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; their food is usually composed of vegetables, bread and farinaceous substances, made into soup, &c., and meat-soup or bouilli probably once a week.

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?—With a fair share of work during the year, and proper economy, they might make some savings; but they would be very trifling, probably not more than 2 l. to 3 l., if so much.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—It is not usual to annex any land to a labourer's habitation.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourer's habitations?—Labourers' habitations, when not situated on a farm, are generally owned by themselves, or by the poorer classes.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—The rent varies very much, according to the situation; about 2 l. a year may probably be a fair average for a man with his family.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—It is not customary to let land to labourers in the sense implied in this question.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—According to the population returns of this department, made out for the year 1831, there were 11,941 deaths in a population of 359,473 inhabitants, making a proportion of about 1 in 30.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—10,874 births to 359,473 inhabitants; about 1 in 34.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—2,304 marriages among 359,473 inhabitants; about 1 in 156.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—From calculations made of the whole births and marriages in this department during the years 1791, 1801, 1811, 1821, the average number of children to a marriage is 4½.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—On an average of the years 1816 to 1824, the proportion has been 11 legitimate births to 1 illegitimate for the whole department; but taking the commune of Marseilles separately, the proportion therein was 5 to 1. According to the population return of 1831, there were in the whole department 9,735 legitimate to 1,139 illegitimate births; about 9 to 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year? 20. Proportion that die before the end of their 10th year? 21. Before the end of their 18th year?—The information required in these questions may be obtained from the following table, made out on an average of 31 years, from 1791 to 1821, showing the ages of the then population at different periods of life, and deaths at each period, for the whole department:

	Deaths.	Individuals existing.	Proportion to the whole Population.
From Birth to 1 year -	2,271	8,161	$\frac{2}{78}$
1 to 10 years -	2,309	62,289	$\frac{15}{78}$
10 to 20 — -	483	54,220	$\frac{14}{78}$
20 to 40 — -	1,208	90,290	$\frac{22.5}{78}$
40 to 60 — -	1,297	63,390	$\frac{16}{78}$
60 to 80 — -	1,839	32,550	$\frac{8}{78}$
80 to 100 — -	462	2,150	$\frac{5}{78}$

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females? 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed? 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried, 2d, the married, save?—I have no means within my reach of answering these questions.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—There is established in this city a savings bank, but of which the agricultural population do not much avail themselves; the most favourite manner of investment among the poorer classes is to buy a little property, either in a house or land.

CANTON DE BERNE.

LETTER from D. R. Morier, Esq. to the Right Honourable Viscount Palmerston, K. E.
&c. &c. &c.

My Lord,

Berne, April 5th, 1834.

IN obedience to the instructions of your Lordship, conveyed to me in two circulars from the Foreign Office, dated respectively August 12 and November 30 of last year, directing me to transmit a full report of the legal or charitable provision for the support of the poor in Switzerland, I have now the honour to forward the accompanying documents, described in a memorandum thereto annexed, relative to that extensive and complicated subject as far as the canton of Berne is concerned.

The time required for collecting and arranging the materials of these documents, and the necessity of getting them translated from the German, will, I trust, plead my excuse with your Lordship for the apparent delay in transmitting them; indeed, but for the remarkable complaisance of Monsieur Tcharner, the chief of the department of the interior, it would have been impossible for me to have complied with your Lordship's directions in a manner at all corresponding with their object. With respect to the remaining 21 cantons of Switzerland, I must for the present crave your Lordship's indulgence; when it is considered that not only is each governed by different laws in respect to the maintenance of their poor, but that varieties exist in different districts of the same canton, the impossibility will be admitted of attempting to fill up the blanks in the paper of queries, inclosed in the circular of November 30th, with general answers comprising the whole subject, in the slightest degree approaching to accuracy.

On the general question, as to the effect of the Poor Laws on the moral condition of the population, it may suffice to point out to the attention of the Commissioners engaged in the inquiry, the following conclusion of the Bernese document, marked (No. 2), in answer to the last of a set of queries founded on your Lordship's first circular.

"Experience has clearly proved, that the number of paupers increases with the increase of the resources provided for them; and the 'communes,' which have the greatest revenues, have also a population the most in arrear in point of social industry and activity.

"This state of things, and particularly the charge constantly increasing in some districts of the country, and the complaints of the communes, which claim the protection of the Government against the demands and insolence of the poor and pretended poor, have induced the Government to think of a remedy for the evil. . . . It is nearly certain, that compulsory assistance will be, if not abolished, at least restricted to the case of paupers incapable of work. . . . The administration of the poor in the canton of Berne is thus on the eve of undergoing a radical reform."

I have, &c.

No. 1.

Recueil d'Ordonnances sur l'Entretien des Pauvres, sur les Ressources qui y sont affectées, sur leur Administration, et sur la Mendicité.

CANTON DE BERNE.

Ordonnance, relativement au traitement des pauvres, du 22 Décembre 1807; ayant les §§ 13 et 14, changés en vertu d'un décret du 16 Décembre 1812.

Voyez aussi, page 193 F, le changement apporté à l'égard de la suspension des droits de bourgeoisie.

Nous, Avoyer, Grands et Petits Conseils du Canton de Berne, savoir faisons :

Que, voulant faire droit aux plaintes réitérées, que l'on nous a adressées relativement au nombre toujours croissant des pauvres, et de ceux surtout qui s'attiraient leur misère par une vie licencieuse et oisive; nous nous sommes vu obligés de reprendre en main d'anciennes ordonnances oubliées, mais non supprimées, de les modifier selon qu'il conviendra maintenant, et de les remettre en vigueur; afin de mettre à l'abri le bien des gens laborieux et paisibles, et afin de faciliter et améliorer le traitement des personnes véritablement nécessiteuses, dignes de pitié et de secours.

C'est pourquoi, Nous

Ordonnons :

Ordonnons :

1. Les communes et les bourgeoisies, à la ville et à la campagne, sont obligées comme par le passé, à accorder protection mutuelle, secours et assistance à leurs concitoyens nécessiteux.

2. Nul ne pourra prétendre à l'assistance de sa commune, à moins que ne possédant pas de fortune, des défauts physiques ne l'empêchent de travailler, ou qu'il soit dénué de tout travail, sans que cela ne provienne de sa faute.

3. Chaque commune devra établir un contrôle des pauvres, d'après un modèle qu'on lui communiquera, sur lequel devra être marqué soigneusement, le nom de chaque pauvre secouru, l'état de sa fortune et de sa santé, ainsi que le montant et la nature du secours qu'il reçoit; on y ajoutera un rapport véridique sur sa conduite et sur les changemens qui surviendraient dans sa position.

5. Les aumôniers sont particulièrement adstreints à prendre connaissance exacte de l'état des pauvres, à surveiller attentivement ceux qui reçoivent des secours et à les exciter au travail. Ils rendront annuellement leurs comptes, et feront leur rapport sur l'état des nécessiteux. Durant tout le tems qu'ils rempliront la fonction d'aumônier, on ne pourra les forcer d'aucune manière à se charger d'autres devoirs publics, soit de préposé, soit de tuteur, etc.; ils seront de même exempts du service militaire pendant ce tems.

6. Pour satisfaire à l'entretien des pauvres, les paroisses et les communes sont adressées aux ressources suivantes :

- a) Usufruit des fonds appartenant aux pauvres, et des legs qui peuvent leur échoir.
- b) Aumônes et offrandes gratuites, données pour être distribuées.
- c) Assignations de terrain sur les biensfonds communaux.
- d) Dans les endroits où ces ressources seraient insuffisantes, ou manqueraient tout-à-fait, on pourra prélever sur tous les biens immeubles situés dans les limites de la paroisse ou de la commune une contribution en argent ou en nature au profit des pauvres; et au cas que les biensfonds soient trop chargés de cette taxe, on pourra les prélever sur les biens et la fortune mobiles de tous les bourgeois de la commune. Avant que ces contributions puissent être prélevées, elles devront être sanctionnées par notre conseil d'état.

7. La manière, dont les communes se sont servies jusqu'à présent pour régler et arrêter leurs comptes relativement aux pauvres, pourra à l'avenir être la même.

8. De même les communes pourront s'en tenir à telle manière, pour assister et maintenir leurs pauvres, qu'elles le jugeront convenable; soit par des secours d'argent régulièrement administrés, soit en les mettant en pension, soit en se partageant les enfans des pauvres, soit en les réunissant en un seul ménage, soit enfin en les plaçant dans des hôtels-dieu. Seulement il sera défendu, qu'à l'avenir quelqu'un des pauvres soit maintenu de maison en maison, à tour de rôle, à moins que des circonstances extraordinaires ne l'exigent; et que l'autorisation en ait été obtenue par les autorités du district.

9. La punition à infliger aux personnes qui seront arrêtées pour cause de mendicité, et conduites à la commune dont elles font partie, sera prononcée par les préposés de la commune, en en prévenant toutefois le juge du district; la punition pourra être de 8 jours au plus d'emprisonnement au pain et à l'eau, ou bien de 15 jours de travail domestique en tout genre, d'enchaînement au bloc, ou de travail aux champs, aux routes, aux digues, et aux fontaines.

Sont soumis aux-mêmes mesures de rigueur tous ceux qui étant assistés par la commune, se montreraient récalcitrans ou donneraient d'autres sujets de plaintes fondées contre eux; on peut de même leur défendre l'entrée des cabarets et auberges, et punir de la manière sus-dite ceux qui contreviendraient à cette défense.

10. Les communes ont encore le droit de faire surveiller par la voie de leurs préposés tous ceux qui par le luxe, l'ivrognerie, l'avidité des procès, et par une conduite deshonorante se mettent en danger de s'appauvrir; et de demander par voie légale, qu'on les mette sous tutelle. Tous les individus, qui se trouvent dans ce cas, pourront, sur la demande de la commune, et par un arrêt de défense du préfet, être empêchés pour un tems, plus ou moins long, de fréquenter les auberges.

11. Au cas qu'un pauvre assisté par sa commune parvienne à quelque fortune par voie d'héritage ou par d'autres événemens heureux, la commune pourra lui redemander le montant des secours qu'elle lui a fourni, sans y comprendre toutefois les intérêts. En cas que la commune ne fasse pas usage de ce droit du vivant de cet individu, elle pourra s'en servir auprès des héritiers de ce dernier, à moins qu'elle n'y renonce en leur faveur.

12. Aucun pauvre secouru ne pourra se marier sans le consentement de sa commune, et à moins qu'il n'ait remboursé les secours qu'il en a reçus. Cette loi est de même applicable aux veufs, qui, lors de leur premier mariage, auraient reçu pour eux ou pour leurs enfans des secours de la commune. On ne devra accorder des permissions de mariage à ceux, qui sont secourus à cause de maladie ou de défauts physiques, que par des raisons de force majeure. C'est pourquoi aucun ministre ne devra annoncer en chaire le mariage d'un individu, qu'il sait être secouru par sa commune, sans le consentement préalable de cette dernière.

(N. B.—Les §§ 13 et 14 ont été changés par la loi du 16 Decembre 1812.)

13. Si l'oisiveté, la licence, la passion du jeu, ou l'abandon volontaire d'un père de famille sont la cause que ses enfans tombent tous ou en partie à la charge de la commune; s'il est avéré, qu'il pourrait les maintenir à lui seul, en menant une vie laborieuse et économique, et s'il n'a tenu aucun compte des avertissemens de ses supérieurs, l'aumônier aura le droit de le faire citer en justice pour la restitution des secours que ses enfans auront reçus; et au cas qu'il ne paie pas, il pourra être condamné à être suspendu de ses droits civils et de bourgeoisie, ou à deux années au plus d'emprisonnement dans une maison de correction; en cas de récidive il sera condamné à une punition plus sévère. Ce règlement est de même applicable dans tous ses points aux hommes, dont les enfans illégitimes tombent à la charge de la commune.

Au cas qu'un individu accusé d'un des délits ci-dessus mentionnés soit hors du pays, ou que son lieu de domicile ne soit pas connu, on procédera d'abord contre lui par voie de citations publiques; ensuite par sentence à contumace, il sera honni et suspendu de ses droits civils et de bourgeoisie, jusqu'à ce qu'il ait comparu devant le juge; et qu'il se soit ou justifié des griefs dressés contre lui, ou soumis à la sentence prononcée contre lui, au cas contraire.

Cette suspension des droits civils et de bourgeoisie, prononcée par le juge, devra être rendue publique par les feuilles officielles, et n'a d'autres suites, quant au canton Suisse, dans lequel l'accusé se trouverait alors, que celles: que les enfans illégitimes que le dit accusé pourrait avoir eut après la proclamation ne seraient ni reconnus ni admis dans le notre; il en est de même d'un mariage qu'il contracterait sans le consentement de sa commune. Cette règle est aussi applicable à toutes les sentences de contumace prononcées depuis la promulgation de la loi du 22 Decembre 1807, par lesquelles des bourgeois du canton de Berne auront été suspendus de leurs droits civils et de bourgeoisie.

14. L'information et l'arrêt en première instance des causes que le sus-dit § nous désigne, appartiennent aux préfets des districts, sous réserve du droit d'appel à notre conseil d'état. Mais afin d'établir un traitement uniforme pour ces causes, nous ordonnons, que toutes les sentences prononcées pour des causes désignées dans le sus-dit § (soit qu'elles aient eu lieu après l'interrogatoire de l'accusé, soit qu'elles aient été prononcées à contumace) devront être envoyées au conseil de justice et de police, qui a été établi par le conseil d'état, et qui les soumettra à ce dernier en cas qu'il le jugera nécessaire. Nous voulons en outre, que, lorsqu'un condamné par contumace rentrera au pays, et qu'il proteste contre l'exécution de la sentence prononcée contre lui, le préfet du district d'où le condamné est, commence une nouvelle information de la procédure, et qu'il prononce une autre sentence, avec laquelle on en devra agir ainsi que prescrit cette règle.

15. Une mère qui négligerait ses devoirs maternels en abandonnant méchamment ses enfans, sera reconduite dans sa commune; elle y sera tenue au travail, et en cas qu'elle s'évaderait, ou qu'elle se montrerait récalcitrante, elle pourra, sur la demande de la commune et sous réserve de l'appel au conseil d'état, être condamnée à trois années au plus de réclusion dans une maison de correction.

Une même punition pourra, sur la demande des communes, être infligée aux femmes de mauvaise vie qui auraient eu plusieurs enfans illégitimes tombant à la charge de la commune.

16. Nul homme qui aura reçu ou recevrait encore des secours de sa commune, soit pour lui-même, soit pour ses enfans en bas âge, ne pourra siéger ni voter aux assemblées communales, à moins qu'il n'ait rembourse dûment ces secours, ou que la commune ne lui accorde par autorisation authentique le droit d'assister aux dites assemblées.

17. Si quelqu'un, étant en droit d'après cette ordonnance de réclamer secours et assistance de sa commune, n'en recevrait point du tout ou insuffisamment, il pourra porter plainte devant le préfet, qui entendra alors les raisons de la commune; il prendra des informations exactes sur la position du plaignant, et au cas qu'il ait quelque doute sur l'existence effective des défauts physiques de ce dernier, il pourra le faire visiter par un médecin patenté; ensuite il ordonnera ce qui lui paraîtra nécessaire; le tout sans aucune retribution en argent.

18. Nos préfets en général doivent prendre soin, de s'attacher particulièrement à cette branche importante de leurs devoirs, et de faire tenir en règle les contrôles et les comptes des pauvres; ils s'appliqueront à faire sentir peu à peu aux paroisses qui sont chargées d'un grand nombre de pauvres les avantages qui résultent à créer des établissemens, où l'on distribue tous les jours de la soupe aux indigens, et d'autres établissemens, où les nécessiteux, surtout les jeunes d'entre'ux, sont obligés de travailler; ces établissemens pourraient fort bien s'effectuer, si plusieurs paroisses se réunissaient, et elles pourraient à cet effet demander des avis à notre commission des pauvres. Enfin, les préfets sont tenus d'envoyer chaque année à notre conseil d'état un rapport sur l'état des pauvres de leur district, et sur les secours qu'ils auront reçus pendant l'année. Ces rapports seront conçus d'après un modèle fixe, dont on leur fera part.

19. Les ministres des paroisses, où de pareils établissemens auraient eu lieu devront les surveiller et chercher par leurs conseils à les améliorer. Ils sont tenus de faire un rapport consciencieux sur les progrès et l'état de ces établissemens, chaque fois que les préfets l'exigeront, ou du moins tous les six mois. Ils doivent en outre observer attentivement si les pauvres fréquentent le service divin, s'ils envoient leurs enfans à l'école, s'ils donnent à ces ces derniers une nourriture et des habillemens suffisans ; et s'ils les accoutument de bonne heure au travail et à l'application.

20. Les préposés doivent user rigoureusement du droit que leur donne le § 9, et les suivans, à l'égard des pauvres paresseux et indignes de secours ; et ils doivent avoir des procédés d'autant meilleurs envers ceux qui sont laborieux, et qui ne se sont pas attiré leur pauvreté par une mauvaise conduite. Les communes devront aider surtout et particulièrement les pauvres, non par de l'argent dont on fait souvent mauvaise usage, mais en leur fournissant des vêtemens, des outils, des vivres, et en leur procurant de l'ouvrage, même à ceux dont tout l'entretien leur tombe à charge.

21. Nous exhortons enfin tout père de famille et tout citoyen opulent et charitable, à ne pas donner son superflu ou le bien qu'il destine aux pauvres, à des mendiens oisifs, à des gens qui ne le méritent pas ; en général à s'informer si les objets de sa bonté en sont dignes, à mettre plutôt ensemble ces dons charitables, afin de les faire parvenir à des pauvres vraiment nécessiteux, soit par la voie des autorités, soit en les donnant aux fonds des pauvres. Cette exhortation devra être répétée de tems à autre par les ministres du culte.

22. La présente ordonnance devra être imprimée et ajoutée au recueil de nos lois ; elle sera distribuée en nombre suffisant aux ministres et aux communes, et elle devra être lue publiquement en chaire tous les Dimanches après Pâques.

CIRCULAIRE du Grand Conseil, en date du 4 Mars 1822.

Changement apporté dans le Règlement des Pauvres, relativement à la Suspension des Droits de Bourgeoisie.

Les relations fédérales à l'égard de tous les autres cantons Suisses, obligèrent le grand conseil, sous date du 16 Décembre 1812, de modifier la punition, que prononçaient contre des individus dont les enfans, soit légitimes soit illégitimes, tombent par leur conduite légère à la charge de leur commune, les §§ 13 et 14, de l'ordonnance sur les pauvres en date du 22 Décembre 1807, il commuta la peine de la perte totale des droits de bourgeoisie, que celle-ci prononçait, en simple suspension de la jouissance des dits droits. Mais cette suspension devint à son tour difficile à exécuter, à cause d'un concordat relativement aux heimathloses, convenu en 1820, entre la plupart des cantons Suisses et ratifié par nous, tellement que nous nous voyons dans l'obligation de changer les articles de l'ordonnance et loi du 16 Décembre 1812, qui se rapportent à ce sujet et d'ordonner ce qui suit :

“ Si l'oisiveté, la licence, la passion du jeu, ou l'abandon volontaire d'un père de famille, sont la cause que ses enfans tombent tous ou en partie à la charge de la commune, s'il est avéré qu'en menant une vie laborieuse et économe, il pourrait suffire à lui seul à l'entretien de sa famille, et qu'il a méprisé les exhortations de ses supérieurs ; de même si un homme devient onéreux à sa commune par l'entretien de plusieurs enfans illégitimes ; l'un et l'autre pourront être cités en justice par l'aumônier, pour le remboursement des secours fournis à leurs enfans, et au cas qu'ils ne paieraient pas, on sera en droit de leur infliger une des punitions designées dans le § 9, de l'ordonnance sur les pauvres ; on les punira préférentiellement par des travaux publics, plus ou moins longs, par la diffamation publique afin de mettre sur leurs gardes les personnes du sexe, par la suspension de leurs jouissances du droit de bourgeoisie, jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient satisfait à leur devoir ; ils pourront enfin être condamnés à deux années au plus de détention dans une maison de correction, et en cas de récidive on pourra leur infliger des punitions plus graves, suivant les cas et suivant le jugement du préfet, ces peines pourront être infligées au coupable partiellement ou plusieurs à la fois.

“ Au cas qu'un individu accusé d'un de ces délits, soit hors du pays, ou que son lieu de domicile ne soit pas connu, on procédera contre lui d'abord par voie de citations publiques, et ensuite au cas de non comparution, on le jugera par sentence de contumace ; en vertu de laquelle il pourra être condamné à une ou à plusieurs des peines ci-dessus marquées.

ORDONNANCE relativement aux Patentes de Secours, aux Certificats de Pauvreté, et aux Permis de Mendier; en date du 29 Août 1803.

Nous, Avoyers et Conseils du Canton de Berne,

Savoir faisons :

Que, ayant remarqué à plusieurs reprises, que non seulement les gouvernemens d'autres cantons Suisses conféraient des patentes de secours, mais que souvent même des autorités cantonales et des ministres du culte accordaient des soit disans permis de mendier, ce qui étant contraire à une bonne police et devenant onéreux au pays et à ses habitants: nous

Ordonnons,

1. Sans notre consentement exprès et donné par écrit, aucune autorité du canton ne pourra et ne devra conférer une patente de secours.
2. Toutes les autres patentes de secours devront être retirées par nos préfets et envoyées immédiatement à notre conseil de justice et de police.
3. Sans notre consentement par écrit nul étranger ne pourra aller dans notre canton à la quête de secours, sous peine de la confiscation de ses papiers et d'une punition plus sévère encore suivant les circonstances.
4. MM. les pasteurs et les autorités communales à la campagne, qui seront dans le cas de donner des certificats de pauvreté, devront les donner étant fermés, parcequ'il se commet souvent de grands abus par le moyen de pareils certificats ouverts.
5. La présente ordonnance sera imprimée, lue publiquement en chaire et affichée aux endroits accoutumés, afin qu'un chacun puisse en prendre connaissance et se régler là-dessus.

CIRCULAIRE du Conseil de la Justice et de la Police à tous les Préfets des Districts; relativement aux Permis de Mendier et aux Certificats d'Indigence.

Quelques préfets ayant à plusieurs reprises et occasions conférés ou du moins scellés des permis à mendier, en contrevenant ainsi à l'ordonnance du 29 Août 1803, le conseil de la justice et de la police trouve convenable de vous la rappeler en mémoire tant à vous M. le Préfet, qu'à tous les autres MM. vos collègues, en vous invitant de veiller attentivement à son execution.

On vous prie en même tems M. le Préfet de vouloir bien signifier à MM. les pasteurs et aux autorités communales de votre district, qui pourraient être dans le cas de conférer des certificats d'indigence, d'y marquer soigneusement à quelle fin on les a conférés, afin d'éviter par là les abus qui se font fréquemment des certificats conçus en termes généraux.

ORDONNANCE de la Police contre les Mendians; en date du 19 Février 1808.

Nous, Avoyers et Conseils du Canton de Berne,

Savoir faisons :

Que, afin de mettre des bornes à la mendicité toujours croissante, et afin de purger le pays de gens sans aveu et sans domicile, et pour établir enfin à ce sujet une surveillance sévère de la police, nous avons trouvé convenable et nécessaire d'ordonner ce qui suit :

1. Il est défendu à un chacun, qu'il soit du pays ou étranger, de mendier sous aucun prétexte, soit à la ville, soit à la campagne, soit sur les routes, soit dans les maisons.

2. Les mendiants de tout sexe et de tout âge, qu'ils soient ou non munis de passeports, devront être arrêtés par les gendarmes ou par les agens de police; ils seront conduits à leur commune, s'ils sont du district, et amenés pardevant le préfet, s'ils sont domiciliés dans un autre district, ou s'ils sont d'un autre canton ou d'un pays étranger.

3. Si ces pauvres arrêtés se trouvaient infirmes de manière à ne pouvoir gagner leur vie, la commune à laquelle ils appartiendront, devra, comme il est ordonné par le § 13, payer ces frais de transport, pour avoir négligé l'entretien de ses pauvres.

4. Mais s'il se trouvait que ces individus fussent du canton, et que ce ne fut que le penchant à l'oisiveté qui les eût portés à vivre ainsi aux dépens et à la charge de leurs concitoyens, le préfet aura le droit de leur faire infliger une punition corporelle, et la commune sera autorisée à les forcer au travail, jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient par là remboursé les frais de leur arrestation et de leur transport.

5. En cas de récidive tous les mendiants pourront être condamnés à huit jours au plus d'emprisonnement au pain et à l'eau; et si malgré cela ils retombent en faute, et que la commune le demande, ils pourront être punis par une détention plus ou moins longue dans une maison de correction; détention dont les frais retomberont sur la commune.

6. Les enfans qui seront attrappés à mendier devront être ramenés à la commune où ils sont domiciliés, après les avoir grondés et menacés; en cas de récidive ils seront fouettés avec les verges; et au cas qu'il soit avéré, que leurs parens ou ceux qui devaient leur en tenir lieu, savaient qu'ils allaient mendier et qu'ils ne les en aient pas empêchés, ils seront punis suivant l'exigence du cas; dans tous les cas ils seront tenus à payer les frais de transport occasionnés par leurs enfans.

7. Au cas que le mendiant arrêté appartienne à un autre canton, on pourra lui infliger selon le cas une punition corporelle; on le conduira sur les frontières du canton, après l'avoir muni d'un passeport, pour se rendre chez soi, et on lui fera payer ces divers frais, si toutefois il est en état de le faire.

8. Mais si ce mendiant appartenait à une des trois classes désignées ci-après:

- a.) Des soldats vagabonds, qui n'ont point ou de mauvais congés, des déserteurs de troupes étrangères;
- b.) Des heimathlosen, qu'ils soient ou non munis de passeports;
- c.) Des compagnons de métier dont les passeports et les livrets ne seraient pas en bon ordre; il devra être conduit sans retard par les gendarmes sur les frontières, et cela le plus que possible du côté de sa patrie, ou de son lieu de naissance, ou du lieu de sa résidence précédente, et dans le cas qu'il rentre une seconde fois dans le canton, on lui infligera une punition corporelle; et la punition de sa troisième infraction pourra alors être augmentée selon la gravité du cas, par la marque ou par une peine plus forte; et afin de reconnaître mieux de pareils individus, on devra prendre dès la première fois leur signalement bien exactement.

9. On conduira par devant le préfets, et on traitera d'après les ordonnances du 29 Août 1803 et du 27 Avril 1804, tous ceux qui, sans une autorisation, quêteront des secours; ainsi que les colporteurs, qui n'auraient pas de patentes ou qui en feraient mauvais usage.

10. On devra surtout examiner et interroger avec grand soin les vagabonds qui traversent le pays en troupe, c. à d. avec femme et enfans et autre compagnie, qui séjournent dans les bois, qui parlent l'argot des coquins, et qui porteraient des armes; on les punira selon qu'ils l'auront mérité, et on les fera conduire sur les frontières de leur domicile. Mais au cas que de graves soupçons tomberaient sur eux, on devra les conduire sur le champ à Berne, pardevant le juge d'instruction, et cela à leurs propres frais s'ils sont en état de payer. Cette règle est applicable aux autres vagabonds qualifiés dans les §§ 8, 9.

11. Il est défendu à tout habitant du pays de loger des mendiants qui rodent le pays, sous peine de sa propre responsabilité, en cas que malheur n'en arrive; au village, un chacun est tenu de conduire de pareils rôdeurs, en cas qu'ils demanderaient le logement pour la nuit, où qu'ils chercheraient à s'introduire furtivement dans les maisons, pardevant le préposé de la commune nommé à cet effet, qui prendra aussitôt les mesures nécessaires pour les loger, et pour les faire conduire le lendemain par un gendarme à la préfecture du district, pour en disposer selon l'exigence du cas.

12. Tous les étrangers, et les gens du pays suspects, qui seront amenés pardevant nos préfets en vertu de la présente ordonnance, devront être notés sur un contrôle dont le modèle sera envoyé à chaque préfet; tous les six mois il sera envoyé un extrait de ce contrôle à notre conseil de la justice, afin d'en faire part au juge d'instruction, et au chef des gendarmes.

13. Tout mendiant, vagabond, etc. qui aura été saisi par la police, conformément à la présente ordonnance, et qui aura été conduit, soit à sa commune, soit pardevant le préfet, soit pardevant le juge d'instruction, soit enfin aux frontières, payera à moins d'être entièrement pourvu de moyens; la valeur de 5 batz au gendarme qui l'a arrêté; il lui paiera de plus pour une distance de moins de six lieues, deux kreutzers par lieue; et pour une distance de plus de six lieues, un batz. par lieue; y compris toutefois son voyage de retour. Ensuite pour la nourriture, qui consistera en trois fois de soupe et de pain par jour, et à deux batz par fois; et un batz pour le lit, dans les endroits où ils devront s'arrêter la nuit.

Les mêmes émolumens et frais doivent être payés par les communes négligentes, auxquelles on aurait reconduit un de leurs pauvres.

Toutefois les gendarmes n'auront pas droit à des émolumens plus forts, lorsqu'ils arrêteront et conduiront une troupe entière de vagabonds, que pour un seul individu.

Pour l'entrée et la sortie de prison, si cette punition a été infligée en vertu du § 8, ou si ce n'est que pendant le tems du transport, il ne sera rien payé, si le prisonnier n'en a pas les moyens.

14. Tous les agens de police en général, et particulièrement nos préfets et employés, ainsi que les autorités communales, sont chargés d'exécuter exactement cette ordonnance.

15. Cette ordonnance sera imprimée et affichée aux endroits accoutumés, afin qu'un chacun en prenne connaissance; elle sera distribuée en nombre suffisant aux communes, et sera lue publiquement en chaire.

CIRCULAIRE de l'Avoyer et Conseil d'Etat de la Ville et République de Berne à tous les Préfets, hormis ceux du Jura, en date du 20 Février 1829, relativement aux Enfans Illégitimes et aux Dots Communales.

Les demandes réitérées de quelques communes, relativement à l'emploi que l'on pourrait le plus utilement faire des secours en argent, qu'un père était forcé, par sentence judiciaire, à fournir pour l'entretien et l'éducation de son enfant illégitime; nous ont engagés, après avoir oui notre conseil de la justice, à publier à ce sujet les ordonnances qui suivent ci-après. En même tems, nous avons été déterminés, par des publications fréquentes des communes relativement à l'abus qui existe, de doter des femmes pauvres, à établir à ce sujet aussi une règle et une loi générale. Quant à l'égard:

1. De l'emploi des sus-dits secours: les communes exerçant sur les enfans illégitimes le droit de père et vertu du § 204, du code civil, auront par conséquent le droit, et ce sera même leur devoir de chercher à utiliser le mieux possible les secours que sont obligés de payer les pères de ces enfans. Ainsi lorsque les communes appréhenderont des suites préjudiciables aux enfans, si on les laissait auprès de leurs mères, auxquelles leur entretien et leur première éducation appartient, en vertu du § 203 du dit code civil, ou que l'on voie, que le secours n'est pas employé et dépensé conformément à son but, les communes pourront placer ces enfans dans une autre pension, et payer cette pension des secours légaux du père; le surplus qui en resterait devra être placé à l'intérêt dans une caisse d'épargne, ou dans d'autre mains sûres, et le montant soigneusement gardé, pour être remis plus tard entre les mains de ces enfans.

2. Quant aux dots accordés à des femmes pauvres; outre qu'elles causent souvent des abus scandaleux, elles sont une assistance illégale accordée aux pauvres; car le § 2, de l'ordonnance, datée de Décembre 1807, concernant les pauvres, prescrit clairement, que ce ne sont que les indigens dénués de toute fortune, que des défauts physiques empêchent de travailler, ainsi que ceux qui souffrent innocemment d'un manque total d'ouvrage, qui y aient droit. Par cette raison, et parceque la loi du mois de Juin 1823, relativement aux contributions obligatoires pour les pauvres, n'autorise pas à percevoir des contributions pour cet objet, et parceque donc il serait fort illégal de se servir, pour de pareils secours, du produit provenant des contributions destinées à soulager de véritables nécessiteux: "Nous défendons, comme étant illegal, tout secours pareil, qui aura été pris sur le produit des fonds des pauvres ou des contributions; et nous vous chargeons par la présente à surveiller dans votre district, à ce qu'elle soit exécutée; à telle fin, lorsque vous arrêterez et examinerez les comptes des pauvres et des communes, et que vous y trouverez des articles de dépense pour de pareils secours; vous êtes autorisé de les rayer sur le champ."

La présente ordonnance sera ajoutée à notre recueil de lois et décrets, on vous en envoie ci-joint un nombre suffisant d'exemplaires imprimés, pour les distribuer à MM. les pasteurs et aux communes de votre district.

ORDONNANCE sur le Transport des Pauvres, en date du 17 Mai 1811.

Nous, Avoyers et Conseil d'Etat du Canton de Berne, savoir faisons:

Que, d'après des rapports réitérés du directeur de notre police centrale, et du juge d'instruction, nous avons été convaincus des mauvaises ordonnances et de l'arrangement vicieux, qui existent relativement au transport des pauvres; et que nous voulons aviser aux aux moyens propres à fournir aux personnes indigentes et infirmes le transport nécessaire pour les conduire à leur lieu de domicile ou de destination, voulant par là leur ôter le prétexte pour mendier, et soulager le pays et les communes. C'est pourquoi après avoir ouï le rapport de notre conseil de justice et de police, nous avons résolu, et nous

Ordonnons :

1. Il devra y avoir à chaque station de gendarmerie, soit sur les frontières, soit dans l'intérieur du canton, des voitures pour le transport des pauvres de station en station ; ces voitures devront être fournies par un pourvoyeur, élu par les communes avec l'approbation du préfet.

2. Ces voitures de pauvres sont destinées à transporter les personnes indigentes, qui se trouveraient dans un des cas ci-après marqués, à la frontière la plus voisine de leur pays, si elles sont étrangères, et à leur commune ou au lieu de leur destination, si ce sont des gens du canton :

a) Des personnes malades ou qui ont des défauts physiques qui les empêchent de marcher ; des vieillards, des enfans, des femmes grosses, qui ne pourraient continuer leur route à pied.

b) Des prisonniers pauvres, qui seraient dans un des cas ci-dessus mentionnés.

c) Des personnes qui arriveraient sur la frontière par les moyens de transport d'un autre pays ou canton ; qui se trouveraient dans un cas pareil à ceux qui sont désignés plus haut, et qui pourraient se légitimer comme citoyens du canton, ou qui seraient obligés d'y passer pour arriver au lieu de leur destination.

Les stations de gendarmes placées aux frontières n'accepteront aucune autre classe de pauvres transportés sur nos frontières par voies de transport étrangères ; et ils les renverront aussitôt.

3. Pour obtenir un pareil moyen de transport on devra s'adresser au préfet du district, qui examinera le cas, et qui se fera donner au besoin un certificat du médecin ; lorsque de cette manière il aura reconnu la nécessité du transport, il délivrera au requérant une feuille de route et autant de coupons de transport qu'il aura de stations à faire pour arriver au lieu de sa destination, ce qui devra être noté sur la feuille de route. Ces feuilles de route et ces coupons devront être conçus et imprimés d'après un modèle, voulu pour tel effet.

Dans les districts des frontières, où la préfecture serait à une grande distance de la frontière, le préfet aura soin d'établir dans le voisinage des stations de frontière, un agent auquel il pourra conférer le droit d'accorder des permis pour moyens de transport aux personnes venant de l'extérieur, qui seraient à ranger dans une des classes désignées dans le § 2.

4. En cas que les pauvres, dont l'état nécessite les moyens de transport, demeuraient dans les endroits du canton éloignés des stations de transport, ils devront être voiturés par leurs communes ou par les propriétaires jusqu'à la station la plus voisine dans la direction du lieu de leur destination, ainsi que cela a eu lieu jusqu'à présent ; il faudra toutefois avoir obtenu auparavant du préfet la feuille de route et les coupons.

5. Pour une voiture à un collier, qui doit être solide, bien arrangée, et qui ne doit recevoir que quatre personnes y compris le voiturier, il sera payé au fournisseur à raison de cinq batz par lieue, et autant pour le retour ; une pareille voiture à deux colliers sera payée sept batz et demi par lieue, et autant pour le retour, qu'elle ait eu une charge ou non. Le paiement n'aura lieu que sur la présentation des coupons en bonne forme, tels que les prescrit le § 3. Le paiement sera refusé, si le transport a été fourni au moyen d'autre attelage que des chevaux.

6. A ces fins les fournisseurs devront remettre annuellement dans le courant de Janvier, leurs coupons aux préfets, qui les délivreront au directeur de la police centrale et au juge d'instruction, ce dernier en soldera le montant et rendra ses comptes au conseil de la justice et de la police.

L'Etat ne bonifie rien pour les transports fournies de l'intérieur du canton jusqu'à la station la plus voisine.

8. Ne sont pas compris sous cette règle du précédent § les contrées ou les domaines sur lesquels, suivant des titres et des documens encore existens, pèse le transport obligatoire des pauvres ; cette obligation reste donc alors soumise à la détermination de la loi du 17 Décembre 1804.

9. Si le cas avenait, que plusieurs individus venant de différentes directions arrivassent à la fois dans la même station, ou que pour diverses raisons ils eussent reçu plusieurs coupons, mais que ce n'eût été qu'une seule voiture qui les eût transportés, le gendarme de garde à cette station devra le noter sur les coupons, afin que le même transport ne soit pas payé deux fois ; il en est de même, lorsque la voiture en s'en retournant aurait à conduire un autre transport de pauvres.

10. Les distances d'une station à une autre seront les mêmes que celles fixées dans le règlement pour la gendarmerie (p. 103—124.)

11. Nos préfets ainsi que leurs agens aux stations des frontières, qu'ils sont en droit de s'adjoindre conformément au § 3, sont autorisés à payer comme argent de route, à chaque individu, auquel ils donneront un coupon, un batz par heure; s'il est du canton il le recevra jusqu'à sa destination, et jusques aux frontières s'il est étranger.

Deux enfans âgés au dessous de quatre ans, recevront ensemble l'argent de route d'une grande personne.

12. Cet argent de route devra être marqué à mesure sur la feuille de route. Les voyageurs devront s'en nourrir, et ne sont autorisés à demander que le logement pour la nuit. Ils ne devront pas mendier, ni tomber à charge à qui que ce soit et d'aucune autre manière sous peine d'être punis selon la détermination de l'ordonnance du 19 Février 1808.

13. Le compte du montant de ces indemnités de route sera envoyé (ainsi qu'il a été ordonné déjà relativement aux frais du transport, § 6 et 7.) par MM. les préfets, au directeur de la police centrale et au juge d'instruction; et si cela concernait des citoyens du canton, leurs communes devront les restituer.

14. Du reste, nous confirmons toutes nos ordonnances de police, relativement aux mendiants et aux passeports, et nous enjoignons sérieusement à tous nos agens de police, de renvoyer et d'éloigner des frontières les mendiants étrangers, et tout individu qui ne serait pas muni de passeports bien en règle; d'avoir le même soin à l'intérieur, à l'égard des mendiants et des vagabonds, de les faire passer les frontières, ou les faire conduire à leur commune, suivant l'exigence du cas, et de les faire punir avec toute la rigueur de la loi, s'ils l'ont mérité.

15. L'exécution de cette ordonnance est conférée à tous nos préfets en général, mais en particulier à notre directeur de la police centrale, et à notre juge d'instruction, lequel devra donner les instructions nécessaires aux fournisseurs des transports, et faire imprimer les feuilles de route et les coupons.

16. La présente ordonnance sera imprimée et rendue publique par les voies accoutumées, et elle aura force de loi pendant un espace de tems d'épreuve de quatre ans; après lequel tems, nous nous réservons, ou de garder pour toujours ces nouvelles institutions, après y avoir toutefois apporté les modifications convenables, ou de remettre cet objet dans l'ancien état de choses.

ORDONNANCE relativement à la Perception de l'Impôt Aubain et du Droit d'Entrée; en date du 23 Mai 1804.

Nous, Avoyer, Grand et Petit Conseils du Canton de Berne, savoir faisons:

Que, en considération du projet que notre conseil d'état nous a présenté relativement à la fixation des droits et devoirs des aubains, envers la commune dans laquelle ils établiraient leur domicile, ainsi que de ceux qui acquerreraient des biensfonds dans une commune de laquelle ils ne seraient pas bourgeois; nous avons trouvé convenable d'établir ce qui va suivre. A cet effet, nous

Ordonnons:

1. Tout citoyen, soit du canton, soit de la Suisse, qui voudra s'établir dans une commune dont il n'est pas bourgeois, est tenu, soit qu'il y acquierre des biensfonds, soit que simplement il y établisse sa demeure, de déposer, avant son entrée, une lettre d'origine pour lui et pour tous les siens, entre les mains du conseil de la ville ou de la commune; faute de quoi il devra être aussitôt renvoyé de la dite commune.

Quant à l'établissement des étrangers, on devra se conformer d'après notre ordonnance du 5 Décembre 1803.

2. Le conseil de la ville ou de la commune remettra à ceux qui auront déposé leurs lettres d'origine, un certificat, dans lequel devra être marqué le reçu des dits papiers.

3. Tous les 10 ans ces lettres d'origine devront être ou changées ou renouvelées.

4. A cet effet lorsque l'on rendra annuellement les comptes sur les biens communaux, on devra en même temps présenter une liste exacte de ces aubains, avec la date de leurs lettres d'origine, ainsi que les lettres d'origine de ceux qui se seront établis dans la commune pendant l'année dernière.

5. En cas qu'un aubain ait été toléré dans une commune pendant l'espace de dix années, sans qu'on lui ait demandé la déposition ou le renouvellement de sa lettre d'origine, et au cas que le dit aubain ne jouisse d'aucun autre droit de bourgeoisie, la commune devra le secourir ou entretenir s'il tombait dans la misère et l'indigence.

6. Lorsqu'un aubain quittera la commune dans laquelle il s'était domicilié, on devra lui remettre sa lettre d'origine, après que lui-même aura rendu la quittance qu'on lui en avait donnée.

7. Sont exempts de déposer leurs lettres d'origine, ainsi que le prescrit le § 1.

a) Les ecclésiastiques et les employés civils, que leur charge oblige à demeurer dans les communes.

b) Ceux qui sont employés au service militaire dans une commune, et les sergens de police pendant qu'ils sont en charge, enfin les vachers, en tant qu'ils ne demeureront pas pas plus de huit mois dans une commune ; ils devront cependant montrer leur lettre d'origine aux autorités communales si elles le demandent.

8. Tout conseil de ville ou de commune est autorisée à percevoir un droit annuel, appelé impôt aubain, de tous ceux qui fixent leur domicile dans leur territoire ; qu'ils soient Suisses, ou étrangers, ou citoyens du canton.

9. Le conseil d'état fixera le montant de l'impôt aubain que chaque commune sera en droit de percevoir ; à cet effet il exigera de chaque conseil de ville ou de commune un rapport, qui sera déposé dans le greffe de chaque district, afin que les aubains puissent en prendre connaissance, et adresser au cas de besoin leurs réclamations au préfet ; pour cela il leur est donné un terme de quatre semaines, à dater du jour où la connaissance du rapport aurait été rendue publique.

10. Cet impôt aubain ne pourra être fixé en dessus de dix francs, ni en dessous de sept batz et demi.

11. Sont exempts de payer l'impôt aubain :

- a) Ceux désignés dans l'article 7.
- b) Ceux qui rempliraient à la ville ou au village l'emploi de professeur ou de maître d'école.
- c) Ceux enfin qui en vertu du § 14 ont été chargés de quelque tutèle, ou qui pendant ces charges auraient eu à vaquer à un emploi communal.

12. L'impôt aubain sera payable d'avance tous les six mois, savoir : chaque 1^{er} Janvier et chaque 1^{er} Juillet, ou sans cela à dater du moment, où quelqu'un fixe son domicile sur le territoire de la commune. Les autorités auront soin de fixer et de faire connaître publiquement le jour ou les jours auxquels la perception devra se faire.

13. Si un aubain ne paye pas l'impôt voulu au terme fixé, on commencera d'abord par le prévenir et l'exhorter, en cas qu'il n'en tiendrait pas compte, et que sous le délai de quinze jours il ne payerait pas son dû, le conseil de la ville ou de la commune sera autorisé à le faire poursuivre par voie de saisie, contre lequel procédé l'aubain ne pourra alléguer ni excuse ni défense. Mais au cas qu'il ne possède aucun bienfond à la commune, on pourra porter plainte au préfet et demander à ce que le coupable soit éloigné sur le champ et sans remise hors de la commune.

14. Dans aucun cas et sous aucun prétexte les communes ne pourront exiger que les aubains fournissent, outre le paiement de leur impôt légal, une part plus grande pour les dépenses publiques, que n'en paient les bourgeois mêmes de la commune ; ils sont toutefois obligés au mêmes service personnels que ces derniers, et ceux d'entr'eux qui possèdent des biensfonds dans la commune et qui sont citoyens du canton, pourront être tenus à remplir des charges communales et l'emploi de tuteur ; de même qu'ils auront à supporter les contributions perçues sur les biensfonds par la commune, aussi bien que les autres propriétaires.

15. A part les cas notés dans les § 1 et 13, on pourra chasser pour les cas suivans un aubain qui ne posséderait pas de biensfonds dans la commune.

- a) Si lui ou les siens se rendent coupables à plusieurs reprises de délits forestiers. Le conseil d'état est autorisé, pour empêcher les aubains de nuire aux bois, à imposer aux propriétaires des maisons telles obligations qui lui paraîtront convenablement pourvoir se faire à l'égard de la localité.
- b) Si lui ou les siens tombent par leur mendicité à la charge de la commune, malgré les avis et les exhortations.
- c) S'il n'envoie pas ses enfans à l'école, malgré que l'invitation lui en ait été faite ; à moins qu'il ne puisse prouver que d'une autre manière il prenne soin de leur éducation.
- d) Si en dépit des remontrances il continue par son penchant à l'ivrognerie, et par une conduite licencieuse à troubler le repos de ses voisins.
- e) S'il se fait mettre entre les mains de la justice criminelle, ou si pour des fautes plus ou moins graves, il a comparu à plusieurs reprises devant une cour civile.

Dans un de ces cas et sur la dénonciation de la commune, le coupable pourra être renvoyé hors de la commune par le préfet, du reste le séjour d'un aubain dans une commune est entièrement indépendant de la volonté de l'autorité du lieu.

16. Tout conseil de ville ou de commune est autorisé à percevoir un droit d'entrée de tout individu qui n'étant point bourgeois de la commune, y acquiert un bienfond.

17. Sont exempts du paiement des droits d'entrée les aubains qui auraient un droit de bourgeoisie dans une commune de la même paroisse ; ainsi que ceux qui deviennent propriétaires d'un bienfond par voie d'héritage, ou par suite de banqueroute du premier possesseur. Quant aux contrées, dans lesquelles les communes se sont désaisies entr'elles du droit d'entrée reciproque, cette ancienne coutume pourra continuer à y faire loi.

18. Le droit d'entrée, payable par l'acquerreur du bienfond, sera fixé au quatre pour cent de la valeur du dit bienfond. On pourra avoir recours à une estimation impartiale dans les cas où la valeur du bienfond ne serait pas marquée sur le titre d'acquisition.

19. Les conseils des villes et des communes auront de plus le droit de percevoir un droit d'entrée, même de ces aubains, qui ne posséderaient aucun bienfond dans la commune ; ce droit d'entrée équivaldra le montant annuel de l'impôt aubain.

20. Les droits d'entrée seront affectés aux fonds des pauvres, et placés à intérêts. Les produits de l'impôt aubain par contre devront servir, ou à l'entretien annuel des pauvres, ou à celui des églises et des écoles publiques.

21. Toutes les difficultés qui surviendraient par rapport à cette ordonnance, entre les municipalités et les aubains, seront jugées sommairement par le préfet du district, après qu'il aura entendu les raisons des deux parties; sous réserve de l'appel au conseil d'état.

22. La présente ordonnance prendra force de loi, relativement à la perception des droits d'entrée et de l'impôt aubain, à dater du 1 Juillet 1804.

23. Par cette loi sont supprimés les déterminations et les significations de toutes les précédentes ordonnances, lois et concessions à ce sujet.

24. La présente ordonnance sera imprimée et rendue publique, et elle sera affichée aux endroits accoutumés.

ORDONNANCE qui autorise à renvoyer les Aubains, non seulement hors de la Commune mais encore hors du District. Circulaire en date du 18 Décembre 1821.

Le § 15 de l'ordonnance sur les aubains détermine les cas pour lesquels un aubain peut être renvoyé de la commune, sur la dénonciation de celle-ci et de l'autorité du lieu. Mais l'expérience a prouvé que le renvoy simple hors de la commune était souvent fort indifférent au coupable, et que des mesures de police étaient nécessaires pour éloigner et bannir ces sortes de gens.

C'est pourquoi, après avoir ouï le rapport de notre conseil de justice, nous avons trouvé bon et convenable d'étendre le sens du § 15 de la dite ordonnance, que nous confirmons entier, de manière que, dans les cas désignés, et sur la dénonciation des communes et de l'autorité du lieu, le préfet sera autorisé à renvoyer, selon les cas, les coupables hors de la commune et même hors du district, s'ils n'en sont pas bourgeois. Après quoi vous devrez agir en cas de besoin.

DECRET relativement au Droit d'Entrée, qui doit être payée quand on se marie avec une Femme étrangère ou d'une autre Commune; en date du 20 Décembre 1816.

Nous, Avoyer, Grand et Petit Conseils de la Ville et République de Berne, savoir faisons:

En considérant d'une part que les droits d'entrée "qui existaient avant l'année 1798 dans beaucoup de villes, dans des communes, et dans des districts entiers, par suite d'anciens titres et de privilèges expressement accordés par l'ancien gouvernement, en vertu desquels il fallait que des femmes étrangères ou d'une autre paroisse obtinssent en payant le droit de bourgeoisie de l'endroit du mari et cela avant le mariage," étaient fondés sur la justice et sur l'équité, puisque ces femmes acquerraient par leur mariage les droits et jouissances attachés à la bourgeoisie de leur mari: En considérant d'une autre part que la perception de ces droits offre une ressource nouvelle et abondante aux communes pour l'entretien de leurs pauvres, dont les fonds ont été considérablement diminués par l'époque actuelle et par l'augmentation prodigieuse des nécessiteux; nous avons été portés à acquiescer au vœu général du pays, en rétablissant ces droits par une loi, et en leur donnant une plus grande extension sur toutes les communes du canton. C'est pourquoi et afin de mettre en une proportion équitable le montant des droits, et les revenus et droits de chaque endroit, et afin d'alléger aux communes la perception de ces droits, nous

Ordonnons:

1. Toute commune du canton est autorisée à percevoir ce droit d'entrée chaque fois qu'un de ses concitoyens se marie avec une femme d'une autre paroisse; bien entendu toutefois, que dans les paroisses composées de plusieurs communes qui ont chacune une caisse des pauvres à part et une concession spéciale pour la perception de l'impôt aubain, l'on pourra percevoir le droit d'entrée pour chaque mariage qui aura lieu entre les habitants de ces différentes communes, quoiqu'elles soient de la même paroisse. De même il est entendu, que l'on ne pourra pas percevoir ce droit dans ces communes du canton qui, en vertu d'anciens privilèges sanctionnés par le gouvernement, ne perçoivent réciproquement aucun impôt aubain entr'elles.

2. Le montant de ce droit d'entrée a été fixé ainsi qu'il suit:

- a) Pour les bourgeoisies du canton qui se trouveront dans un des cas désignés dans le § précédent, ce droit d'entrée se montera à cinq fois la valeur de l'impôt aubain établi par suite de concession dans la commune de leurs maris.
- b) Les Suissesses des autres cantons auront à payer quinze fois cette valeur.
- c) Les étrangères devront payer vingt fois la valeur de l'impôt aubain.

Quant

Quant aux communes qui ne perçoivent pas d'impôt aubain, ou qui autrefois percevaient, en vertu d'anciens titres, des droits d'entrée plus considérables, le conseil d'état pourra y fixer le montant de ce droit proportionnellement aux biens communaux, aux jouissances résultant du droit de bourgeoisie, et aux anciens titres fondés; toutefois le montant pour la plus haute classe ne pourra pas être fixé au de là de deux cents francs.

Note.—Conformément à une ordonnance du 13 Janvier 1823, un bourgeois du canton, qui se mariera avec une femme du canton de Soleure, paiera cinquante francs à sa commune; et la mariée paiera un droit d'entrée de cent francs.

3. Jusqu'à ce que le paiement de ce droit d'entrée soit certifié par un reçu en bonne forme de l'autorité du lieu, nul ecclésiastique aura le droit de bénir le mariage d'un bourgeois du canton avec une femme qui n'est pas de la même commune que son époux. Les ministres qui contreviendront à cette ordonnance, seront garans et responsables du paiement à la commune.

4. Pareillement, et sous la même responsabilité de l'ecclésiastique contrevenant, le mariage d'aucun bourgeois du canton que se trouve à l'étranger, ne pourra être annoncé en chaire, si le dit reçu n'a été présenté auparavant; ainsi que le prescrit le § 3.

5. Au cas que de pareils mariages se contractent à l'étranger sans avoir été préalablement annoncés dans notre canton, le contrevenant sera suspendu de ses droits et jouissances de bourgeoisie, lui et toute sa famille, jusqu'à ce qu'il ait payé le droit d'entrée voulu; sauf encore en outre les autres suites qui pourraient résulter de sa contravention.

6. Les droits d'entrée échéans seront joints à la ville et dans les communes aux fonds des pauvres; et leur usufruit sera employé à assister les pauvres, conformément aux ordonnances.

7. Le présent décret abolit et supprime toutes les précédentes ordonnances relativement à ce sujet, mais nommément la loi Helvétique du 18 Août 1798; il prendra force de loi à dater du 1 Janvier 1817; et de là en six années le conseil de la justice est tenu de nous faire un rapport sur la réussite et l'efficacité de ce décret. Il sera imprimé dans les deux langues, lu publiquement en chaire, et affiché aux endroits accoutumés; afin qu'un chacun puisse en prendre connaissance, et il sera joint au recueil de nos lois et décrets.

Donné dans notre assemblée du grand conseil, Berne, le 14, 16 et 20 Décembre 1816.

COMMENTAIRE sur la Perception des Droits d'Entrée, en date du 6 Mars 1829.

Il est parvenu à notre connaissance, que l'on interprétait de différentes manières le § 19 de la loi du 23 May 1804, relativement à la perception de l'impôt aubain et du droit d'entrée; savoir, que dans des endroits, on suivait le principe, "de se faire payer le droit d'entrée par un jeune homme, dont les parens demeureraient comme aubains dans la commune sans posséder des biensfonds, si, pour raisons de mariage ou autres causes, il faisait ménage à part;" tandis qu'en d'autres endroits on suivait le principe contraire.

Après avoir examiné le cas, et ouï là dessus le rapport de notre conseil de la justice et de la police, nous avons trouvé convenable de donner l'éclaircissement suivant au § 19 de la dite loi: c. à. d. qu'il ne pourra être exigé des droits d'entrée, puisqu'il n'y a pas lieu à une entrée proprement dite, et que d'après le § 17 les héritiers des aubains qui possèdent des biensfonds, ne peuvent être obligés à payer de rechef le droit d'entrée.

Cette interprétation devra être mise à la connaissance de tous les préfets, et elle sera ajoutée au recueil des lois et décrets.

Donné à Berne ce 6 Mars 1829.

STATUTS DU CODE CIVIL.

Indemnisations d'une Commune pour les Enfants Illégitimes.

Statut 170. Le consistoire condamnera le père d'un enfant illégitime à payer une somme d'indemnisation à la commune, à la charge de laquelle le dit enfant tombe.

Statut 171. Cette somme sera fixée d'après les principes contenus dans le statut 169, et ne devra pas passer la somme de cinq cents francs, ni être en dessous de cinquante francs. Cette somme est payable aussitôt qu'elle aura été fixée, et son paiement pourra être requis par voie judiciaire, après quinze jours d'écoulés.

Statut 172. On devra rembourser cette somme d'indemnisation au père, si son enfant obtient d'une des manières désignées dans les statuts 147, 167, le droit de bourgeoisie de l'endroit du père.

RESTRICTION des Contributions Communales pour les Pauvres; Ordonnance datée du 14 Avril 1819.

Les Avoyers et Conseils de la Ville et République de Berne, à tous les Prefets, hormis ceux du Jura :

Il nous est parvenu que nonobstant le meilleur marché actuel des vivres, les contributions communales et celles des pauvres ont plutôt augmenté qu'il diminué dans plusieurs communes, surtout dans l'Emmenthal, et qu'en général la dépense et l'emploi s'en faisaient dans beaucoup d'endroits fort arbitrairement. Nous avons été engagés par là à charger notre commission d'économie rurale de prendre des informations exactes sur l'état des dites contributions dans tout le canton, et de faire établir à ce sujet des règles générales.

Mais en attendant et jusqu'à ce que ce travail long et pénible soit achevé, nous avons trouvé convenable d'ordonner quelques mesures préalables, afin de limiter d'une part autant que possible les contributions communales et celles des pauvres; et afin de supprimer d'autre part plusieurs abus qui se sont glissés dans les administrations communales, et dont la continuation et autant préjudiciable à la chose publique, qu'elle menace le bien-être du pays. A cet effet, nous

Ordonnons :

1. Afin de limiter le plus possible les contributions communales, ainsi que celles pour les pauvres, qui sont devenues un fardeau bien onéreux pour la plupart des citoyens de notre canton, il est défendu expressément à toutes les autorités communales d'imposer à l'avenir des contributions plus fortes que celles qui résulteront d'une moyenne tirée du montant des contributions des années 1813, 1814 et 1815; y compris les frais occasionnés par les pauvres entretenus tour à tour et la part équitable dont sont taxés les contribuables qui demeurent hors de la commune. Cette moyenne devra être aussitôt extraite des dits comptes et calculée à part, pour les contributions communales, et à part pour celles des pauvres; nos préfets la confronteront avec les comptes, et en donneront sans retard avis et connaissance à notre commission d'économie rurale.

Au cas que cette somme, moyenne de l'une ou l'autre espèce de contributions, ne suffise pas pour faire face aux besoins, les communes qui se trouveraient dans ce cas, pourront nous demander notre consentement, à ce qu'elles perçoivent encore une ou plusieurs contributions, ce qui leur sera accordé, entant qu'elles produiront un certificat en bonne forme, comme quoi la susdite somme moyenne est insuffisante.

Les communes qui pendant les dites années n'auraient point perçu de contributions, et qui seraient plutôt obligées d'en percevoir, devront aussi demander notre autorisation à cet effet.

Au cas que les particuliers d'une commune ne pourront s'accorder sur la détermination du maximum, on en informera le préfet, qui, si les partis ne peuvent s'arranger à l'amiable, devra en faire son rapport à la commission de l'économie rurale, et lui envoyer, sans entrer en correspondance ultérieure, tous les comptes en original des trois années d'après lesquelles l'évaluation de la moyenne doit avoir lieu. Cette règle devra être appliquée quand même elle ne serait pas conforme aux principes de telle ou telle concession sanctionnée par le gouvernement.

2. Comme l'expérience a prouvé depuis quelque tems, avec quelle facilité et légèreté les communes se laissent entraîner à être caution pour leurs concitoyens, Nous ordonnons, afin d'arrêter ce mal qui appauvrit les communes et qui porte préjudice aux personnes, qui n'étant pas bourgeois de ces communes, y possèdent cependant des biensfonds, que toutes les assemblées communales, où il se devra traiter de cautionnements, doivent être d'abord approuvées par le préfet, et seront ensuite lues publiquement en chaire deux Dimanches de suite après le service divin, avec la spécification des sujets que l'on devra y traiter.

Le cautionnement ne pourra être arrêté que sur le vote des deux tiers au moins des bourgeois de la commune présents à l'assemblée et ayant droit de vote, et les conséquences d'une pareille caution seront mises à la charge uniquement des bourgeois de la commune.

3. Quant aux emprunts que les communes seront dans le cas de faire, ils ne pourront être arrêtés que dans une assemblée des bourgeois de la commune, convoquée de la manière prescrite dans le § 2, et dans laquelle les deux tiers au moins des assistans devront voter en faveur de l'emprunt.

Les mêmes règles s'appliqueront, non seulement aux emprunts, qui devront servir uniquement aux bourgeois de la commune, mais aussi aux emprunts dont une partie retombe sur les personnes qui sans être bourgeois de la commune, possèdent des biensfonds sur son territoire; tels sont, par exemple, les emprunts pour la construction d'églises, pour couvrir des frais de guerre, etc. Mais dans ces cas l'assemblée communale devra être convoquée aux moyens de publications insérées à temps, dans la feuille d'avis, et contenant la spécification exacte du sujet qui devra être traité dans la dite assemblée.

4. Quant aux procès que les communes auront à soutenir, il faudra préalablement obtenir l'autorisation du préfet chaque fois qu'une commune voudra en intenter un. Si le préfet refuse, et que la commune ne trouve pas ses raisons de refus justes et satisfaisantes, elle aura le droit d'en appeler à nous.

Cette ordonnance a été arrêtée, dans la vue du bien et de la prospérité de tous nos concitoyens, et pour l'avantage de la chose publique. Elle pendra force de loi du moment où les communes en auront été avisées et instruites, de ce dont vous êtes chargé par la présente

présente circulaire; vous aurez soin de l'inscrire dans votre livre de mandats du district; et vous veillerez surtout à ce qu'elle soit exécutée et observée fidèlement dans tous ses points.

Cette ordonnance et circulaire devra être ajoutée au recueil de nos lois et décrets.

Donné à Berne ce 14 Avril 1819.

SWITZERLAND.

LOI sur les Contributions, en date du 14 Juin 1823.

Nous, Avoyers, Grand et Petit Conseil de la Ville et République de Berne; savoir faisons:

Que nous avons dû nous convaincre, par le rapport de notre conseil d'état, que l'on agissait dans beaucoup de communes du canton d'une manière inégale et d'après des principes souvent entièrement opposés les uns aux autres, à l'égard de la perception des contributions imposées; soit pour l'entretien des pauvres; soit pour d'autres dépenses communales; soit pour couvrir des frais de guerre; soit enfin pour faire face à des dépenses extraordinaires de l'état. Considérant que de là il s'en est suivi un rapport fort disproportionné entre les contribuables, ce qui a donné lieu à mainte plainte; afin d'établir une manière égale pour percevoir ces contributions,

Nous Ordonnons:

1. Les contributions pour les pauvres devront être perçues:

- a) De tous les biensfonds et bâtimens situés entre les limites d'une commune. En sont exceptés: tout les bâtimens appartenans à l'état, avec les fermes et les jardins qui en dépendent; tous les biensfonds et bâtimens appartenans à l'église, ainsi que les maisons d'école, qui étaient francs d'impôts jusqu'en 1798, à moins que les uns ou les autres n'aient été rendus depuis contribuables, par un arrêté du conseil d'état, ou par des arrangemens.
- b) Des biens et forêts, ainsi que des privilèges qui y ont rapport; hormis ceux qui appartiennent à l'état ou à l'église, et qui avant 1798 étaient francs d'impôt, à moins qu'ils n'aient depuis été rendus contribuables, par convention, ou par un arrêté du conseil d'état.
- c) De toutes les usines, qui se trouvent dans les limites de la commune.
- d) Des biens meubles en nature de tous les bourgeois de la commune, qu'ils y demeurent ou non. On entend par biens meubles tout ce qui n'est pas bienfond; toutefois on en excepte le bétail, qui sert à l'usage du ménage et à la culture des terres; les meubles, les ustensiles, etc.
- e) Ou pourra percevoir annuellement un droit de bourgeoisie, sur les bourgeois que demeurent hors de la commune, et qui n'ont aucuns biensfonds, mais qui vivent de leur vocation, ce droit ne pourra dépasser les quatre francs, ni être en-dessous de sept batz et demi.
- f) Si par la perception de ces différentes espèces de contributions, le maximum déterminé par la loi du 14 Avril 1819 était atteint, sans avoir satisfait aux dépenses qu'aurait exigées cette année-là l'entretien des pauvres, on pourra imposer et percevoir, avec l'autorisation de notre conseil d'état, une contribution extraordinaire, dont le montant sera fixé par avance.

2. Les contributions pour les frais d'administration et de police seront perçues:

- a) De tous les biensfonds, bâtimens, forêts, privilèges de forêts, et de toutes les usines; complètement sur le même pied et de la manière marquée au § 1. a, b, c, relativement aux contributions pour les pauvres.
- b) Des biens meubles de tous les bourgeois demeurant à la commune. Ceci ne pourra avoir lieu que sur l'autorisation préalable de notre conseil d'état, et dans des cas extraordinaires; p. ex.: lorsque l'on doit établir des routes, lorsque des bâtimens communaux, tels que l'église, la maison d'école, etc. nécessitent de grandes réparations, ou enfin lorsque l'on voudra faire l'acquisition d'orgues d'église, de pompes à feu, etc.
- c) Du gain approximatif, que procurent aux bourgeois de la commune leurs différentes vocations, telles que médecins, notaires, avocats, artistes, fabricants, négocians, etc. Cette contribution devra être taxée équitablement et avec égard à la localité; il est clair que les vocations attachées aux usines n'y sont pas comprises, puisqu'elles se trouvent déjà imposées, à l'art. a.

3. Pour l'entretien des grandes et autres routes on devra imposer tous les biensfonds, bâtimens, et privilèges, et l'on pourra exiger le travail communal dans tous les endroits qui n'auraient pas déjà la-dessus des vieilles coutumes et règles, et jusqu'à ce qu'on ait établi un règlement fixe et général sur les routes.

4. Les frais des procès, qui auront été intentés ou soutenus pour défendre des intérêts, uniquement en rapport avec les biens de la bourgeoisie de la commune, tels que forêts, fonds, paturages communaux, etc. ainsi que l'acquittement des cautions, qui auraient été contractées depuis la circulaire de notre conseil d'état du 14 Avril 1819, et que la commune pourrait avoir à payer, devront être imposés aux seuls bourgeois de la commune. Quant aux frais de procédure pour affaires de tutèle ou de paternité, ainsi que ceux des procès intentés pour défendre des intérêts généraux de la commune, on pourra les imposer et les percevoir de la manière prescrite dans le § 1, relativement aux contributions pour les pauvres.

5. Lorsque l'état imposera des contributions extraordinaires pour couvrir des frais de guerre, ou pour d'autres raisons majeures, la part que chaque commune devra y fournir, devra être perçue d'après les principes prescrits dans le § 1, relativement aux contributions pour les pauvres; et l'on pourra y ajouter la contribution sur la taxe du gain des vocations, (§ 2, art. c.) à moins que nous n'en ordonnions autrement dans les décrets, que nous aurons soin de faire publier dans de pareils cas.

6. Lorsque des experts impartiaux et assermentés par devant les préfets auront à taxer des biensfonds, ou des forêts, ou des usines, des batimens, etc. ils ne devront aucunement avoir égard aux dettes dont ces objets pourraient être grévées, ni diminuer pour cette raison le montant de la taxe.

Les contributions à percevoir sur les biensfonds qui sont affermés, devront être payées par le fermier, et non par le propriétaire, mais malgré cela ce seront toujours les biensfonds qui hypothéqueront le paiement.

7. La proportion d'après laquelle les différens objets contribuables devront être imposés pour les contributions, a été fixée ainsi qu'il suit :

- a) Si les biensfonds, tels que prairies, vignes, champs, paturages et marais ont été imposés de 4 btz. par mille francs de leur valeur, il sera perçu, pour les forêts et les privilèges qui y ont rapport, le quart de cette somme, ci - - - - - bz. 1.
- b) Les usines seront taxées, chacune à part, avec équité et ayant égard à la localité, et elles paieront de 1,000 fr. de valeur - - - - - bz. 4.
- c) Les maisons étant sujettes à se détériorer peu à peu, seront taxées avec égard à leur rapport, de 1,000 fr. - - - - - bz. 2.
- d) Les biens meubles des citoyens, tels que fonds placés à l'intérêt, capitaux placés dans un commerce ou dans des fabriques, linge, etc. seront taxés pour chaque 1,000^{er} de francs - - - - - bz. 4.
- e) Les métairies, non compris toutefois le bétail qui sert à l'usage de la maison et à la culture des terres, seront estimées avec équité et paieront de 1,000 fr. - - - - - bz. 2.
- f) On imposera une taxe modérée sur les différentes vocations des citoyens, tels que médecins, notaires, avocats, artistes, commerçans, fabricans. etc.; on aura égard à la localité, et au profit approximatif des vocations.

8. Il s'entend, que l'usufruit des fonds des pauvres et des biens communaux devra être employé avant tout et uniquement, à quoi il est destiné, et que l'on ne pourra sous aucun prétexte d'attaquer les capitaux ni les fonds provenants du paiement des droits d'entrée, et que l'on ne devra arrêter et imposer des contributions qu'entant que les ressources affectées à l'un ou à l'autre de ces besoins seraient insuffisantes.

De même les communes, qui, soit par suite d'une bonne économie, soit à cause de besoins moindres, auraient jusqu'à ce jour eu des taxes moins fortes que celles indiquées plus haut dans le tableau proportionnel, et où par conséquent on payait moins par 1,000^{er} de francs de valeur, ne pourront se prévaloir des présentes ordonnances pour augmenter leurs taxes accoutumées, ou pour percevoir des contributions pour d'autres objets ou dépenses, qui ne sont pas mentionnés dans les précédens §, sans l'autorisation spéciale de notre conseil d'état.

9. Du reste, toutes les ordonnances prescrites au sujet des contributions, et des administrations communales par la circulaire du conseil d'état datée du 14 Avril 1819, et rendue publique par impression, sont confirmées dans toute leur étendue; en vertu desquelles donc aucune commune ne pourra, sans l'autorisation du conseil d'état, imposer des contributions annuelles plus fortes que celles prescrites par la moyenne des années 1813, 1814, et 1815; moyenne où sont compris les frais occasionnés par les pauvres entretenus à tour de rôle, mais dans laquelle les frais de guerre de ces années là ne doivent pas entrer en compte.

10. Non seulement toutes les lois sur les contributions qui seront projetées à l'avenir par les communes devront être conformes aux préceptes sus-mentionnés, mais nous voulons en outre que toutes les communes qui posséderaient déjà de ces lois, sanctionnées ou non par le gouvernement, les changent d'après ce modèle, et les soumettent à l'agrément de notre conseil d'état pour le plus tard le 1 Janvier 1825.

11. Afin que les contribuables puissent en tout tems prendre une connaissance claire et précise sur la perception et l'emploi des contributions, on devra établir la comptabilité des communes d'après les principes ci-dessus désignés. Nous nous reservons d'organiser par une prochaine ordonnance cette comptabilité, dans laquelle chaque branche de l'administration communale devra être gérée à part.

12. Toutes les difficultés qui surviendront, soit pour établir des lois sur les contributions, soit pour en faire l'application, soit enfin pour des estimations de fortunes ou de biensfonds, devront être décidées et jugées par nos préfets, et au cas que les parties ne seraient pas satisfaites de leurs sentences, elles pourront recourir à notre conseil d'état.

13. Considérant que la présente ordonnance diffère sous beaucoup de rapports des anciennes coutumes, qui existaient relativement à ces contributions, et comme elle ne sera peut-être pas suffisante pour arrêter et corriger les abus qui se sont introduits dans cette branche importante de l'administration du pays, elle n'aura force de loi que pendant un temps d'épreuve de douze années, elle sera ajoutée au recueil des lois et décrets; et elle sera lue publiquement en chaire, et affichée dans toutes les communes. Excepté les districts du Jura, et les contrées nouvellement ajoutées aux districts de Cerlier, de Nidau, et Büren, qui se trouvent dans une position fort différente, relativement à leur administration communale, et à l'entretien de leurs pauvres.

Donné dans notre assemblée du Grand Conseil, Berne, le 11, 12, 13 et 14 Juin 1823.

No. 2.

REPLIES to 15 Queries relative to the Operation of the Poor Laws in the Canton of Berne, founded on the Circular Instructions from the Foreign Office, of the 12th August 1833.

1. QUEL est le montant de la taxe des pauvres pour tout le Canton de Berne?—

Années.	Individus Assistés.	Total de la Dépense.	Taxe des Pauvres.	Capital des Fonds des Pauvres.
		£.	£.	£.
1809 - - -	10,616	311,935	166,798	1,424,721
1811 - - -	12,302	344,890	181,739	1,506,862
1822 - - -	17,588	356,897	204,870	1,983,879
1824 - - -	18,116	380,175	204,464	2,150,787
1826 - - -	18,678	383,266	201,583	2,303,740
1828 - - -	19,907	385,732	197,739	2,474,938

La taxe n'existe que dans les communes qu'il n'ont pas des fonds, capitaux ou autres revenus suffisants destinés aux pauvres. D'après la loi la taxe ne peut être établie que pour suppléer au déficit de ces revenus.

2. Quel est le nombre d'individus au maintien desquels cette taxe a été affectée?

La première colonne présente le nombre des individus assistés en général, soit au moyen de la taxe, soit au moyen des fonds des pauvres.—Voir la réponse à la première question.

Il est nécessaire de faire observer de plus, que le chiffre de 1828 peut seul être considéré comme exact; celui des premières années indique plutôt le nombre des chefs de famille que celui des individus, parce que les tableaux n'étaient pas dressés alors avec beaucoup d'exactitude. L'augmentation des pauvres n'est donc pas aussi forte que les chiffres la présentent.

3. Sur quelle portion de la communauté cette taxe est-elle levée?—La taxe est-elle personnelle, ou retombe-t-elle sur une certaine description de propriété?

La taxe est levée,

1° Sur tous les immeubles situés dans la banlieue de la commune.

2° Sur la fortune mobilière des bourgeois de la commune, parce qu'eux seuls et non tous les habitants peuvent prétendre aux secours.

L'obligation d'assister les pauvres pèse sur les bourgeois de la commune, mais la loi les autorise à imposer aussi, à défaut de fonds des pauvres, la propriété immobilière des habitants non-bourgeois.

L'obligation d'assister s'étend non seulement aux bourgeois habitant la commune, mais à tous ceux qui habitent ailleurs. L'habitant non-bourgeois n'a donc aucun droit aux secours de la commune où il demeure, mais seulement de celle dont il est bourgeois. En cas d'indigence il peut être renvoyé dans son lieu de bourgeoisie. Ce système est la conséquence de l'établissement des bourgeoisies, qui a eu lieu vers la fin du dix-septième siècle. Tous les citoyens de l'état sont bourgeois d'une commune, où ils ont l'obligation d'assister et le droit d'être assisté. Ce droit de bourgeoisie se transmet aux descendants nés dans le mariage, et pour les femmes aussi aux descendants nés hors de mariage.

4. Quelle relation a le montant de la taxe au nombre des individus qui en sont grevés, et au montant de la propriété imposable, soit capital, soit revenus?

L'on a vu par ce qui précède que la taxe n'est pas personnelle, mais levée sur la propriété. Elle est perçue du capital de la propriété, d'après l'estimation d'experts. La taxe la plus forte

Appendix (F.)
 Foreign
 Communications.
 SWITZERLAND.

forte est dans l'Emmenthal, où elle monte jusqu'à quatre et cinq pour mille du capital. L'on manque de données officielles pour répondre au reste de ce question.

5. Prenant une moyenne d'années, disons depuis 1815, la taxe augmente-t-elle ou reste-t-elle stationnaire ?

Il résulte du tableau ci-dessus, que la taxe, après avoir augmenté prodigieusement, a diminué un peu depuis 1823, malgré l'acervissement du nombre des pauvres. Ce changement est l'effet de la loi de 1823, qui a réglé la taxe des pauvres, et qui a autorisé le gouvernement à fixer dans chaque commune, où la taxe existe, un minimum, qui ne peut être excédé sans l'autorisation spéciale du gouvernement. Une autre cause du décroissement de la taxe est l'accroissement des fonds ou capitaux, attendu qu'il y a plusieurs revenus qui ne peuvent être employés aux dépenses annuelles, mais qui doivent être capitalisés.

6. Serait-il possible de montrer, par des tableaux tirés de sources officielles, une statistique comparative pendant quelque années, des points ci-dessus indiquant, aussi les causes des variations ?

Les tableaux ci-dessus, qui sont tous officiels, et les observations qu'on y a ajoutées, sont la réponse à cette question.—Documents (A.) (B.) (C.) (D.) (E.) (F.) (G.) (H.)

7. Assiste-t-on seulement les vieillards, les malades, les orphelins, ou donne-t-on aussi des secours aux gens qui sont en état de travailler ?

L'on assiste aussi les gens qui sont en état de travailler. Les dispositions de la loi sont très vagues à cet égard et elles ont favorisé les énormes abus que les pauvres et prétendus pauvres en ont fait et en font encore.

La loi sur les pauvres n'est applicable qu'à l'ancienne partie du Canton de Berne, et n'a par été introduite dans le Jura (ancien évêché de Bâle) réuni en 1815. D'après le recensement de 1831 la population du Canton est de trois cent huitante mille habitants, dont soixante-sept mille dans le Jura.

8. Met-on des entraves à ceux qui reçoivent les aumônes, afin de les empêcher d'en profiter sans nécessité ?

Ceux qui ont reçu des secours ne peuvent ni se marier, ni exercer leurs droits politiques avant d'avoir restitué ce qu'ils ont reçu. S'ils ont mis à la charge de la commune plusieurs enfants légitimes ou illégitimes, et si cette charge est la suite d'un abandon coupable, ou de l'inconduite, ils peuvent être condamnés par le juge à deux ou trois ans de détention correctionnelle.

9. Donne-t-on les secours aux pauvres en argent ou en pourvoyant directement à leur entretien ?

La loi ne constitue rien à cet égard ; elle abandonne toute l'administration aux communes, et la plupart des préposés de commune trouvent plus commode de donner les secours en argent. Les communes qui ont une meilleure administration donnent les secours de préférence, soit comestibles, habillemens, etc.

10. Quand il s'agit de donner du secours à un pauvre, est-ce qu'on le fait travailler en lui rendant ses gages, ou lui donne-t-on quelques aumônes selon son besoin ?

La loi autorise les communes à faire travailler les pauvres qu'elles assistent, pour se récupérer de la somme payée pour eux, mais elles en font rarement usage, parce qu'elles manquent de maisons de travail, ou autres moyens coercitifs.

11. La classe ouvrière du Canton de Berne est-elle plus nombreuse que ne l'exige la culture du terrain ?

Oui, la classe ouvrière qui ne connaît que le labourage ou la culture du terrain est trop nombreuse ; mais à l'encontre on manque de bons ouvriers de métiers, et le pays est inondé d'une foule d'étrangers de cette dernière classe, dont un grand nombre finit par s'y établir. En général on souffre moins de la quantité que de la qualité de la population.

12. A qui l'administration de la loi des pauvres est-elle confiée ?

Uniquement aux communes, qui font administrer les pauvres par un ou plusieurs préposés, de la manière qu'elles le jugent convenable. Toutefois la loi les oblige à nommer au moins un administrateur, et leur prescrit en termes généraux l'observation de leurs devoirs.

13. Les administrateurs locaux ne sont-ils assujettés à aucune surveillance générale supérieure ?

Le gouvernement exerce à la vérité une surveillance supérieure sur l'administration des pauvres, comme sur les affaires communales en général ; mais il ne demande aux communes aucun compte de la manière dont elles exécutent l'obligation que leur impose la loi. Il se borne à décider les contestations qui s'élèvent entre les pauvres et les communes. Il veille seulement

seulement à ce que la taxe des pauvres ne soit pas levée contrairement à la loi, et il fait dresser périodiquement des tableaux sur le nombre des pauvres, et le montant des fonds destinés à leur sustentation.

14. Quels sont les abus dont on a pu se plaindre dans l'administration ?

Dérivent-ils du principe de la loi, ou bien du caractère et de la position sociale des administrateurs ?

Quels sont les remèdes qu'on y a apportés ?

Quels en ont été les résultats ?

Les abus dans l'administration dérivent et du principe de la loi et du caractère et de la position sociale des administrateurs ; de la loi, parce qu'elle abandonne toute l'administration aux communes ; des administrateurs, parce qu'ils négligeaient des améliorations qu'ils distribuent les secours sans discernement, sans examiner la véritable situation du pauvre, et que généralement ils n'ont en vue que les besoins du moment, sans songer à l'avenir. Les communes, prises spécialement, étant la plupart trop petites pour établir des maisons d'éducation et de travail, manquent de moyens coercitifs, et sont en général plus occupées à créer des ressources qu'à diminuer le nombre des pauvres, soit pour le tems actuel, soit pour les générations futures. D'ailleurs, beaucoup de communes, bien que la loi ne les y oblige par, envoient des secours aux bourgeois domiciliés ailleurs, où elles ne peuvent surveiller leur conduite, pour prévenir leur retour dans la commune où leur présence est désagréable.

La loi abandonnant l'administration aux communes, l'ancien gouvernement a senti qu'on ne pouvait remédier à ces abus sans une nouvelle loi basée sur de tout autres principes, mais par une sollicitude mal entendue pour les pauvres, il a toujours hésité à prendre ce parti.

15. Quelle influence le système a-t-il eu sur les pauvres sous le rapport, 1^o statistique, 2^o moral ?

1^o. Le nombre en a-t-il augmenté, diminué, ou resté stationnaire ?

2^o. A-t-on trouvé qu'il encourage les mariages imprudents ou le commerce illicite des sexes ?

La réponse aux derniers articles de la question sont renfermées dans celles plus haut. Le système existant favorise les mariages imprudents et le commerce illicite des sexes ; malgré cela il n'est pas probable qu'il fasse augmenter le nombre des enfants naturels dans sa proportion aux enfants légitimes, précisément parce qu'il favorise en même tems les mariages ; mais il en résulte, qu'il favorise d'une manière extraordinaire l'augmentation de la population pauvre.

Découvre-t-on des rapports entre le montant de la taxe et le nombre d'enfants illégitimes ?

Les abus qui sont résultés de ce système funeste sont immenses, et il serait trop long, sans doute, d'en tracer ici le tableau. Il est facile de concevoir, au reste, quelles suites a dû nécessairement entraîner un tel système dans les classes du peuple, où l'éducation, ou plutôt le manque d'éducation, n'a développé aucun sentiment d'honneur, et où l'on ne rougit pas de vivre de la bienfaisance publique au lieu du travail de ses bras. L'oisiveté, l'insouciance, les mariages imprudents et le commerce illicite des sexes, ont été favorisés par la perspective de pouvoir en faire supporter les suites aux autres. L'on a négligé tous les moyens, toutes les occasions de s'instruire, d'apprendre un état, d'exercer une industrie. De là non-seulement des charges toujours croissantes pour la société, mais des entraves au développement des facultés physiques et intellectuelles, au perfectionnement moral, en un mot, à l'avancement de la civilisation. L'expérience a clairement prouvé, que le nombre des pauvres s'accroît à mesure que l'on crée des ressources pour eux, et les communes qui ont le plus de biens et de revenus ont aussi en général la population bourgeoise la plus en arrière dans l'industrie, dans l'activité et dans les efforts de se rendre utile à la société.

Cet état de choses, surtout les charges toujours croissantes dans quelques contrées du pays, et la plainte des communes qui réclament la protection du gouvernement contre l'exigence et l'insolence des pauvres et prétendus pauvres, ont engagé le gouvernement de songer à des moyens de remédier au mal en remontant à sa source, et en cherchant à la faire tarir. L'on ignore encore quels principes serviront de base à la loi nouvelle sur l'administration des pauvres, dont le projet ou du moins les travaux préparatoires sont élaborés dans ce moment dans les bureaux du département de l'intérieur. Mais il est à peu près certain que l'assistance obligée sera, si non abolie, du moins restreinte aux pauvres qui sont incapables de travailler. En supprimant la taxe des pauvres il leur restera dans tous les cas les revenus des fonds qui sont destinés à leur entretien.

L'administration des pauvres dans le Canton de Berne est donc à la veille de subir une réforme radicale.

(E.)—RAPPROCHEMENT ET OBSERVATIONS.

D'après les Rapports Officiels, et d'après la Moyenne de chaque deux Ans, nous trouvons les Chiffres suivans dans les 22 districts du Canton ; en en exceptant les Villes de Berne, Thoune, Berthoud, Nidau, etc. savoir :

Année.				Individus Secourus.	Collectes.	Contributions.	Fonds des Pauvres.
					£.	£.	£.
1809	-	-	-	10,616	311,935	166,798	1,424,721
1811	-	-	-	12,302	344,890	181,739	1,506,862
1822	-	-	-	17,588	356,897	204,870	1,983,879
1824	-	-	-	18,116	380,175	204,464	2,150,787
1826	-	-	-	18,678	383,266	201,583	2,303,740 *
1828	-	-	-	19,907	385,732	197,739	2,474,938

Mais il faut remarquer, que sur les Tableaux précédens, qui n'étaient pas conçus d'après les modèle prescrit en 1828, le nombre des secourus avait été marqué trop petit ; parcequ'on y notait seulement les pères de familles, au lieu de détailler le nombre de celles-ci ; et que l'on omettait en quelques endroits d'y marquer ceux des pauvres qui demeuraient hors du Canton. On peut toutefois admettre d'après ces données que le nombre des secourus s'est effectivement accru toutes les années. Sur cent pauvres secourus on admet communément :

- 40 vieillards, ou infirmes ou malades.
- 20 enfans légitimes.
- 10 enfans illégitimes.
- 13 secourus, momentanément.
- 16 — qui demeurent hors du district.

* D'après les Tableaux de 1827 et 1828. D'après ceux de 1825 et 1826, il n'y aurait que 2,262,618 frcs.

CANTON DE BERNE.

ESQUISSE HISTORIQUE du Développement et de la Formation progressive du Paupérisme, dans le Canton de Berne.

LES quinze demandes que l'on a posées relativement à ce sujet offrent sous bien des rapports des obscurités à éclaircir, et de grandes difficultés à applanir, ce que l'espace circonscrit des demandes ne leur permettait pas de faire. Cela étant, le soussigné croit remplir un devoir très agréable, si par la présente esquisse il pouvait coopérer à l'éclaircissement de cet objet important.

Une grande variété sous le rapport physique, mais plus encore le développement progressif de son histoire, ont donné à notre pays une impulsion et un caractère à lui particuliers, dont on reconnaît le type dans toutes ses relations sociales et politiques; il est donc fort naturel que dans un tel pays le paupérisme a été marqué d'une manière très précise de ce caractère particulier.

Pour pouvoir traiter et apprécier cette matière selon sa juste valeur intrinsèque et selon son étendue, il est indispensable de jeter d'abord un coup-d'œil rapide et clair sur les relations intérieures et sociales du pays.

Il est évident, que relativement au paupérisme, le canton de Berne se trouve actuellement dans une position fâcheuse et désagréable au plus haut degré, qui prouve que ce mal est profondément enraciné. Car ce n'est pas un mal instantané ou partiel; il ne provient pas de causes extérieures; la source en est bien plutôt au cœur du pays. Un nombre assez considérable des habitants est atteint de ce fléau, qui par son étendue pèse ainsi sur toute la société, et qui mérite le nom de fléau social.

Il se peut que quelques districts, quelques classes d'habitants, aient moins à souffrir à cet égard que tant d'autres; mais le mal n'en continue pas moins pour cela sa marche et son extension; le fardeau des uns s'augmente à mesure que celui des autres diminue. Il est même évident que le mal se soutient et s'alimente de ses propres forces. Ce qui le prouve, ce n'est non seulement l'augmentation annuelle des pauvres, mais encore leur perversité toujours croissante; l'excès de leur légèreté et de leur impertinence, mais surtout leur morale corrompue, font foi de la force croissante du mal; et ces vices ne peuvent qu'empoisonner la bienfaisance publique, et engloutir avec une faim dévorante et insatiable les dons charitables, insuffisants alors pour subvenir à leurs besoins.

C'est ces raisons qui font que ce mal, contagieux de sa nature, s'étend au-delà des bornes de la classe pauvre, digne de pitié et de secours; il envahit et détruit en même temps les classes de la population qui tiennent de près à celle-là. Car ceux qui seraient appelés à un travail journalier et assidu pour gagner leur vie, ainsi que ceux dont la petite fortune ou propriété devrait servir à entretenir leur famille, à satisfaire les créanciers et à contribuer aux secours donnés aux pauvres; ceux-là même viennent augmenter le nombre des indigents, et grossir par là le fardeau qui pèse déjà sur ceux pour qui le secours des pauvres est obligatoire.

Le goût et l'application pour le travail surmontent les soucis; au lieu que l'insouciance s'accroît; le produit gagné à la sueur de leur front perd son prix à leurs yeux, à mesure qu'ils perdent de vue la juste proportion qui existe entre l'application et la jouissance du succès, entre l'industrie et le gain qui en résulte. Une dissipation prompte et frivole, pour satisfaire le désir immodéré de jouissances purement animales; désir qui s'augmente à mesure que l'on fait des sacrifices pour s'en procurer la jouissance; tel est le sentiment qui remplace alors le principe d'une sage économie domestique.

Si nous jetons un coup d'œil sur des époques où la disette, la famine, des malheurs dans le commerce et dans l'industrie, ou tout autre événement imprévu, soit survenu dans ces classes, quelles en ont été les suites? C'est que la grande partie de la population étant excitée à des efforts plus qu'ordinaires, perd le courage et les forces, au moment même que leur énergie, leur force d'âme et de corps, sont mis à l'épreuve. Ils sont dès-lors à ranger parmi la classe des secourus, et rarement ils sortent de cet état subordonné par leur propre énergie et activité.

Mais aussi, d'où leur viendrait cette énergie? comment exigerait-on d'eux, qu'ils changeassent de manière de vivre, eux pour qui est ouverte une carrière tranquille, sans travail et sans soucis? comment exiger qu'ils quittent une situation qui leur est procurée par un tribut de leurs concitoyens? situation que l'on pourrait d'ailleurs à peine obtenir à force d'un travail pénible et d'une grande économie. Il ne peut y avoir, ce nous semble, une spéculation plus naturelle et plus lucrative que celle de vivre aux dépens d'autrui; c'est chose bien simple que de préférer une pareille existence!

Voilà une source intarissable et de plus en plus grossissante de ce mal!

On se demande, Où se trouve l'origine de cette source? quelles sont les influences qui la font grossir? Qui pourra trouver une solution entière et satisfaisante à ces questions?

Il se peut que l'on retrouve dans cette esquisse générale, l'image de quelques pays, auxquels le paupérisme fait sentir les mêmes résultats fâcheux. D'où provient donc cette ressemblance? d'où viennent d'un autre côté ces particularités et ces nuances dont il a été question précédemment? les causes auxquelles remontent ces ressemblances et ces diversités leur sont-elles communes ou non?

Cette ressemblance existe-t-elle effectivement entre les différens pays, dont la position relativement au paupérisme est attribuée aux mêmes causes? ou bien ne pourrait-on pas souvent admettre une grande parenté d'origine dans les causes et influences, qui ont coopéré à former l'état actuel du paupérisme dans les différens pays? Nous le croyons, quoique l'efficacité de ces causes se fasse sentir quelquesfois sous une forme différente et à des degrés plus ou moins marqués.

Car, au fait, qu'est ce que l'on qualifie du nom de paupérisme? n'est-ce pas une condition à part, mais qui forme une partie intrinsèque de la condition générale d'un état social quelconque, à peu près de la même manière, que les individus pauvres forment une partie de la population entière? Et qu'est-ce que la condition sociale en général, si ce n'est un résumé des effets produits par diverses causes qui ont rapport au développement de la vie sociale d'un pays, à ses moyens et à son mode d'existence? Et le paupérisme est-il autre chose que le résumé d'une de ces causes? Ce serait une chose méritoire et nécessaire, si l'on pouvait exposer clairement les proportions qui existent dans un pays entre ses moyens d'existence, et la part pour laquelle chaque classe de la population est obligée de contribuer à ces moyens. Cette recherche présente assurément autant de difficultés, qu'en pourrait bien présenter la guérison du mal.

Le présent est le résultat des évènements passés. D'après ce principe nous devons considérer la position actuelle du canton de Berne relativement à l'économie d'état, comme une conséquence nécessaire du développement historique de nos relations sociales intérieures; et c'est pour cela que cette position nous offre dans sa forme et dans son caractère quelque chose de particulier, qui la distingue de celle des autres pays.

Si nous jetons les yeux sur la position géographique et politique du canton de Berne, nous y trouvons deux parties distinctes qui diffèrent totalement entr'elles relativement au paupérisme.

L'Evêché de Bâle, dans le Jura, était régi par des lois différentes de celles de l'ancien canton, auquel il ne fut incorporé que le 29^e Avril 1816, et dont il ne connaissait pas les institutions précédentes; et s'il les connut depuis, ce ne fut qu'imparfaitement et en partie. Il avait et suivait, relativement au traitement des pauvres, les institutions de l'Empire Français, dont il faisait partie avant son incorporation à la Suisse. Les lois lui garantirent la conservation de ces institutions.

Une loi relative à l'établissement des droits de bourgeoisie dans ces contrées, ordonnait expressément, "Que l'on ferait dans les communes des collectes de dons volontaires, pour secourir les malades pauvres, les vieillards, et les veuves et orphelins, et que l'on établirait à cet effet des caisses pour les pauvres; mais que ces dons ne seraient pas regardés comme obligatoires pour les communes, mais considérés seulement comme un devoir de bienfaisance et de charité chrétienne envers leurs concitoyens pauvres." Cette nouvelle partie du canton ne connaissait donc ni secours obligatoires, ni contributions pour les pauvres.

"Nous ajouterons ici la remarque, que d'après des données certaines, on se plaint dans le Jura (district de Delémont) de l'accroissement violent des pauvres; que l'on attribue leur nombre décuplé à l'établissement des droits de bourgeoisie pareils à ceux de l'ancien canton; mais que l'on persévère à refuser l'établissement des contributions pour les pauvres."

Nous trouvons, par contre, ces établissemens, ces secours obligatoires, et ces contributions, nous les trouvons dans tous les districts de l'ancien canton; c'est dans son sein que se sont formées ces institutions, qu'elles ont pris consistance, qu'elles ont trouvé des alimens, et qu'elles se sont développées progressivement dans les deux derniers siècles. Elles ont jeté des racines d'autant plus profondes, que la maturation de ce fruit du moyen âge a été favorisée par la dernière moitié du 17^e siècle et par le 18^e en entier. Car le pays, faible et sans force au-dedans, n'ayant à craindre aucun ennemi du dehors, manqua totalement des lumières et de l'énergie nécessaires pour créer des institutions plus sensées et plus convenables.

Ce ne fut que lorsque le secours aux pauvres fut devenu obligatoire, et que l'on établit des lois à ce sujet, ce ne fut qu'alors que toutes nos relations sociales éprouvèrent un grand changement; leur base se changea insensiblement, mais non sans y avoir été préparés par des causes antérieures. "Le principe des droits de bourgeoisie créa le principe du traitement des pauvres rendu obligatoire par les lois." C'est le centre autour duquel se meut tout ce qui a rapport au paupérisme dans le canton de Berne.

En parlant donc désormais du canton de Berne, nous ne désignerons que cette partie du canton (l'ancien canton) où le traitement des pauvres a été basé, institué et limité par l'établissement des droits de bourgeoisie.

Pour nous pénétrer d'autant plus de la nature et de l'importance de cet objet, quelques remarques sur sa naissance et sur son développement sont indispensables; quoiqu'il soit fort difficile et hasardé de vouloir essayer d'éclaircir une chose, dont, jusqu'à présent on s'est occupé si peu.

L'origine de l'objet qui nous occupe ne remonte pas au-delà de la Réformation de l'Eglise, qui eût lieu dans le canton de Berne en 1528; nous ne voulons pourtant pas dire par là, que la bienfaisance publique et les droits de bourgeoisie ne datent que de cette époque; ils datent au contraire de bien plus loin ; mais alors ils avaient une autre signification, bien différente des idées que l'on s'en forma depuis. Déjà alors il existait dans notre pays des établissemens publics pour les pauvres (appelés infirmeries) ; mais ces établissemens étaient empreints du caractère de la piété chrétienne ; ils portaient le type de cette bienfaisance qui est ordonnée par la conscience et la religion. Aussi ces hôpitaux étaient-ils liés étroitement aux institutions ecclésiastiques, de manière que l'église était, pour ainsi dire, l'organe de la bienfaisance publique.

Mais l'église dût naturellement perdre peu-à-peu cette influence après la Réformation. " Il est de même aisé à démontrer que l'influence que cette réformation de l'église exerça sur les nations qui l'adoptèrent, était plus ou moins sensible, selon qu'elles conservèrent plus ou moins des rites du culte catholique, et selon que l'état politique d'un pays le mettait plus ou moins en contact avec l'Eglise Romaine." Le canton de Berne adopta pour tout son territoire la religion réformée d'après les dogmes sévères de Calvin et de Zwingli. Cet événement dût influencer considérablement sur le caractère de la bienfaisance ecclésiastique. Comment, en effet, eût-il pu se maintenir, lorsqu'on abolissait les institutions bienfaisantes de l'église, à cause de cela même qu'elles en provenaient ; et lorsque le haut clergé fut obligé de se démettre de son pouvoir en faveur de l'autorité civile ? (droit des évêques au gouvernement séculier.) De cette manière le bas clergé, dépourvu de toute protection, vis-à-vis du pouvoir séculier, fut soumis à la dépendance immédiate de ce dernier.

La condition de ces ecclésiastiques se commuta de plus en plus en une condition civile. Ils furent mis au niveau des employés séculiers. Cela étant, ce caractère civil devait, à la première occasion, se communiquer aussi aux établissemens du clergé ; cette occasion fut amenée par les événemens qui survinrent au 17^e siècle.

Lorsque l'on supprima les couvens, le gouvernement garantit au peuple le maintien et la conservation des institutions de bienfaisance publique, qui y avaient été attachés (telles que pensions, prébendes, distributions régulières aux pauvres, de pain, de blé, de farine, d'argent), mais sous la condition qu'étant lui le propriétaire seigneurial, " il pourrait, selon son bon plaisir, modifier, augmenter ou diminuer les dits établissemens de charité." En conséquence l'usufruit en revint à ceux, qui en avaient toujours eu jusqu'alors la jouissance, (aux sujets des monastères d'Interlacken, de Friesenberg, de Gottstadt, de Thorberg et de Buchsée, et aux habitans des environs de ces couvens) ; mais le gouvernement y apporta de son côté du changement, en admettant d'autres habitans encore à ces jouissances. Nous trouvons établis de fort bonne heure les collectes d'église en faveur des pauvres. Cette collecte se faisait après le service divin, et le Dimanche on en distribuait à parts égales le produit, en argent ou en nature, aux pauvres de la paroisse. Nous retrouvons cette institution au commencement du 17^e siècle, mais ayant déjà perdu aux yeux de la multitude la valeur et la considération dont elle jouissait dans l'origine, et n'offrant plus pour cette raison les ressources de bienfaisance qu'elle présentait par le passé, et qui suffisaient alors à subvenir aux besoins du pauvre. Le tems avait augmenté prodigieusement ces besoins ; c'est ce qui rendit ces ressources insuffisantes ; de toutes parts on découvre la disproportion croissante entre les besoins et les moyens d'y subvenir.

Ce changement de religion rompit en partie le lien qui unissait en Suisse les petites républiques indépendantes, il paralysa le libre commerce, et qui porta des blessures profondes à l'état, qui restèrent longtems à se cicatriser, et qui laissèrent après soi un long affaiblissement. Il devint de plus en plus difficile d'établir son domicile entre les limites étroites de la Suisse ; le fanatisme religieux chassa l'habitant des lieux qui l'avaient vu naître ; le pauvre exilé ne trouvait d'asile que sous le toit de ceux qui professaient la même communion que lui ; mais il ne portait pas toujours avec soi dans son exil de quoi fournir à son entretien et à sa subsistance, et par cela même, il lui était impossible de se les procurer.

Les guerres qui ravagèrent à cette époque et cent ans plus tard tous les pays limitrophes de la Suisse, ne furent pas sans un résultat quelconque pour cette dernière.

Car d'un côté, la Suisse participa à ces guerres d'une manière indirecte, en envoyant ses soldats mercenaires, tantôt à l'un tantôt à l'autre des partis belligérans ; et ces soldats, après avoir été congédiés, revenaient dans leur patrie, amenant toujours avec eux quelques étrangers, enfans de la guerre, et vauriens comme eux-mêmes. Leurs chefs, appelés condottieri, issus très souvent de familles puissantes et siégeant eux-mêmes au gouvernement, virent cela de bon œil, et favorisèrent leur établissement de domicile en Suisse. Mais leurs mœurs grossières et corrompues, et leur paresse, les rendirent incapables de cultiver convenablement le petit espace de terrain qu'on leur assignait pour s'entretenir eux et leurs familles ; de manière que ces rebuts de soldats, vauriens, jettèrent les fondemens d'une nouvelle classe de la population. Le terrain sur lequel ils s'établissaient étant en général stérile et de mauvais rapport, ils durent nécessairement tomber dans un état de dépendance continuelle vis-à-vis les cultivateurs plus aisés et qui possédaient des terres plus étendues ; leur nombre s'augmenta de génération en génération, leur pauvreté primitive s'accrût par la paresse et par la mendicité qu'ils avaient héritées de leurs pères, et leur entretien tomba à la charge de ceux qui étaient obligés de les secourir (c'est à dire, les habitans riches et à leur aise).

Hélotes du nouvel âge, appelés Tauner (journaliers), leur nombre était considérable en proportion de celui des habitans aisés, avec lesquels ils étaient constamment en guerre ouverte ou clandestine pour des droits et jouissances qui leur avaient été enlevés en partie par les 17^e et 18^e siècle.

Mais

Mais ces guerres et leurs résultats agirent encore différemment sur notre pays. Elles étaient des guerres de religion occasionnés plus ou moins par la différence des dogmes entre les partis des deux communions ; elles laissèrent à leur suite des contrées ravagées et stériles, et la famine, ce qui augmenta la haine et la fureur fanatique des deux partis. Les habitans que l'épée avait épargnés furent forcés par le fanatisme à chercher un asile dans les pays, où une même religion leur accordait le droit de domicile.

Les cantons reformés en Suisse offrirent un asile sur à tous ceux qui professaient leur croyance, de quel pays d'ailleurs qu'ils fussent, pendant près de deux cents années, 1519-1710. Italiens, Allemands, Autrichiens, Français, Hongrois, tous cherchèrent tour-à-tour à atteindre ce port franc. Cette hospitalité accordée à des étrangers, honore le peuple et ses gouvernemens, et fut en partie richement récompensée par l'application et l'industrie paisible des expatriés, qui cherchèrent à transmettre à notre pays l'industrie et le commerce de leurs lieux natus, et qui y réussirent là, où des circonstances favorables secondaient leur zèle, p. ex. Zurich, Genève, Berne.

Mais ce ne fut pas cette classe d'hommes seulement qui vint chercher une nouvelle patrie dans les montagnes de l'Helvétie. La guerre de trente ans avaient livré les nations à la soldatesque effrénée, et avait couvert le sol naguères fertiles des pays ; des bandes entières d'étrangers affamés et sans aucune fortune, ainsi que des soldats vagabonds, passèrent sans obstacle les frontières de la Suisse, qui, divisée entr'elle, ne sût s'opposer à de pareils abus. Les ordonnances de police de ces tems-là nous mentionnent généralement ce fléau du pays. La grande partie de ces émigrans qui inondaient le pays, n'aurait toutefois occasionné que peu de dangers et d'inconvénians, pourvu que le pays eût pu leur assigner une occupation et des travaux, auxquels ils étaient seuls aptes ; mais on ne leur fit pas établir leur domicile à la campagne ; on les laissa continuer leur vie vagabonde ; nul lien les attachait à la société ; ils ne voyaient au-devant d'eux aucune possession assurée et fixe. Ils durent par-là devenir dangereux à la société, et tomber à sa charge. Celle était la position de la Suisse à l'époque de la guerre de 30 ans, (1619-1649). L'affluence de dehors s'accrût, tandis que les ressources de l'intérieur diminuèrent à un degré qui était hors de proportion de celles-là. Le besoin devint plus pressant, les moyens d'y remédier, insuffisans. Par la guerre, dite des Paysans, qui eût lieu en 1658, et qui n'était autre chose que le combat de la démocratie contre l'aristocratie, dans lequel cette dernière l'emporta, tout l'équilibre social et politique de la Suisse fut ébranlé jusqu'à sa base, et les relations à l'extérieur devinrent délicates et défavorables. Tous ces motifs concourraient à nécessiter un grand changement dans les relations sociales du pays.

Ce changement s'opéra lorsque l'on régla les affaires des pauvres, en établissant et perfectionnant les institutions des droits de bourgeoisie.

Les évènements extraordinaires de cette époque, ainsi que le nombre prodigieux et toujours croissant de gens sans aveu et sans fortune, qui étaient un véritable fléau pour le pays par leur mendicité ; toutes ces causes nécessitèrent des mesures extraordinaires. Les ordonnances de police dont on se servit après les guerres contre les Bourguignons, pour mettre un frein à la licence et à l'avidité de la multitude, étaient fort insuffisantes pour combattre des maux aussi graves.

On comprit, que la voie de la législation était la manière la plus sûre d'obtenir et d'assurer le repos public. C'est pourquoi que nous trouvons depuis 1610 jusqu'en 1690, une multitude d'ordonnances contre la mendicité, qui formèrent la base d'une future législation à cet égard.

Conformément à la chose, elles sont divisées en deux classes ; savoir,

I. La classe des étrangers ; ceux-ci étaient divisés,—

- a. En proscrits pour cause de religion ;
- b. En mendiants et vagabonds, qui parcourraient le pays sans cause légitime.

II. La classe des citoyens du canton, qui étaient condamnés à une vie vagabonde, soit par leur vocation, comme les colporteurs, soit par la misère et le manque de pain.

Cette répartition en deux classes distinctes nécessita naturellement deux principes différens, dans les mesures à prendre contr'elles.

1. La seule mesure à prendre contre les étrangers était de les empêcher à passer les frontières, et de chercher à s'en débarrasser, en exceptant toutefois ceux qui étaient proscrits pour cause de religion. A cet effet on établit aux frontières une surveillance active et rigoureuse, et on leur rendit le séjour au pays insupportable, en les soumettant à une police des plus sévères. Chaque commune dut établir, en proportion de sa grandeur et de son étendue, un ou plusieurs chasse-gueux, qui auraient à transporter au-delà des frontières du district ceux qu'ils auraient arrêtés ; on ordonna même, que l'on ferait de tems à autre sous la direction du préfet des battues ou chasses générales contr'eux.

On défendit aux habitans, sous peine d'amendes ou d'imprisonnement, de les loger ou assister. Mais la nature du pays et la pitié, qu'excitait un traitement aussi barbare, mirent obstacle à ce que le but de cette mesure fut atteint. Ils trouvèrent toujours un asile soit dans les gorges des montagnes, soit dans les bois, soit dans les cavernes, et on ne leur refusait pas un morceau de pain dans les hamaux écartés ou dans les maisons solitaires.

2. Ces mesures étaient fort analoges à celles que l'on prit vis-à-vis des pauvres originaires du pays. On sentait le devoir de les assister, pourvu qu'ils méritassent cette assistance par un état vraiment nécessaire. Mais comment distinguer cette classe ? Comment distinguer ceux qui étaient originaires du pays ? Et sur qui retomberait-il ce devoir d'assistance ?

Ces demandes, mûries par le 17^e siècle, trouvèrent à cette époque un état de choses, qui présentait un mélange diffus des temps passés et de nations diverses ; un tissu bigarré composé de droits à la dépendance immédiate de l'Empire, de droits seigneuriaux plus ou moins étendus, de privilèges et de servitudes, dont l'origine se perdant bien avant dans les tems de l'antiquité, serait difficile à trouver, et que de chercher ce ne serait ici ni le lieu ni le moment.

Nous voulons seulement faire remarquer que la différence d'origine et d'habitudes, les anciens droits de seigneurs, ainsi que les droits et privilèges dont jouissait, en particulier, chaque village ou vallée (privilèges, qui souvent n'avaient d'autres limites que la coutume, d'autres fondemens que la tradition verbale), rendaient fort difficile d'effectuer le projet de fixer une règle générale ; difficulté qui s'augmentait par le manque presque total de documens écrits.

Il fallait naturellement que le droit de naturalisation se fondât sur quelques droits de localité, sur le droit de domicile et de la jouissance des biens communaux. Mais précisément cette naturalisation rendait les difficultés plus grandes par sa définition vague et parcequ'elle était soumise à des coutumes fort variées, qui remontaient à une époque, où une population moins nombreuse et une étendue suffisante de terres vierges, étaient cause, que le cultivateur s'attachait au sol, qu'il possédait à lui seul ou comme fief ; mais depuis ces tems-là, la proportion qui existait entre la population et le terrain avait considérablement changée.

Par le passé, tout individu qui se fixait dans une commune acquerrait par là le droit à la jouissance de tous les biens communaux, tels que pâturages, biensfonds, forêts, &c. ; il était en revanche, et comme de juste, obligé à fournir sa part aux dépenses et aux travaux communaux. S'il quittait son domicile pour aller s'établir dans une autre commune, il se démettait de son droit. L'acquisition de ce droit était attachée à des conditions insignifiantes et faciles à remplir, et qui différaient selon les lieux. Dans plusieurs endroits, p. ex. dans l'Emmenthal, dans la haute Aargovie (districts de Wangen et d'Aarwangen), ces conditions consistaient à statuer, que le bienfond serait toujours la part d'héritage du cadet de la famille ; elles conféraient donc aux mineurs un droit qui n'appartenait dans d'autres pays qu'aux majeurs.

Il fallait nécessairement que sous de pareilles conjonctures, et vu la disproportion dans le partage des terres, il se formât une classe nombreuse d'individus qui étaient obligés de pourvoir à leur subsistance par d'autres moyens, puisqu'ils étaient exclus de la jouissance entière des droits communaux. Les uns se firent domestiques chez les propriétaires, les autres travaillaient comme manœuvres ; mais s'il survenait une concurrence trop grande, ils étaient obligés de quitter leur lieu de premier domicile et de naissance, pour aller gagner ailleurs de quoi subsister. De là leur vie vagabonde.

On peut donc se faire une idée des difficultés qui durent se présenter, lorsque l'on voulut exécuter la loi absolue, " Que chaque commune était obligée à avoir soin de ses pauvres." Il est vrai que la loi ajoutait, que l'on n'entendait par là que les pauvres qui seraient nés et élevés dans la commune. Le résultat inévitable de cette loi dût être celui, que les communes chargées d'un grand nombre de pauvres, cherchèrent autant que possible, et de toutes les manières, à se débarrasser des pauvres, qui, faute de preuves suffisantes, ne pouvaient se prévaloir d'aucun droit à l'assistance communale (les registres baptistères, ainsi que les contrôles des habitans, n'étaient pas encore généralement en usage à cette époque). Un autre résultat fut, qu'en aggravant généralement les conditions de domicile pour les gens de la basse classe, il fallait, qu'un bon nombre de ces derniers devinssent victimes de cet intérêt particulier. Car on avait assigné par là à chaque commune un intérêt puissant et séparé de celui de toute autre commune.

Tellement qu'il s'en suivit un isolement parmi les communes, qui fit que chacune se tenait sur la défensive pour repousser toute tentative de la charger d'autres pauvres ; il régna dès-lors entr'elles un sentiment réciproque d'inimitié et de défiance relativement à leurs rapports de domiciliation. La permission d'établir son domicile dans un endroit, avec le droit de jouir des immunités et des fonds communaux, ne fut dès-lors plus accordée sous des conditions aussi faciles ; et si on accordait le domicile, c'était en excluant des dits droits les nouveaux domiciliés. Ce fut de cette manière que se forma la classe des aubains, et des autres habitans qui sont l'opposé de la classe formée par les bourgeois proprement dits du lieu.

Ce fut là l'origine des bourgeoisies, considérées comme la réunion d'un nombre déterminé des familles. C'est à elles que fut dès-lors conféré le devoir de veiller à l'entretien des pauvres, qui faisaient partie de leur nombre et de leur réunion, qu'ils demeuraient ou non dans l'endroit de leur bourgeoisie. Un combat opiniâtre et des examinations et difficultés sans nombre entre les communes et le gouvernement, avaient accompagné la naissance de cette institution jusques à la fin du 17^e siècle.

A dater de ce moment, nous voyons le paupérisme nu et conduit par les nouvelles relations sociales, produites de cette distinction des corporations.

La population entière, considérée sous ce point de vue, se divise par conséquent en deux classes :—

I. La

I. La classe des individus, qui appartiennent à une des susdites réunions ou bourgeoises; ils se subdivisent encore en,—

- a. Ceux qui demeurent dans l'endroit de leur bourgeoisie.
- b. Ceux qui demeurent hors de cet endroit, et qui dans le lieu de leur domicile sont considérés et traités comme aubains.

Nota.—L'article a. comprend à son tour différentes classes de bourgeois, dont les uns ont plus de droits que d'autres, ainsi que nous l'avons remarqué plus haut.

II. La classe des familles et des individus, qui ne possèdent aucun droit de bourgeoisie dans le canton; ils sont subdivisés ainsi qu'il suit.

a. Ceux qui n'ont obtenu aucun droit de domicile, ni du gouvernement, ni d'une commune. Ce sont,—

1. Des vagabonds étrangers : c'est eux que l'on qualifie communément du nom de Heimathlosen.

2. Des étrangers, tolérés pour un certain tems, et sous de certaines conditions; tels que des proscrits pour cause de religion.

b. Ceux dont le droit de domicile avait été reconnu et statué par le gouvernement, mais non par les communes, lors de la distinction et de l'établissement des corporations. Ce sont,—

1. Des individus originaires du pays, que la fatalité ou des changemens de domicile, avaient frustrés de leurs prétentions à un droit de bourgeoisie.

2. Les individus ou familles qui auraient été punis par la perte de leur droit de bourgeoisie, et qui n'en auraient par conséquent point du tout.

3. Les enfans trouvés et les enfans qui auraient été méchamment abandonnés par leurs parens.

On peut juger facilement par cette classification, de quelle manière l'assistance des pauvres dût se repartir. Les bourgeoisies durent se charger de la I^{re} Classe; c. à d. de ceux de leurs concitoyens et bourgeois de leur communauté, qui se trouveraient dans la nécessité; tandis que le gouvernement fut obligé de se charger de la II^{de} Classe. Le gouvernement était encore et naturellement tenu à assister celles des communes qui étaient chargées outre mesure de pauvres. Il avait promis cette aide publiquement, en publiant ses ordonnances sur les pauvres, et il avait à cet effet assigné des certains fonds sur les biens des couvens supprimés.

Ce fut l'introduction et l'établissement de cette repartition des habitans en différentes classes, qui occasionna un changement dans le caractère des secours accordés aux pauvres; changement que nous avons mentionné plus haut, (pag. 215.)

Les institutions cléricales et les offrandes gratuites prédominaient encore au commencement du 17^e siècle. Après le service divin on distribuait à parts égales aux pauvres le montant de la collecte faite pour eux. Bientôt après ces collectes devinrent insuffisantes, par rapport aux tems de guerre et de troubles dans cette époque. Les ordonnances sur les pauvres (1634-1642), se plaignaient de l'endurcissement des cœurs, toujours augmentant, et ordonnaient: "Les gens aisés contribueront à l'assistance des pauvres chacun en proportion de sa fortune et des ses moyens." Il est vrai que ces ordonnances ajoutaient, "Que l'on ne prétendait point vouloir par là contraindre la charité et la bienfaisance publique, qui devaient provenir uniquement d'un mouvement spontané et généreux du cœur." Mais quoique le gouvernement n'en ait pas eu l'intention, il était dans les sens de cette ordonnance, d'imprimer à la bienfaisance publique un caractère de contrainte légale. Plus l'assistance des pauvres prit la forme d'une contribution régulière, et plus elle perdit le caractère de dons gratuits, et plus aussi disparaissait la forme des institutions cléricales.

Elle devint à la fin du 17^e siècle un objet de l'administration civile.

C'est de ce point de vue que désormais nous devons considérer le paupérisme.

Nous allons maintenant entreprendre de l'examiner de plus près et de développer la condition et les rapports de la première classe des pauvres.

Nous avons déjà dit que cette 1^{re} classe comprenait les corporations et communautés formées par un certain nombre de familles, dans lesquelles les riches aidaient les pauvres de leur mieux et selon leurs moyens. Ces communautés restent toujours fixes, que le nombre des familles augmente ou diminue, que la proportion entre les besoins et les secours soit juste ou non. Leur essence est invariable, et par conséquent héréditaire. Les droits de même que les obligations passent indépendamment du tems et du lieu aux descendans des membres qui les formaient, pourvu toutefois qu'ils aient les titres valables. Chaque membre en particulier, en quel lieu qu'il fixe sa demeure hors de sa bourgeoisie, peut prétendre à la jouissance des biens et immunités, s'ils sont de nature à pouvoir le suivre. Ces droits et jouissances devinrent donc purement et exclusivement personnels, indépendans des tems et des lieux. Il n'y a que la corporation, le principe de la réunion, qui restent invariablement attachés au lieu et à la commune où ils ont pris leur origine, tant qu'il reste un noyau des familles qui les composaient, et tant qu'ils pourront fonder leur principe local, sur la possession de biensfonds et de leur usufruit.

Canton de Berne.

Naturellement que le tems et le principe de mobilité, qui forme la base de la vie sociale, ont apporté et ne cesseront d'apporter des changemens dans chaque bourgeoisie en particulier. Là où dans l'origine la presque totalité des habitans d'un endroit, en étaient les bourgeois, nous voyons maintenant la moitié et plus des habitans, qui, quoique n'appartenant pas à la corporation du lieu, appartiennent cependant au local, à l'endroit, par la naissance, par des propriétés et par leurs relations sociales. Dans quelques endroits même ces corporations ont perdu tous leurs membres, par l'extinction des familles qui les composaient ; leurs biensfonds sont passés entre les mains d'habitans qui ne faisaient pas partie de leur réunion.

Il était naturel qu'avec ce système de droits de bourgeoisie les intérêts du lieu fussent soignés et administrés par des personnes morales, reconnues pour y avoir droit. C'était donc à la bourgeoisie qu'appartenait la police du lieu, les tutèles et le maintien des pauvres ; c'est à elle qu'appartient l'emplacement et le sol où elle a pris origine. De là vient la singulière habitude, lorsque l'on impose sur les biensfonds des contributions pour les pauvres, d'obliger les habitans du lieu qui n'en sont pas bourgeois (aubains) à y fournir leur part, quoiqu'ils n'auraient eux-mêmes aucun droit aux secours s'ils tombaient dans la misère.

Le paupérisme est donc, ainsi qu'on l'a déjà remarqué, une branche particulière de l'administration des bourgeoisies ou corporations. D'après la volonté du gouvernement, cette administration dût s'organiser librement. Aussi diffère-t-elle selon les lieux, et communément on l'annexait à l'administration générale de la commune. La surintendance que le gouvernement exerçait sur cet objet était fort indirecte ; nous en parlerons plus bas.

Les suites de la dislocation du soin des pauvres et des ressources y annexées, entre les différentes corporations, furent, que le soin de cet intérêt fut maintenu presque toujours sur un degré fort bas, et nous présente souvent un tableau affligeant et digne de pitié. Car il était inévitable que le désordre et la confusion ne se missent dans l'administration des pauvres, dans les villages, p. ex. où pour la plupart du tems, on manquait, et des ressources suffisantes et des lumières nécessaires pour prendre une connaissance exacte des besoins et des différentes classes de pauvres, et pour prendre des mesures efficaces contre le mal.

L'administration n'était pas dûment contrôlée et vérifiée par les préposés de la commune ; elle était souvent et pendant une longue suite d'années entre les mains de la même famille ; ceux qui en étaient chargés n'avaient que peu ou point de salaire ; il était donc tout naturel et presque inévitable, qu'il s'y glissât des infidélités ou de l'arbitraire. La position et l'essence mêmes des contributions durent contribuer à ce désordre. Car les pauvres qui en étaient membres, étaient en droit d'exiger secours et assistance de ceux qui étaient plus à leur aise. Comment aurait-on pu exercer une surveillance exacte sur les pauvres, sur ceux qui demandaient du secours, s'ils demeuraient dans d'autres pays, avec les corporations desquels la leur n'avait pas conclu un concordat de réciprocité ? N'était-ce pas presque inévitable, que ces secours deviendraient une source et un germe de paresse, de licence et d'une impertinence empressée à les demander ?

Dans quelques endroits, dans les montagnes (districts de Siebenthal, de Grindelwald), les secours consistaient à la vérité en vivres, en terrain à cultiver, etc. ; mais à mesure que l'argent circula plus abondamment, le principal moyen de secours devint l'argent comptant ; c'était même l'unique que l'on pût faire tenir aux pauvres qui demeuraient ailleurs. La facilité que présentait ce moyen, à contenter sans travail ses desirs, et de soustraire à la surveillance, l'emploi, que l'on en faisait, en dût nécessairement favoriser le gaspillage, et engendrer, pour ainsi dire, la pauvreté.

Ces suites funestes se firent sentir plus vivement, à mesure que le nombre des pauvres s'augmentait. Dans plusieurs endroits l'embarras toujours croissant donna lieu à de grands et louables efforts pour prendre des mesures efficaces contre le mal. On établit une plus grande régularité et un meilleur ordre dans cette branche de l'administration communale ; on créa des emplois exprès pour cet objet ; on établit des surveillans, etc. Dans quelques communes à la campagne on créa même des hôpitaux pour les pauvres, en faisant des efforts et des sacrifices, qui paraissaient au-dessus de leurs forces. Et cependant toutes ces belles institutions ne justifèrent pas les hautes espérances que l'on avait conçues en les fondant ; nous allons voir pourquoi.

Toutes ces nouvelles mesures et institutions étaient l'affaire de chaque bourgeoisie en particulier ; elles se trouvaient isolées ; de là précisément leur mauvais succès. Ce qu'une commune établissait d'utile à cet égard, n'était pas appuyé par les communes voisines, qui, en suivant leur vieille routine, y portaient au contraire obstacles et inimitié. La surveillance qui forme la base de l'entretien des pauvres, ne s'étendait pas au-delà des limites de la commune, et ne comprenait que les pauvres de la commune ; cet important devoir étant ainsi négligé, ne pouvait donc jamais atteindre son but salulaire.

Depuis plus d'un demi-siècle, d'autres pays se sont acquis, relativement aux hôpitaux des pauvres, des lumières et de l'expérience ; de ce dont ils ont profité, en adoptant pour leurs propres établissemens de ce genre, ce qu'ils trouvaient de bon et d'utile à ce sujet dans les autres pays. Les hôpitaux de notre pays manquèrent totalement ce but. Leurs institutions étaient défectueuses dès leur base ; elles étaient le produit d'un zèle philanthropique, qui voulait remédier entièrement à la misère humaine. Ces hôpitaux pour les pauvres prirent leur origine dans des villages ; ils n'avaient donc que l'étendue proportionnée aux besoins, que le village ressentait à cet égard ; les ressources et les forces n'étant pas proportionnées à ces besoins, ne permettaient pas de classer les pauvres suivant leur état, leur âge et le degré degré de leur misère, ce qui est cependant la condition fondamentale d'une bonne administration. Ici nous trouvons un local grand et spacieux ; eh bien ! nous y voyons entassés pêle et mêle, des enfans à côté de vieillards infirmes, des malades à côté de fainéans et de mendiants qui jouissent de la meilleure santé ; on y voit jusqu'à des familles entières ! partout enfin on y apperçoit, confondus et réunis dans un mélange diffus, le bien et le mal, l'utile et le nuisible, le malade et celui qui est en bonne santé ; la harmonie et la discordance. Il fallait donc que dans ces établissemens, les enfans fussent élevés, les malades traités et guéris, les vieillards et les infirmes soignés, et que les fainéans en bonne santé fussent tenus au travail. Toutes ces tâches exigeaient un traitement complètement différent, qui fût adapté aux individus suivant à laquelle de ces différentes classes qu'ils appartenissent. A mesure que l'on perd de vue le principe de ces différentes classes, et qu'on les mélange entr'elles, on leur nuit à tous, et par là on manque le but que le traitement de chacune en particulier devait attendre. Dans ces établissemens, il fallait donc que ces différentes tâches soient remplies. Mais il était seul cet établissement, et comme tel il lui fallait aussi un seul système, une administration égale. Par conséquent la direction devait en être uniforme, et il était impossible, qu'elle réunît les différens caractères et qualités, qui sont indispensables pour remplir les tâches imposées par les différentes classes de pauvres. Elle était en outre sujette à changer. Si déjà il était difficile de trouver des hommes capables pour remplir cette charge, il l'était encore bien plus de les engager à la conserver ; car d'abord ils étaient mal salariés, et en second lieu ils se trouvaient souvent dans des positions fâcheuses vis-à-vis des autorités des lieux avec qu'ils avaient toujours des difficultés plus ou moins désagréables. Ce changement fréquent dût naturellement devenir préjudiciable au bien-être et aux progrès de l'établissement.

Si la direction se comportait avec sévérité et rigueur, elle contrevenait à l'esprit de l'humanité et de la charité chrétienne, qui formaient la base de l'établissement, et elle maltraitait les pauvres qui manquaient des forces nécessaires pour gagner leur pain par le travail ; était-elle au contraire indulgente et bonne, elle faisait beau jeu aux vauriens et aux mendiants robustes et fainéans. Le désordre et la confusion s'introduisaient, et menaçaient et l'état moral et l'état économique de l'établissement ; l'application au travail disparaissait et faisait place à la paresse et à la licence, qui durent avoir inévitablement des suites funestes.

Bref de quel côté que nous jetons les yeux, nous voyons toujours les véritables principes du traitement des pauvres, en opposition avec la base défectueuse de ces sortes d'établissements, partout l'expérience nous a fait découvrir l'origine de leurs défauts. Il était enfin inévitable, que contre la volonté et le zèle charitable des fondateurs, ces établissemens ne devinssent, pour ainsi dire, des plantations, des pépinières, pour l'oisiveté et la démoralisation, des demeures, que souillait la dépravation physique et morale. L'aspect journalier de la misère publique, le commerce journalier avec cette écume de la société civile, devint contagieux pour ceux qui n'étaient pas encore descendus à un degré de corruption aussi bas, et qui cependant n'avaient dans le besoin d'autre asile que celui qui servait aussi à ce rebut de la société. Il s'en suivit une véritable fièvre d'hôpital, un mal moral qui consistait en un émoussement complet des sentimens honnêtes. Nous devons encore faire mention d'un but fort important que l'on avait en vue en fondant ces hôpitaux, c'était celui du travail.

Ces hôpitaux étaient donc déjà chargés du triple devoir ; de l'éducation des enfans, de la guérison du malade, et du traitement et entretien des vieillards infirmes ; on voulut encore en faire des maisons de travail, où l'on serait en droit de faire travailler au profit de l'établissement ceux qui seraient encore robustes et capables de travail ; afin de réveiller par là dans le bas peuple le sentiment du travail et de l'industrie. Ce but ne fut toutefois atteint que fort imparfaitement. Nous ne voulons cependant ne pas approfondir ici les difficultés qu'il y a de trouver un travail convenable à cette industrie artificielle et un débit pour ce travail. Ce qui nous importe dans ce sujet, c'est la solution de la demande, " Peut-on dans de pareils établissemens faire naître l'amour du travail et exciter l'industrie, par le moyen d'une activité forcée ? " L'expérience doit nous en donner quelques éclaircissemens.

La même contradiction que nous avons mentionnée plus haut se retrouve encore ici. Le caractère fondamental de ces établissemens est, la bienfaisance, une charité philanthropique, qui cherche à offrir un asile assuré au malheur et à la misère ; ce caractère n'est pas compatible avec la correction, avec la violence, avec les punitions. Ces maisons doivent être habitées par des personnes malheureuses, accablées de maux et de misère, dignes enfin de la pitié générale, et non pas par des forçats, ces maisons veulent recevoir des infirmes, mais non des criminels.

A nos yeux ce but de travail ne s'accordera jamais avec le but primitif de bienfaisance ; en exceptant toutefois les occasions, où des accidens imprévus, mais passagers, privent momentanément les individus des moyens de se gagner leur pain quotidien ; pour de pareils cas, toutefois, on peut se servir de moyens de secours extraordinaires, qui doivent cesser, à mesure que le besoin disparaît.

L'amour et l'application au travail sont liés très intimément à l'intérêt particulier de l'individu, puisque lui seul en retire le gain et la jouissance. Ce n'est que la perspective continue de ce gain et de cette jouissance, qui peut lui donner l'habitude du travail, qui peut le lui rendre agréable, et qui le rend lui-même insensible à la fatigue. Mais dans ces maisons de travail, c'est précisément cette perspective de gain qui lui manque. Le petit profit qu'il tirera de son ouvrage dans ces établissemens, ne peut à ses yeux entrer en ligne de compte avec l'oisiveté sans soucis que semblait lui promettre un établissement public de bienfaisance et de charité. Son intérêt particulier est donc remplacé par celui de l'hôpital; c'est ce dernier seul qui tire du profit de son travail. Pourquoi, se dira-t-il, pourquoi travaillerai-je, pour un établissement qui a été fondé et institué tout exprès pour des gens tels que moi?

Et c'est là précisément la raison pourquoi, à quelques rares exceptions, près tous ceux qui sont reçus dans ces hôpitaux, s'opposent au but de les faire travailler; c'est pourquoi aussi qu'ils ne travaillent que par force et avec un dégoût marqué, c'est pourquoi une fois qu'ils y ont été reçus, ils y restent continuellement à la charge de l'hôpital, et n'en sortent que rarement pour gagner leur pain, par leur propre travail.

De là aussi vient, que ces établissemens, dont on espérait lors de leur fondation beaucoup de soulagement et d'aide pour les communes chargées de pauvres, donnèrent lieu par leur résultat entièrement opposé à cet espoir à de grandes plaintes relativement au nombre toujours croissant des pauvres; de telle manière que les communes qui avaient créé de pareils établissemens se trouvèrent un fardeau plus gênant, qu'elles n'en avaient eu à porter avant leurs institutions. Dans quelques communes, on les supprima bientôt tout-à-fait (p. ex. à Rugsau, à Ruderswyl): dans d'autres endroits on fit usage d'une grande sévérité, pour intimider et repousser ceux qui demanderaient du secours; mais presque dans tous les autres endroits, on médite une réforme complète dans ces établissemens, afin d'en faire des hôpitaux, qui rempliraient entièrement leur premier but (p. ex. à Sumiswald, à Trub, à Langnau, à Grindelwald, etc.)

Quoique le jour sous lequel nous avons présenté ces établissemens soit isolé, défavorable, insuffisant, obscur même; la manière dont on traite les pauvres dans les autres parties du canton, nous présente un tableau d'un aspect plus sombre, et qui nous laisse une impression plus triste. Dans ces contrées, ainsi que partout ailleurs où une bonne surveillance manque, ce sont de vieux us, une routine vague, le grand besoin, qui règlent cet objet important, c'est le hasard qui lui fixe son but.

Il ne faut pas songer à y trouver une organisation régulière dans la manière de traiter les pauvres. Les moyens les plus usités, sont: les contributions en argent comptant et les frais des pensions; dans quelques endroits, où les grandes propriétés et les biensfonds sont grévées des charges communales, (comme p. ex. des grandes fermes dans l'Emmenthal,) on leur fait porter le fardeau des pauvres de la commune, chacun à son tour; de manière que le propriétaire est tenu à se charger pour quelque tems, et sans aucune bonification de la part qui lui aura été adjugée. Par la même raison, et par un même vieil usage, on envoie dans beaucoup d'endroits les pauvres de la corporation en tournee; c. à d. que les bourgeois plus aisés sont tenus de les loger et de les nourrir, chacun à son tour, et que de cette manière ils sont quelquesfois repartis chez des gens qui eux-mêmes sont indigens et manquent du nécessaire.

Non moins triste et révoltant est le moyen dont quelques communes pauvres et sans jugement se servent pour se débarrasser de leurs pauvres, en les adjugeant à ceux qui demandent le moins de pension. L'autorité du lieu fait offrir publiquement une pension à l'habitant qui voudra se charger de tel ou tel pauvre; cette pension est déjà bien minime; mais elle a la valeur de l'argent comptant, et par là elle se réduira à un montant encore moindre, à cause du grand nombre de concurrens. De cette manière, le pauvre victime tombe entre les mains de pères de familles avides, et qui sont eux-mêmes pauvres et nécessiteux. On peut se figurer la position déplorable, à laquelle ces malheureux sont pour la plupart réduits. Si cette position ne devenait parfois pas insupportable, il faut l'attribuer au sentiment de bienfaisance, qui n'était pas entièrement étouffé dans le cœur de notre peuple. On a même vu des exemples, que des propriétaires ont pu réveiller en eux l'amour du travail et qu'ils ont formé de leurs enfans d'excellens ouvriers; en les faisant travailler pour leur propre compte. Mais toutes ces exceptions, ne rendent que plus sensible le mal général.

Les secours en argent, dont nous avons fait mention plus haut, et que les bourgeoisies donnent à leurs pauvres, ne sont pas d'un effet moins pernicieux. Ils sont, pour ainsi dire, une suite inévitable des rapports qui existent entre les riches et les pauvres d'une commune; c. à d. que chaque famille qui est ou qui se croit dans le besoin, demande, appuyée par la loi, secours et assistance; et comment faire pour le lui refuser? De cette manière la bourgeoisie leur accorde des petits secours, tantôt pour payer le loyer, tantôt pour subvenir à d'autres besoins, soit qu'ils demeurent dans l'endroit même, soit ailleurs; et cela sans aucune surveillance! Quelles peuvent, quelles doivent en être les conséquences? Nous allons maintenant nous occuper des ressources, dont les corporations font usage, pour faire face à l'entretien de leurs pauvres.

Ces ressources sont, comme on peut se l'imaginer, de nature et de produit différens, mais relativement à l'emploi qui s'en fait, elles sont toutes liées aux droits de bourgeoisie; on ne peut en excepter que celles converties en capitaux, dont plusieurs communes avaient et ont encore la jouissance par ensemble, avant la fixation définitive des droits de bourgeoisie. Nous entendons par là les fonds que possédait une contrée, un district entier, comme, p. ex. les districts d'Oberhasle, et d'Interlachen. Dans d'autres endroits, on se servit, par contre, pour établir des droits de bourgeoisie, du bien communal, qui consistait en terres et biensfonds communaux, en forêts communales, et en privilèges de pâturage dans les forêts, etc. et en capitaux.

On dût considérer aussi comme bien communal, les biens du clergé, qui à plusieurs endroits étaient considérables. Mais le gouvernement ne voulut point permettre, qu'en les partageant à parts à parts égales entre les communes qui avaient formé la paroisse, et il défendit d'entamer le fond principal. Toutefois on leur laissa l'usufruit, qui resterait après déduction faite des dépenses que l'administration du bien nécessitait, (voyez les Ordonnances sur les Pauvres de 1634, 1642, 1676.) De cette façon chaque commune se trouvait abandonnée à ses propres ressources; les relations entre les communes durent s'isoler et se séparer d'autant plus que leur ressources étaient de nature et de produit différent, et que la proportion entre les besoins et ces ressources était de différens degrés et très variable. C'est pourquoi aussi que le gouvernement ne put l'emporter, lorsqu'en voyant par le fait les grands besoins et la faiblesse de quelques communes, il voulut établir une loi: que les bourgeoisies riches d'une paroisse assisteraient les plus pauvres; et que les paroisses pauvres recevraient du secours de celles du voisinage qui seraient plus riches; car il n'existait aucun lien qui les obligeât à ce secours mutuel, et les ressources des biens du clergé ne pouvaient être employées à ce but.

Les ressources de ces corporations isolées étaient fondées sur la base des biens et usufruits communaux, qui avaient existé par le passé dans les endroits où elles étaient exclusivement employées à l'entretien des pauvres; elles durent par conséquent se développer fort différemment relativement à ces besoins.

Un endroit donc qui par acquisition, ou par d'autres évènements favorables, avait augmenté, ses biens communaux, qui avait par conséquent aggrandi les richesses héritées de ses ancêtres, et qui maintenait en outre une surveillance et une administration exactes, propres à empêcher la dilapidation; un tel endroit pouvait et devait facilement mettre de côté des biens et des capitaux considérables, à l'effet d'entretenir ses pauvres. Ce fut là le cas dans les villes. Les biens destinés aux pauvres de leurs corporations se trouvent non seulement être suffisants, mais même quelquefois abondans de manière qu'on n'en emploie pas tout l'usufruit, (il faut remarquer ici, que dans villes, p. ex. à Berne, à Thoune, à Berthoud, et a. d. s. la bourgeoisie se subdivise encore en plusieurs corporations appelées, "Abbeyes," qui sont chargées des tutèles et des pauvres qui font partie de leur corporation.) Ce superflu leur donne une grande avance sur les corporations de la campagne, où de pareils fonds communaux n'ont pu être destinés à cet objet, en proportion aux besoins de la commune, et où quelquesfois même ils manquaient tout-à-fait.

Nous excepterons par conséquent les villes en parlant de notre matière.

A la campagne l'usufruit des biens communaux revenait, partie aux habitans légitimes (bourgeois) de l'endroit, en vertu d'anciennes coutumes, partie la jouissance en appartenait aux seuls propriétaires des biensfonds; partant le riche avait une plus grande part de la jouissance de ces biens, que le pauvre; ainsi qu'on le voit, p. ex. relativement aux privilèges de pâturage et autres droits sur les terres communales.

Dans des endroits où de pareilles coutumes n'existent pas, cet usufruit est exclusivement destiné à l'entretien des pauvres, ce qui diminue considérablement le fardeau des contributions; nous voyons cette coutume établie, p. ex. dans le district de Nidau, dans celui de Buren, ainsi que dans quelques autres.

Mais dans la plus grande partie du canton, ni les biens communaux et leur usufruit, ni les fonds des corporations affectés à cet objet, ne pouvaient suffire à faire face aux besoins; et si par le passé ils y suffisaient, l'époque actuelle a dû les rendre insuffisants. Les demandes de plus en plus multipliées dépassent de beaucoup le produit des ressources, quoique ces dernières se soient aussi augmentées (voyez les tableaux des années 1827 et 1828.)

Pour satisfaire alors aux besoins de plus en plus urgens et croissans des pauvres, on se servit du moyen des contributions. Nous trouvons ce moyen indiqué déjà dans les réglemens sur les pauvres depuis 1642 jusqu'en 1690, par un ordonnance, qui prescrivait, "Qu'un chacun devait contribuer en proportion de son avoir et de sa fortune, à l'entretien des pauvres," au cas que "la collecte d'église et les fonds qui leur étaient affectés ne suffiraient pas." Cette espèce de contribution datait de fort loin dans quelques endroits et districts; on ne la percevait qu'à des époques et lors d'évènements extraordinaires, par ex. en temps de guerre, lorsqu'il s'agissait d'acheter des terres et des droits de seigneurie, etc. Mais dans ces cas c'était toujours une contribution extraordinaire. Les évènements extraordinaires et étonnans du 17^e siècle, durent faire venir l'idée d'introduire et de percevoir cette sorte de contribution pour fournir aux frais de l'entretien des pauvres. A dater de cette époque nous les voyons en usage et ayant le caractère de contributions ordinaires et régulières, imposées et perçues par les administrations particulières de chaque corporation, lorsque les ressources ordinaires ne suffisaient pas aux dépenses.

L'essence de cette contribution resta la même. Sa base primitive se fondait sur les immeubles. Mais lorsqu'on commença à attacher un plus haut prix à d'autres objets, on les soumit aussi à cette contribution. En premier lieu on impose les immeubles; en second lieu les biens meubles, et enfin, en troisième lieu, les usines, c'est à dire les objets qui par suite de privilèges ou de concessions ont été élevés à un prix au-dessus de leur valeur réelle; tels que des auberges, des moulins, des scies, etc.; en général cette dernière classe de contributions ne fut jamais imposée à part. Quant à la seconde de ces classes, elle prit naissance au 18^e et 19^e siècle; lorsqu'il se fit une plus grande circulation d'argent, et lorsque la disproportion entre les biensfonds et les autres biens de la vie civile devint plus sensible. Il serait superflu d'entrer ici dans des détails ultérieurs sur l'ordre de cette contribution, puisque nous ajoutons ci-joint un recueil des ordonnances sur les pauvres; nous nous voyons toutefois obligés d'attirer l'attention du lecteur sur une circonstance particulière, c. à d. sur la manière dont ces contributions sont réparties ; répartition qui prend sa source dans les relations et dans l'état de la corporation.

L'origine et l'introduction de ces corporations datent, ainsi qu'il a déjà été dit, depuis la fin du 17^e siècle, et comme par cette institution tout citoyen est adressé à sa corporation, dont il est membre, soit pour obtenir du secours lorsqu'il est dans le besoin, soit pour payer sa part aux contributions ; il fallait qu'il résultât des difficultés pour percevoir cette contribution de ceux des membres d'une corporation, qui changeraient de domicile, ce qui avec le tems devenait inévitable. A qui appartenait alors le droit de percevoir d'un tel citoyen les contributions sur les immeubles, s'ils se trouvaient être situés sur le territoire d'une autre corporation ? était-ce à cette dernière, ou à celle dont le contribuable était membre, que revenait ce droit ? Nous trouvons encore au 18^e siècle des exemples du dernier cas. Il aurait, ce semble cependant, été plus conforme à l'origine et à l'essence des droits de bourgeoisie, qui s'étaient constitués entre les limites d'une commune, de ne percevoir et d'imposer des contributions que sur les biensfonds situés entre ces limites, n'importe à qui ces immeubles pourraient appartenir. Aussi prévalut-il, ce principe dans les nouvelles ordonnances sur les contributions. Quant aux contributions sur les biens meubles, c'est bien différent. Ces biens étaient imposés et requis au profit de l'endroit de bourgeoisie du contribuable, puisqu'on les considérait comme une chose qui peut en tout tems rentrer au lieu de bourgeoisie, et qui par conséquent peut s'enlever à volonté du lieu de domicile d'un citoyen. De cette manière les immeubles étaient toujours contribuables à la corporation de l'endroit, entre les limites duquel ils se trouvaient, n'importe à qu'ils appartenissent, que ce fut à des bourgeois ou à d'autres habitans du lieu, tandis que les biens meubles de ces derniers étaient en tout tems contribuables à la corporation dont ils étaient membres, et d'où seulement ils avaient à exiger et à attendre du secours en cas de besoin.

On peut juger d'après ce que nous venons de dire, que la fixation de ces contributions n'a pu avoir lieu qu'après de grands débats. Comme cette contribution est uniquement l'affaire de l'administration bourgeoise d'un endroit, et que les besoins se trouvent être grands ou petits, suivant le tems et les circonstances, on pourra comprendre facilement, qu'elle doit être plus ou moins forte selon les endroits, et cela d'autant plus que dans quelques endroits on a d'autres ressources, qui allègent le traitement des pauvres ; comme p. ex. l'usufruit des fonds affectés aux pauvres.

La même diversité se trouve dans la manière de percevoir cette contribution ; chaque district a, pour ainsi dire, une manière différente pour chaque objet contribuable ; champs, prairies, pâturages, forêts ; tandis que les premiers se mesurent et sont taxés par arpens, les deux derniers sont communément imposés selon leurs droits et privilèges. Dans les montagnes, par ex. on taxe les pâturages d'après le nombre de vaches qui peuvent y être nourries pendant la saison d'été ; les prairies sont imposées d'après la quantité de fourrage d'hiver qu'elles sont dans le cas de fournir. Ailleurs le propriétaire doit payer pour chaque pièce de bétail qu'il fait pâturer pendant l'été, 3 ou 4 kreutzers, et une taxe proportionnellement plus forte pour le bétail qu'il hiverne.

Il serait fatigant et inutile de faire ici l'énumération de toutes les particularités et différences qui existent à ce sujet dans chaque vallée, dans chaque commune même, par suite d'anciens us et habitudes.

Ces diversités ont donné lieu, suivant que plus ou moins elles contrariaient leur but à une foule infinie d'irrégularités et d'actions arbitraires, qui excitaient le mécontentement et les plaintes continuelles des contribuables.

Après tout ce qui vient de se dire, on pourra à peu près saisir les rapports qui existaient entre le gouvernement et les différentes bourgeoisies relativement aux pauvres et à leur entretien ; car cet entretien appartenait uniquement à l'administration de ces dernières ; le gouvernement ne pouvait y influer que d'une manière bien superficielle, en exerçant sa surintendance sur cette administration. A la campagne le gouvernement était représenté à cet égard par ses préfets. C'était par conséquent à ces derniers qu'appartenait la surveillance sur les bourgeoisies et corporations de leur district, et sur leur administration ; c'était de leurs lumières, de leur expérience, de leur fermeté et de leur bonne volonté que dépendait l'heureux succès de cette surveillance. Leur charge était de courte durée (6 années) un grand nombre d'entr'eux entrèrent dans cette sphère d'activité, déjà si grande et si importante par elle-même, sans avoir une connaissance exacte de l'état du pays et de ses besoins ; comment donc auraient-ils pu se vouer avec zèle à un objet aussi aride et aussi ingrat que l'est le paupérisme ? Leur influence à cet égard était donc fort accidentelle et irrégulière ; de manière que la surintendance du gouvernement était toujours et généralement variable et défectueuse ; et on n'y apportait des réformes que de tems en tems, lorsque des défauts trop saillants, rendaient indispensables ces améliorations.

La commission des pauvres ne se trouvait pas dans une meilleure position ; cette commission avait été créée, lorsque l'on institua des corporations bourgeoises (1676) à dessein d'aider ces dernières avec les ressources de l'état, et dans des momens d'un besoin extraordinaire, et pour décider en première instance sur les difficultés qui s'élèveraient relativement à l'endroit et à la bourgeoisie auxquels tel ou tel pauvre devrait appartenir. Mais comme elle manquait entièrement d'organes intermédiaires entr'elle et les corporations (car on ne pouvait compter comme tel le clergé), elle ne pouvait acquérir les lumières nécessaires pour bien connaître les intérêts et les besoins du pays, et par conséquent ses secours annuels étaient une ressource incertaine et toujours insuffisante.

Il ne faut donc pas s'étonner, si sous de pareils auspices, le paupérisme est tombé dans le canton de Berne dans un état aussi fâcheux et aussi irrégulier. Il fallait qu'avec le tems les effets de cette séparation et repartition des habitans en plusieurs corporations ou bourgeoisies se fissent sentir peu à peu en se développant. Le principe invariable et fixe de ces liaisons héréditaires dût naturellement s'entrechoquer avec le principe de mobilité et de changement qui fait la base de la vie et de la relation sociales; l'intérêt du bien public dût céder à l'intérêt de quelques réunions particulières. Car les intérêts privés des corporations durent les rendre égoïstes et ennemies les unes des autres. On mit des obstacles au libre établissement de domicile, et on paralisa par là le développement des forces et de l'industrie des basses classes, et les conséquences de ces mesures durent naturellement retomber sur chaque corporation en particulier, qui était obligée à recueillir et à entretenir ses membres qui n'avaient aucun travail et qui par conséquent étaient sans courage. Il fallait bien aussi qu'avec le tems cette classe d'individus cherchât et trouvât un moyen d'existence, dans cette assistance même, qu'ils étaient en droit d'exiger; il était naturel qu'ils y prissent goût, en se livrant de cette manière à une vie oisive et à tous les vices qui en résultent. Nous pourrions citer, à l'appui de ce que nous venons d'avancer, de nombreux exemples de familles entières qui vivent en parasites, d'année en année, de génération en génération, à la charge de la commune, et qui ont trouvé un moyen d'existence dans cette ressource; tandis que nous ne voyons que fort peu d'exemples du contraire.

Les administrations aussi durent ressentir les mauvais effets de ces causes. A telle proportion que le nombre des pauvres s'augmentait par suite des causes indiquées plus haut, à telle proportion les ressources des corporations se diminuaient et leur administration se relâchait. Comment aussi résister à cette hydre, sans aide, sans secours efficaces? De ce combat inégal s'en suivit une faiblesse et une paralysie complète pour les communes accablées de pauvres. Cette disproportion toujours croissante dût se faire sentir plus vivement dans les époques où des évènements extraordinaires nécessitaient des secours et des ressources beaucoup plus considérables!

La soudaine et violente secousse que reçurent les institutions de notre pays lors de la Révolution de 1798, découvrit la plaie dans son entier. Aussitôt que l'acte de médiation eût un peu apaisé les troubles, on vit paraître une suite d'ordonnances qui avaient pour but de régulariser l'administration des pauvres, et de soulager le fardeau des contribuables. (1804-1812. Voyez le recueil d'ordonnances ci-joint.)

Ces ordonnances considèrent le plus souvent le paupérisme sous le point de vue de la police et du droit de bourgeoisie; c'est par cette voie qu'elles cherchent à restreindre le mal, tandis que d'un autre côté elles ouvrent de nouvelles ressources, pour alléger un peu le fardeau qui pèsait sur les contribuables, et qu'elles règlent la manière si difficile de percevoir ces contributions, (voyez l'ordonnance sur les pauvres de 1804). Le succès ne justifia pas les espérances que l'on avait fondées sur ces ordonnances, surtout sur celle de 1807; elles se trouvèrent même pernicieuses dans quelques points; p. ex. dans la suspension du droit de bourgeoisie, par voie de sentence pénale.

Les années de disette de 1816 et 1817, aggrandirent et envénimèrent la plaie du paupérisme. On fut dès-lors obligé à prendre des mesures efficaces pour ouvrir de nouvelles ressources. Pour cet effet on imposa, en 1817, les droits d'entrée sur les mariages; droit, qui consistait en ce que la mariée payait à la bourgeoisie de l'époux une certaine somme. Le produit de cette ressource s'ajoutait alors au fond capital.

Le gouvernement voulant connaître l'avis de la nation à ce sujet, posa et fit publier des questions, promettant des récompenses à ceux qui y répondraient satisfaisamment. Mais aucune reponse n'indiqua le chemin à prendre pour une réforme efficace.

Les contributions exorbitantes pour les pauvres qui furent imposées en 1816 et 1817 et dans les années suivantes, déterminèrent par contre le gouvernement à prendre une mesure sévère et coercitive pour reprimer ce mal. On prit la moyenne des contributions des années 1813, 1814 et 1815, qui servit à fixer un maximum qu'aucune corporation ou commune ne devait dépasser, sans le consentement special du gouvernement.

Les tableaux ci-joints démontreront qu'effectivement dans les dernières années, les contributions pour les pauvres se sont diminuées, quoiqu'on n'ait pu avoir qu'un résultat approximatif à cause de quelques irrégularités, et parcequ'on n'a pu y parvenir, que par la confrontation des dates.

Nous allons maintenant traiter de la seconde partie de l'entretien des pauvres, savoir de ceux dont la charge retombait uniquement sur le gouvernement du canton. Nous avons déjà fait mention que le gouvernement avait formellement promis d'assister efficacement les corporations, qui seraient chargées outre mesure de pauvres. S'il survenait des malheurs, comme p. ex. des incendies, des inondations, des disettes, des dévastations de terrain, etc. le gouvernement faisait tenir aussitôt, aux endroits ou aux personnes qui avaient souffert, des secours proportionnés au dommage. Les communes qu'avaient à entretenir plus de pauvres que leurs forces et ressources ne leur permettaient de faire, recevaient pareillement des secours en argent ou en nature.

On accorda aux communes, qu'avant la Réformation jouissaient d'institutions bienfaisantes provenant des couvens, la continuation de ces jouissances, du moins de toutes celles, qui n'avaient pas été supprimées, et en tant qu'à la longue, des changemens arbitraires, n'eussent été apportés dans la repartition des dites institutions (telles étaient p. ex. les pensions, les distributions de pain, de blé, de farine, de bois, d'argent, etc.)

Comme l'on voit, cette espèce de secours était calquée sur les anciennes coutumes, qui dataient d'une époque où l'on avait des idées fort imparfaites sur l'entretien des pauvres, où l'on ne savait pas les assister avec discernement et en proportion de leur position et de leurs besoins, et où l'entretien consistait souvent à les nourrir jusqu'à leur mort, ce qui donnait souvent lieu à de tristes exemples de paresse et de corruption. On ne doit cependant pas passer sous silence un changement important qui s'est opéré, à ce sujet, dans le ci-devant couvent d'Interlaken, il y a plusieurs années; on y a créé une infirmerie contenant cinq lits, qui s'est fait, et se fait encore remarquer par son influence salubre.

Aussi sera-ce un des moyens de secours, indiqué et recommandé par le projet de révision qu'on médite; parcequ'on trouve avec raison, qu'il remplit parfaitement le but de la vraie bienfaisance, et que l'on ne saurait mieux employer l'usufruit des biens des pauvres.

Le gouvernement accordait en outre des secours réguliers par l'entremise de la commission des pauvres. Cette dernière devait distribuer en lots de 6 à 32 francs de Suisse, une certaine somme fixe, qui lui était allouée annuellement, et qui s'augmentait avec les besoins, monta dans les dernières années jusqu'à 10,000 et 12,000 fr. sans toutefois pouvoir suffire aux besoins.

Mais nous voulons parler ici de ceux des pauvres qui n'appartenaient à aucune des corporations, ou bourgeoisies; et que le gouvernement à lui seul était obligé de maintenir.

Nous avons vu que deux classes de la population ont été victimes de ces institutions des droits de bourgeoisie; et que depuis cette époque jusqu'à nos jours leur espèce ainsi que leur misère se sont perpétués. Nous parlons des heimathlosen et des aubains.

La première classe se composait dans l'origine d'étrangers poursuivis par le sort, pour la plupart pauvres et sans pain et sans moyens de se le gagner; ils avaient été, pour nous exprimer ainsi, battus par l'orage, et ils étaient venus naufrager sur les côtes de notre pays. Leur caractère, comme étrangers, mais surtout leur position et leur sort précaires, leur avaient inspiré de la répugnance pour toute relation et liaison sociale; leur vie vagabonde et fugitive les avaient rendus farouches et leur avait inspiré le dégoût du travail. Il n'y avait donc rien qui parût plus naturel, dans les tems rudes du 17^e siècle, que de chercher à s'en débarrasser de la manière la plus prompte.

C'est aussi ce que l'on chercha, car leur fardeau devenait plus grand et plus onéreux d'année en année. C'est pourquoi aussi nous avons remarqué plus haut, que les ordonnances de cette époque là, tendaient à ce but; tantôt plusieurs états confédérés s'associaient à cet effet (p. ex. les diètes à Baden de 1570-1661), tantôt le besoin forçait chaque canton en particulier à prendre des mesures sévères. Mais toutes ces ordonnances, toutes ces mesures de rigueur manquèrent leur but. La désunion intérieure en Suisse, qui provenait, partie des troubles religieux, partie par les influences de l'étranger; cette désunion avait détruit le sentiment fédéral dans les différens cantons, et avait par là paralysé les forces et l'énergie qui étaient nécessaires pour pouvoir exécuter des projets qui fussent profitables au bien public. On ne pouvait espérer un succès continu et satisfaisant, s'il n'existait aucune union, et si l'on n'agissait pas de concert; les efforts de chaque canton en particulier ne purent suffire; ses forces durent bientôt s'épuiser dans cette lutte. La nature montagneuse du pays et la pitié de ses habitans, protégeaient ces malheureux. Tandis que les montagnes leur offraient un asile et des cachettes, les habitans leur fournissaient de la nourriture par crainte ou par pitié. Les perquisitions et les poursuites restèrent sans succès. Plus on les soumettait à ce système barbare et plus ils devenaient dangereux à la société, plus ils s'accoutumaient à leur genre de vie. Cette lutte entre les deux partis dura près de deux siècles. Les gouvernemens s'épuisèrent en vains efforts; on connaît le triste sort des heimathlosen. Il était réservé à une nouvelle génération, à ses sentimens nobles et plus humains, d'effacer cette tâche honteuse de l'histoire de notre pays. A cette heure le canton de Berne ne compte plus qu'un petit nombre de ces malheureux.

Le gouvernement leur procura une patrie en la leur achetant, aussitôt qu'il connût le nombre qui lui fut adjugé, lorsqu'on les repartit entre les différens cantons (1805-1818); l'acquisition des districts dans le Jura lui offrit une bonne occasion pour les y faire recevoir bourgeois à meilleur compte; car ces districts étaient encore à cette époque régis par les lois de la naturalisation Françaises. De cette manière, et depuis 1820 jusqu'en 1831, on reçut bourgeois du canton, 3,081 individus pour la somme de 40,585 fr.

Un sort beaucoup plus doux et plus heureux échet à la seconde classe d'étrangers; nous entendons ceux qui à cette époque avaient cherché et trouvé un asile contre le fanatisme religieux dans les pays où l'on professait la même religion qu'eux. Dans des villes on leur accordait gratuitement le droit de domicile et de bourgeoisie; et dans d'autres endroits ils acquerraient l'un et l'autre pour une légère rétribution en argent et à des conditions favorables. Plusieurs de ces familles fleurissent encore au jour d'aujourd'hui dans le nombre des plus distinguées du pays.

Là où ces proscrits pour cause de religion se réfugiaient sur le territoire Suisse, en nombre plus considérable, il fallait prendre des mesures différentes à leur égard, surtout s'ils différaient des habitans par le langage; on dût alors les laisser réunis en groupes nombreux.

Ce

Ce fut le cas des Calvinistes Françaises, qui vinrent se réfugier dans le canton de Berne, lors de la révocation de l'édit de Nantes. Ils formaient déjà une corporation distincte par leurs mœurs, leur langage et leur sort. Cette corporation ressemblait beaucoup aux droits de bourgeoisie, qui commencèrent à cette époque à prendre pied, excepté qu'elle n'était attachée à aucun local fixe. On leur conféra la naturalisation, et dès-lors ils prirent le nom de Colonie Française, et ils eurent les mêmes droits et relations que les corporations du pays. L'activité et l'industrie qui leur étaient propres, les firent bientôt fleurir, et ils fournirent par là des ressources suffisantes à leur administration, qui était présidée par un magistrat supérieur, pour couvrir les frais de leur communauté, sans tomber en rien à la charge de l'état.

Nous trouvons par contre un caractère tout différent dans la seconde classe des habitans du pays, qui ne font partie d'aucune bourgeoisie du canton ; nous voulons parler de la classe des aubains. Quoiqu'on les eût exclus, lorsque l'on forma et institua les droits de bourgeoisie, il fallut tout de même les reconnaître comme enfans du sol, et le gouvernement dût par conséquent les tolérer au pays. On ne pouvait donc les poursuivre et les chasser comme l'on avait fait à l'égard des heimathlosen ; mais d'un autre côté leur position misérable et leurs relations sociales ne leur permettaient pas non plus de se réunir en une corporation distincte, par la voie du travail et de l'industrie, ainsi que l'avait fait la Colonie Française. Ils étaient dispersés par le pays, sans propriétés ; une occupation incertaine, un travail souvent abject leur étaient assignés pour gagner leur vie ; il faut convenir que leur position était assez fâcheuse, mais celle du gouvernement à leur égard ne l'était pas moins, puisqu'il était obligé de secourir et de maintenir leurs pauvres. Quelles difficultés ne présentait pas leur direction, leur surveillance ! Il s'en suivit que leur licence s'accrût avec leur nombre. On agréa à leur nombre tous les enfans trouvés, ou abandonnés, qui n'appartenaient à aucune corporation.

On voulut avec le tems (1779) leur appliquer le système de corporation. On espérait, en les unissant par une liaison étroite, d'en former une corporation, une communauté, qui subsisterait par elle seule. Mais on n'avait pas considéré que cet organisme ne ferait qu'empirer le mal ; puisque par là on n'apportait aucun changement réel dans leur position ; car ils restèrent, comme par le passé, sans propriétés fixes et toujours disséminés par le pays. Ils eurent donc les mêmes droits que les autres corporations, celui entr'autres, d'augmenter la leur, en y admettant de nouveaux membres, pour la somme de 200 fr. On voulait qu'ils se créassent des propres ressources pour leur corporation, le gouvernement donna à cet effet annuellement des sommes considérables. Mais après six années déjà on comprit l'impossibilité de parvenir au but de cette manière (1779-1784). Plus ses secours étaient généreux et encourageans, et plus le fardeau augmentait.

En 1780 la corporation des aubains comptait 3,482 individus. Les secours donnés à leurs pauvres jusqu'en 1798 se montèrent à la somme considérable de 343,750 francs.

Le nombre des secours était en—

De 1798-1803 le gouvernement Helvétique dépensa pour cet objet une somme de 92,183 fr. (y non compris 20,000 fr. de leurs fonds). En 1803 les cantons de Berne, de Vaud et d'Aargovie se partagèrent les aubains ; le premier en eût 4/7, le second 2/7, le troisième 1/7.

On chargea de cette administration une commission des aubains, nommée exprès à cet effet. Le gouvernement lui allouait un crédit annuel de 25,000 fr. somme qui monta plûtard à 27,000 et 30,000 fr. ; elle était régie par les mêmes règles que la commission des pauvres.

Le fardeau toujours grossissant des aubains fit naturellement naître le désir de trouver quelque moyen capable de les diminuer, ou de les faire cesser tout-à-fait. Le seul qui parût depuis longtemps être convenable, était de dissoudre leur corporation. Mais qu'est-ce qui les constituait en corporation distincte, si ce n'est précisément l'existence de ces corporations de bourgeoisie ? On ne pouvait donc dissoudre la leur, qu'en les incorporant à ces dernières. C'est ce que l'on chercha depuis 1826 jusqu'en 1831 ; 195 individus furent placés de cette manière, pour la somme de 23,194 fr. Si un nombre aussi petit à coûté autant, on peut juger par là, de ce que la totalité de ces individus coûterait.

Dans ce moment les autorités s'occupent de rechef, et avec zèle de ce plan ; car il est de toute nécessité de s'opposer énergiquement, non seulement au nombre toujours croissant, mais encore à la corruption et à la licence de cette classe, qui se corrompt à mesure qu'on lui offre et qu'on lui donne des secours généreux et faciles à obtenir. Mais de quelle manière, par quelle voie atteindre à ce but? Ce problème n'est pas encore résolu. Nous doutons, qu'on puisse le résoudre, si en même temps ou auparavant on n'apporte pas de grands changemens dans la position et dans l'essence des droits de bourgeoisie.

Nous croyons maintenant d'avoir satisfait, selon nos faibles moyens, à la tâche, que nous nous étions imposée, de démontrer aussi bien que possible, l'état actuel, l'origine, et le développement dans les différentes branches du paupérisme dans le canton de Berne, et partant nous terminerons ce traité.

Plus ce sujet présentait l'image d'un chaos, d'un mélange diffus, et plus on devait le traiter avec vérité. C'est cette dernière qui a été le but de tous nos efforts. Cette intention nous justifiera, si ce traité paraît défectueux. Personne ne le sent plus vivement que nous. Cette défectuosité trouvera toutefois une excuse dans la grande difficulté qu'il y avait de traiter et d'approfondir une matière aussi étendue, un sujet aussi embrouillé. C'est aussi la raison, qui nous a porté à traiter de préférence le paupérisme sous le point de vue de son développement et de son organisation intérieurs, persuadés que par là nous représenterions plus fidèlement son caractère particulier, sans embrouiller le regard de l'observateur.

BORDEAUX.

ANSWERS to QUERIES circulated by His Majesty's Poor Law Commissioners relative to the Condition of the Poor, and to the Legal and Charitable Provisions for their Support, within the District of His Majesty's Consulate at Bordeaux. Enclosed in Mr. Consul Scott's Despatch of 6th June 1834.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent, and under what form, does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—The number of mendicant vagrants in the district of Bordeaux varies, and depends more or less on the season of the year, and the abundance or failure of the crops. Since the establishment of the Depôt de Mendicité in 1827, answering, in some respects, to the English workhouse, mendicity has greatly diminished in Bordeaux. This institution was established for the purpose of suppressing mendicity, by sending to it all persons found openly begging, who are kept there at the expense of the establishment, and are made to contribute, in some degree, to their own support by work.

2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—Indigent persons, passing through the country on their way home, or seeking work, are allowed three sous ($1\frac{1}{2}d.$) per league, ($2\frac{1}{2}$ miles). If impotent, or unable to travel on foot, they are furnished with means of conveyance.

This relief is granted by the mayor, who states, in the passport or way-bill, the motive why the person is thus assisted. The person assisted presents his passport or way-bill to the mayor of every parish through which he passes, who furnishes the sum sufficient to carry him to the next.

One of the principal intentions of this relief is to afford to the police a clue to the tracing of vagrants, who may be especially designated as objects of suspicion.

The funds of the department support this expense. The sum of 12,000 francs (480*l.*) is destined yearly for this purpose in the department of the Gironde.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders? 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—In France no laws or regulations exist by which destitute able-bodied persons or their families are quartered, billeted or boarded on and with householders.

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no houses of industry in this department for the destitute able-bodied, except that known as the Depôt de Mendicité.

This institution was first established in the year 1827, with a view to suppress the great number of professed beggars who infested the streets and public walks, taking advantage of any defect of conformation, &c. to attract the notice of passengers. By law all persons found begging in the streets are liable to be taken up and imprisoned; but instead of imprisonment, those arrested are conveyed to the Depôt de Mendicité, where, if able, they are made to work. The good effects of this institution are visible; for instead of the number of professed beggars, amounting to 800, which it did before the institution of the establishment, it does not now amount to above 150 or 200.

This institution is supported by private contribution. The King and the town contribute a certain portion to make up what may be wanting. The average number of the population of the depôt amounts to 350 souls.

Generally speaking, owing to the want of population, employment is to be found in commerce, trade or agriculture. The high price of wages in the towns and the country proves that work is always to be found.

When any unforeseen circumstances have arisen to interrupt the common order of things, the local authorities have come to the assistance of the population, by giving work to those out of employment. Public subscriptions are also resorted to on these occasions.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—Since the suppression of the monasteries and convents, there are no religious establishments which regularly give assistance to the destitute. The priests of the various parishes, and the protestant clergymen, distribute, according to their judgment, whatever alms or assistance they may receive for that purpose, to the most indigent; but it is impossible to ascertain to what extent this is done.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—There exists in Bordeaux a society of ladies, who procure work for indigent families; this, however, is confined to needle-work, knitting, &c. This association is not very extensive.

6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—The only cases in which public works are resorted to for the indigent is in that mentioned in answer to query No. 3; it may be added, that there exists no law or regulation to that effect.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—All indigent families, and in which there are those capable of working, but who are not able to obtain it, or whose numbers are so great that all cannot be subsisted, are relieved by the Bureaux de Charité, (a charitable institution).

The same relief is given to those who, having a habitation, are unable of themselves, through age or infirmity, to support themselves.

The mode of obtaining this relief is by petition, signed by some credible person, and attested by the priest or protestant clergyman. It is proportioned to the number of the family, and to the number of those able to work, and whose wages go to the maintenance of the family. The relief consists in bread, soup, wood for fuel, and sometimes, though rarely, blankets and woollen clothing; medicines for the sick, and broth.

Generally speaking, these distributions of food would be insufficient; but most indigent families are assisted by private persons, so that, on the whole, they have wherewithal to sustain life.

The annual distribution à domicile (domiciliary relief) amounts to the sum of 100,000 francs, (4,000 l.)

3,520 families are relieved. The number of impotent in these families, father and mother included, though able to work, amounts to 9,634.

It is in proportion to these numbers that the relief is given, but it is greater in winter than the other parts of the year.

As to the medicines and broth, whenever there are sick in these families a sufficiency is given. Physicians are attached to each auxiliary bureau of every district, who visit the sick, prescribe the remedies, &c., all of which are distributed by the Sœurs de Charité (Sisters of Charity, an order of nuns who devote themselves to the care of the poor and sick, and who undertake, gratuitously, the elementary education of their children). It is a most respectable and praiseworthy institution.

The same Sisters receive in their houses the little girls of these families who are old enough to learn to read. Books are supplied by the instructors.

In extraordinary cases, recourse is had to subscriptions and collections, which increase the means of the Bureaux de Charité; so that during long and hard winters, more clothing, &c. is distributed. It seldom happens that money is given.

There are, however, no positive regulations on these points. The whole is in the hands of the directors of this establishment. A responsible receiver is attached to it, whose accounts are submitted to the examination of the Cour des Comptes (audit-office). Thus, though the distributions are left to the judgment of the directors, they are subjected to control.

The above details relate to the city of Bordeaux. There are, however, proportionate institutions in most of the larger towns of the department, but in the poorer parishes and rural districts the Bureaux de Charité are merely nominal. These parishes being without a revenue, are unable to assist their poor, who subsist on the alms they may receive at the different dwelling-houses, and who when ill, if possible, come to the nearest hospital, generally to that of Bordeaux.

8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—In this department there are no schools in which indigent children are received to be fed and clothed gratuitously, but there are those in which they receive a certain degree of instruction.

For Boys.—The institution of Frères des Ecoles Chrésiennes (Brothers of the Christian Schools), and two Lancastrian schools, which have been lately instituted.

For Girls.—A Lancastrian school, a few boarding schools, in which a certain number of indigent girls are taught gratuitously. And also the Sisters of Charity attached to the administration of the Bureaux de Charité.

The Ecoles Chrésiennes are at the charge of the town. The sum appropriated to those establishments amounts annually to about 14,000 francs (560 l.). Admissions are granted by the town. The number of children instructed in reading, writing and a little arithmetic, amounts to about 1,800 for the town. At the Lancastrian school, the instruction is on a more extended scale. Grammar, drawing and surveying are taught, in addition to what is taught at the Ecoles Chrésiennes.

There are at present in these latter schools 300 boys and 150 girls in all.

The department pays the expenses of these schools.

The girls received in the private boarding schools, where they learn to read, to write and to sew, amount to the number of about 600. This is entirely a private act of charity.

The number of girls received by the Sisters of Charity amounts to about 900.

There has also been established within the last year a model infant school, founded by private subscriptions, for the children of labourers and journeymen artisans. At present, however, it is so little known, that it is of very little importance.

9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—In France there is no law to compel the relatives of the destitute to assist them in any degree, except the immediate parents and their children children reciprocally, and in such cases the assistance is regulated according to the means of the parties.

10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—The destitute are assisted by no public loans, except at the Mont de Piété (an establishment instituted by the town for the purpose of lending money on security), which advances sums proportioned to the objects placed in pawn. These loans are burdensome for the poor on account of the high rate of interest, and the expenses.

It is however a resource to them, as they are not obliged to have recourse to private usurers. The amount of the interest received at the Mont de Piété, is applied to the expenses of the hospitals and other charitable institutions.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there almshouses, or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—Bordeaux is the only town of the department which possesses any establishments of this kind, viz. the Hospital of Incurables (Hospice des Incurables), and that of the old people (Hospice des Vieillards).

These two establishments support 300 old people. This number falls very short of that which the population requires. The requisite qualifications for admission are, to have passed the age of 60, and to prove that the candidate has no means of subsistence.

It may be added, that at Bordeaux the number of old people who are candidates for admittance to these hospitals amounts to 300, and that on an average a vacancy occurs for each at the end of four years at the Hospital des Incurables, and two years at the Hospice des Vieillards, and that all these claimants find either in their families the Secours à Domicile, or private charity, means of subsistence.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—See answer to question No. 7, under the head of "Destitute able-bodied."

3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals? 4. Or quartered or billeted on the householders?—In France no laws or regulations exist by which impotent through age are boarded with individuals, or quartered or billeted on householders.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—No such regulations exist, except between relations of the first degree, and in such cases the assistance is regulated according to the means of the parties.

SICK.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—The department possesses, for the reception of the sick, a small hospital at Bazas; one at St. Macaire, and one at La Réole; a more extensive one at Blaye and Libourne, and the great hospital at Bordeaux.

In this last town there is a hospital especially destined for venereal diseases.

The great hospital of Bordeaux contains always from 600 to 650 sick. The daily admittances average 30; the discharges, 28, and the deaths two.

For admission, on application at the door, a student of medicine examines the applicant, who, if found labouring under a real disease, is admitted to one of the wards, where he is duly examined by a physician. No distinction is made as to country, &c., either in admittance, treatment or discharge.

The inmates of this hospital are generally composed of inhabitants of the town, who are too poor to be treated at home, or who prefer the care that is taken of them there to that which they would experience at home; of workmen, &c. from the neighbouring departments employed in the town, and who have nowhere else to go to; of peasants, even in easy circumstances, who, from illness or accidents, have not the same resources at home; of children, affected with ring-worm.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical assistance afforded to the poor at their own homes? 3. Or are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—There are none beyond those mentioned in answer to question No. 7, under the head of "Destitute able-bodied."

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women, at their own homes or in public establishments?—Bordeaux possesses a Hospice de la Maternité, or Lying-in Hospital, and a society, founded by private benefactions, for the same purpose.

The Lying-in Hospital is an asylum in which any woman who presents herself in the ninth month of her pregnancy, whatever may be her state, her country or condition, is admitted without difficulty, without question or inquiry, under the name she pleases, and in such a manner, that the fear of being known or discovered may not prevent those who wish to remain unknown from benefiting by the institution.

If before the ninth month any woman should meet with an accident she is equally received.

Women admitted at the ninth month remain in the establishment till they have completely recovered their lying-in. Those admitted before this term on account of accidents, leave it as soon as the cause ceases.

The number of those women, either lying-in or subsisted in the hospital, varies from 35 to 60, and their stay is about 30 days. The births amount annually from 400 to 450; upon this number, 30 or 40 at most are kept and suckled by their mothers; the rest are abandoned and sent to the Foundling Hospital.

Among these inmates, about one-fifth is composed of married women, who have no means of being confined at home; two-fifths of young girls of the town, chiefly servants; the rest of peasants, who leave their homes in order not to be discovered.

The Société de Charité Maternelle (Charitable Maternal Society), is composed of the principal ladies of Bordeaux, of the chief functionaries, and of some charitable citizens.

This society collects annually about 34,000 francs (1,360 l.) The royal family, the department and the town, contribute one-fourth of this sum. Incomes bequeathed, or given, amounting to about 2,000 francs (80 l.); and gifts, subscriptions collected at religious ceremonies, &c. form the remainder.

In order to obtain admission, the mother must already have had two children; she can only be received at her third lying-in. She must be married. The request is made before the committee, attested by neighbours and inhabitants worthy of credit. When the admission is granted, the applicant receives on her lying-in, a complete layette (set of child's bed-clothes, &c.), 18 francs (14*s.* 5*d.*) for the expenses of the lying-in, and a cradle. She receives, during the whole year after her lying-in, five francs (4*s.*) a month. All this is distributed by ladies appointed for the purpose, and who overlook occasionally the mothers, to see they do their duty, that they bring up their own children, and that they do not take in another child to nurse. If the infant does not survive four months, the clothes, &c. are returned. The mothers are obliged to have their children vaccinated.

The society assists annually from 300 to 350 mothers.

This institution is of great utility, as it prevents many from exposing their children as foundlings.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—Mention has already been made of an hospital for venereal complaints. This establishment, which is under the direction of the town, is completely in the hands of the police. Persons of both sexes requiring treatment are admitted, on their request to the mayor; and the commissioners and sworn surgeons of the town-house send there, either forcibly or willingly, those public women, who, at the periodical visits to which they are subjected, are discovered to need the treatment.

Beyond the above-mentioned institutions, there exist no other, either public or private, for the sick.

CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations? 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards? 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—The French laws impose no explicit obligation on the fathers or mothers of illegitimate children. It is only after the death of the former that these children have any rights defined by the "Code Civil" as successors; and even then they must have been acknowledged, or must be able to prove who are their mothers, for the discovery of the fathers is forbidden.

Illegitimate children may be classed as follows:

Those born from concubinage. Those born from an accidental intercourse between the two sexes.

The first are generally brought up by their mothers, through the means afforded by the fathers.

The second, when the mother is unable to bring them up, either from want of means or her position in the world, and that the father does not contribute to their support, are deposited in the Foundling Hospital.

In short, generally, and in spite of the penal code which awards punishments to those who expose their children, the exposal in the boxes or wheel of the Foundling Hospital affords easy means to all who are either unable or unwilling to provide for their children.

It may be therefore safely said, that the care of illegitimate children not being forcibly at the charge of their fathers or mothers, falls on the State or the parishes.

Orphans, Foundlings, or Deserted Children whose Parents are known.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they taken into establishments for their reception?—Illegitimate children deserted by their parents, and which are deposited at the Foundling Hospital, are clothed and nourished by women in the institution, till a nurse out of it can be procured.

This clothing and nourishment are at the charge of the hospital, which provides for them by means of its own, augmented by the subsidy paid by the town.

When the children leave the establishment to go to nurse, the same administration superintends and provides for them by funds especially set apart for this purpose, and which proceed from three sources; viz.

1st. On the common fund of the departmental budget.

2d. On the supplementary funds, called Centimes Facultatifs, which are in the hands of the general council of the department.

3d and last, to complete it, on the revenues of the town and country parishes of the department.

These

These children, after being suckled, remain with their nurses till the age of 12 years. At this age, if the individuals who have brought them up do not wish to keep them gratuitously till their majority and give them a trade, they return to the hospital, and they then cease to be at the charge of the special funds. The establishment itself provides for their expenses; and until they can be placed as apprentices, they receive, in the Bordeaux hospital, the rudiments of reading and writing, and they are taught some trade.

Once placed as apprentices, they remain with the master till the age of 21, when they are to shift for themselves.

Those that cannot be placed, or are infirm, remain in the hospital, and form a sort of permanent population there.

Children whose parents are known, and who are living, but have either disappeared or are confined, are received in the same way as foundlings, the mode of admission differing only. This must be granted by the prefect after an inquest. For the remainder, they enjoy the same advantages as the foundlings.

As to orphans, they are also admitted into the Foundling Hospital, upon the order of the administrative commission, after information as to the state of the family. At Bordeaux the orphans of the town alone are received. Those of the rest of the department remain at the charge of their parishes, and generally live by alms. The orphans received into the hospital enjoy the same privileges as the foundlings and deserted children.

The legislative dispositions with regard to these three classes of children are established by a decree of 19th January 1811.

5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders? 6. Or boarded with individuals?—Children of these three classes are not billeted or quartered on householders, or boarded with individuals, in any other manner than above stated; that is, with the nurse till the age of 12, who receives a certain salary all that time; as apprentices after 12, and then gratuitously, and in virtue of a contract which binds the child to serve the master till the age of 21.

These two ways of disposing of these children arise from an engagement purely voluntary, as there is no obligation for the inhabitants to take charge of children coming under these classes.

7. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are relatives compelled to support them?—The father and mother alone, when they are known, are responsible for the maintenance of their children. But once in the Foundling Hospital, nothing is exacted except when the recognized parents wish to take out their children, and are able to reimburse the expenses to which the establishment has been put to on their account. The payment of these expenses is exacted before the children are given up.

It may be as well to finish these questions by a few statements.

The annual exposal of children amounts at Bordeaux to 900, comprising all those abandoned at the Lying-in-Hospital, those of the town, and those sent from various parts of the department, as well as from the neighbouring departments.

From 10 to 15 deserted children, and the same number of orphans, are annually admitted.

The population of the hospital amounts generally to 40 new-born infants, waiting to be sent to nurse; 150 children beginning their apprenticeships, and waiting to be placed; about 150 infirm of all ages forming the permanent part of the population.

The number of children from the age of one month to that of 12 years, amounts to 3,600; and that of children above 12 and below 21 apprenticed out, amounts to about 1,500.

The expenditure of the hospital, comprising the clothing for the children brought up out of the establishment, amounts to 110,000 francs per annum (4,400*l.*) That for the nurses or board in the country, to 240,000 francs (9,600*l.*), of which 104,000 fr. (4,160*l.*) is given by the government upon the common departmental fund.

27,000 fr. (1,080*l.*) taken from the revenue of the town of Bordeaux.

60,000 fr. (2,400*l.*) voted by the general council on the Centimes Facultatifs.

49,000 fr. (1,960*l.*) on the revenue of the other parishes of the department.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—There are at Bordeaux no other establishments of this nature, except that for the deaf and dumb.

This institution is at the expense of the government, and receives as boarders children of family, and gratuitously those belonging to indigent families. The regulations, &c. of this establishment are the same as those of the institution of the deaf and dumb in Paris.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals? 4. Or are their relatives compelled to support them?—There are no regulations of the kind alluded to in these questions existing in Bordeaux.

FRANCE.

Bordeaux.

1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there establishments for their reception?—The department of the Gironde possesses two institutions for the mad, one at Bordeaux, the other at Cadillac.

Both houses receive them as boarders and as indigents.

A third distinction may also be admitted; viz. the interdicted and non-interdicted.

Those interdicted are so by judgments of the tribunals, and these judicial acts suffice to authorize admission.

The non-interdicted can only be admitted on the authorization of the prefect, after an inquest proving that there is danger in leaving the individual at large. These admissions are only provisional, and are referred to the "Ministère Public," (king's attorney), in order that a permanent decree may be given.

2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?—There are no obligations of this nature.

4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?—The only relatives bound to provide for the mad, are the fathers and mothers, and the children, reciprocally.

Generally speaking, the family in which resides the mad person makes such sacrifices as will enable them to place such person in the madhouse.

Those only are admitted as boarders whose families can ensure the payment of an annual sum of 1,200 francs (48*l.*) at Bordeaux, and from 600 to 800 francs (24*l.* to 32*l.*) at Cadillac.

Gratuitous admissions are granted to all those whose indigence, or that of their relatives, prevent their being sent as boarders.

There is, however, an intermediate class for those whose relatives not being able to pay the sum required for admission as boarders, are still unwilling to leave them to public charity; these are admitted on paying a daily allowance of 1 fr. 40 c. per day (1*s.* 1½*d.*)

The number of mad in the Bordeaux hospital amounts to 165, of which 40 are boarders.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

Does the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appear to produce any, and what effect, 1st, On the industry of labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parents, children and other relatives?—Generally speaking, the receipt or the expectation of relief does not produce to any apparent degree the effects alluded to in these questions.

A few exceptions, however, may be made; such as, The relief or succour given to children brought up under the auspices of the hospitals;

The measures taken to propagate and encourage instruction among the indigent classes; And the relief afforded by the Society of Maternal Charity.

Under those heads a favourable influence on the indigent population may be remarked.

Children brought up to work imbibe a taste for it, and often become expert workmen. The rustic education they receive, the food to which they are accustomed, prepare them for becoming honest, industrious and frugal artisans.

The encouragement offered to married women adds an incentive to their maternal affection, and may, to a certain degree, favour marriage.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity? Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible?—In answering this question, it is necessary to distinguish the professed beggars of the lowest class from a certain class of mendicants who, reduced by circumstances, are forced to subsist on charity, each of this class having particular private families on whom they depend.

The condition of these beggars is generally, in a great town, better than that of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class; they are in the habit of dividing the town into separate divisions or beats, and generally collect daily more than the labourer is able to earn. By these means, not being under the necessity of working, they prefer their condition. But the professed street beggar, who is subject to confinement as a vagrant in the Depôt de Mendicité, or workhouses, is necessarily less well off than the labourer having employment.

Since the establishment of the Depôt de Mendicité in 1827, the number of professed mendicants has diminished from 700 to 800, to 150 to 200; and petty crimes, such as stealing in shops, &c., has decreased in the same proportion.

The subsistence sent to the dwellings (secours à domicile), can only be considered as a supplement to other resources, and would be very far from sufficient for the support of those assisted, and cannot therefore be counted as a daily and individual sufficiency.

It has been stated elsewhere, that nearly 9,600 individuals participate in these distributions, and that the annual expenditure amounts to about 100,000 fr. (4,000*l.*), so that each individual does not receive monthly above one franc (9½*d.*) in food or other assistance.

Owing to the want of population, and consequent scarcity of labourers, few beggars, except persons incapable of working, or vagrants, are to be found in the rural districts. The former are either supported partly by their families, or by the neighbouring proprietors.

These are the only two kinds of labourers employed in this department.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is general in the vine districts alone.
3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A common labourer alone earns yearly, all advantages included, 540 francs, (21 l. 12 s.). Owing to the scarcity of labourers, no distinction, as to wages, is made between an able-bodied and a common labourer.
4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—Owing to the extreme carelessness and entire absence of frugality, on the part of the peasantry and other classes of labourers, it is impossible to give an accurate account of their expenditure. They live entirely from hand to mouth; and nine-tenths are in debt for the common necessities of life. The men are addicted to gambling, and the women spend the greater part of what they earn in useless articles of dress. As to the expenditure for schooling and religious teaching, no provision is thought of.
5. Is there any, and what, employment for women and children?—Women and children are employed in out-of-doors labour, such as hoeing, &c. in the corn districts; binding the vines, &c. in the vine districts. The in-door employments of women are few, such as coarse knitting and spinning.
6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest; and how employed?—In corn districts women, or children under 16, can earn, harvest excepted,

What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively, (the eldest a boy) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A labourer's wife and four children can earn, by labour, about 300 francs, (12 l.) per annum; viz.

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children; and if so, on what food?—Certainly. The food varies in different districts. Throughout the district called Landes, (Heath) occupying about one-third of this department, the food consists in rye bread, soup made of millet, cakes made of Indian corn, now and then some salt provision and vegetables, rarely, if ever, butchers' meat; their drink, water, which, for the most part, is stagnant.

In the other parts of the department the peasantry live better. They eat wheaten bread, soup made with vegetables, and a little grease or lard twice a day, potatoes and other vegetables, but seldom butchers' meat; their drink is wine or piquette.

9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—It is certain that a family, composed as above, could lay something by from their gains at the end of the year, as the wants of the lower classes are much fewer than in England; in fact, the luxuries of tea, &c. are quite unknown. For the causes above alluded to few of the peasants have any surplus at the end of the year; on the contrary, they are mostly in debt. The few exceptions may, with proper care, always have 6*l.* to 8*l.* in advance; this is generally employed in the purchase of a little bit of land.

With respect to artisans, those of Bordeaux are chiefly coopers, masons and stone-cutters. Their wages average from 2 fr. 50 c. to 3 fr. per day, (2*s.* to 2*s.* 5*d.*)

The wages of other description of artisans average from 2 francs to 3 francs per day (1*s.* 7½*d.* to 2*s.* 5*d.*), according to their abilities.

Generally speaking, the same causes that prevent peasants from saving any thing prevail among the artisans. Those, however, who, through good management, succeed in having some advances at the end of the year, generally invest them in the savings bank.

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation, if belonging to the proprietor, is about half an acre. The quantity of land belonging to a labourer varies from 2 to 30 acres. From the division of property in France, a large estate soon becomes parcelled off into a quantity of small ones, so that the number of very small properties, varying from 2 to 30 acres, is very considerable. It is impossible to ascertain the exact proportion of land so occupied, but it is presumed to exceed greatly that of the large ones, except in the district of Médoc, where, from the high price of land, and the great expense attending the cultivation of the vine, the number of small properties is very inferior to that of the large ones, which are seldom subdivided, but are either sold by the heirs, or cultivated conjointly by them.

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—Either the labourer himself, or the proprietor, who employs the labourer on his property.

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—Labourers' habitations are never let; the person who employs the labourer is bound to find him lodging, except those who are employed by the day.

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—Land is never let to the labourer.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—In the department, 1 per 368.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—In the department, 1 per 395.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—In the department, 1 per 554.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—In the department, 3.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate children?—In the department, 18 per 1.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of the first year?—In the department, one-seventh.

20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—In the department, one-fourth.

21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—In the department, one-third.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—In the department, males, 25; females, 20.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—The principal, if not the only cause, that retards marriages among the labouring classes is the fear of the conscription, to which all are subject, except those morally or physically incapable of serving, the only sons of widows, &c. The want of means to support a family operates in some degree in preventing marriages, but, generally speaking, with the exception of the above causes, there are no other causes of hinderance or delays in marriage. In spite of this, few early marriages are contracted.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Few of the labouring classes have prudence enough to lay by anything. A single man, if so inclined, may lay by at the end of the year between 3*l.* and 4*l.*; and a married man, with four children, may lay by 4*l.* to 8*l.*

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—In the towns, their savings are generally put into the Caisse d'Epargnes, or savings bank; and in the rural districts, they are employed in the purchase of a bit of land, sometimes a cow, donkey or pig.

RAPPORT fait à L'Assemblée Générale de la Société pour l'Extinction de la Mendicite, dans la ville de Bordeaux.

Messieurs,

Séance du 29 Juin 1827.

CONFIANT dans les dispositions bienfaisantes des habitants de Bordeaux, je n'ai pas hésité à proposer l'exécution d'un plan qui avoit pour objet l'extinction de la mendicité. L'enfance, la vieillesse, tous les genres de maladies et d'infirmités, trouvoient dans des hospices dirigés avec les soins les plus éclairés et les plus soutenus, les secours qu'elles réclament. Un bureau de charité pourvoyoit aux besoins de cette portion de la société, si digne d'intérêt, que le malheur place entre de cruelles privations, et un sentiment de pudeur qui s'oppose à ce qu'elles soient révélées. Mais il restoit la classe, fort nombreuse en apparence, de ces êtres dégradés que l'habitude de la fainéantise, plus que des motifs réels, a poussés à la dernière misère, et conduits à baser sur la pitié publique, des moyens d'existence qu'ils n'avoient pas le courage de demander à une profession utile.

C'est cette tourbe d'individus entretenus dans l'oisiveté par l'aumône, dont il falloit utiliser les bras au profit de la société et au leur propre. C'est ce faste de mendicité, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi, permis, recommandé presque par l'esprit ingénieux de la charité chrétienne, qu'il s'agissoit d'attaquer. Je reconnus la nécessité, et j'étudiai les moyens de mettre un terme à un état de choses qui sembloit attirer sur l'administration le reproche de ne pas savoir donner une direction réfléchie aux ressources affectées sans discernement à cet objet.

On ne pouvoit douter qu'ici, comme partout, les sommes destinées aux pauvres ne fussent plus que suffisantes pour les soulager; mais une distribution mal entendue les prodiguoit à l'impudence, à la paresse importune, au détriment du malheur timide. Pour parvenir à réformer ces abus, on étoit obligé de porter atteinte, en apparence, au principe sacré de la charité; et c'est là qu'étoit la difficulté. On ne déracine pas plus aisément l'habitude de faire du bien, que celle d'en abuser. Il falloit donc ménager ceux qui donnent, non moins que ceux qui se font donner. Il falloit conserver aux uns leurs bonnes intentions et leur bienfaisance, tout en diminuant l'exigence et l'importunité des autres. Il falloit ajourner assez l'exécution du projet, pour que, dégagé de ce qui tendoit à ajouter à sa difficulté, et passé déjà, à l'aide d'un commencement de publicité, au creuset de l'opinion, ce projet pût paroître avec moins de défaveur; et cependant ne pas laisser à cette opinion, qui sembloit l'accueillir, le temps de céder à des influences contraires.

Je m'étois attaché à réduire graduellement le nombre des mendiants, en déployant une sévérité toujours croissante dans l'exécution des lois répressives de la mendicité. Les individus étrangers au département furent, les premiers, l'objet des mesures que j'avois prescrites. Renvoyés d'abord en liberté, puis sous l'escorte de la gendarmerie lorsqu'ils étoient repris, ils n'ont pas tardé à perdre l'habitude de venir lever une sorte de contribution sur un pays auquel ils n'appartenoient pas.

La même mesure fut ensuite appliquée aux mendiants des différents arrondissements qui composent le département. On éloigna ainsi de Bordeaux, point le plus recherché de cette classe d'individus, la presque totalité de ceux qui lui étoient étrangers; et bientôt il n'y resta que ceux que la ville avoit vu naître, ou à qui une résidence prolongée avoit donné une sorte d'indigenat. C'est seulement lorsque ce résultat fut obtenu, que je commençai l'exécution du plan que j'avois conçu.

Ma première démarche fut de consulter, et sur le fond et sur la forme, MM. les membres du bureau de charité, ceux de la commission des hospices, et quelques citoyens dont les dispositions m'étoient garanties par leurs habitudes de bienfaisance. Réunis en commission, ils voulurent bien m'aider des lumières que leur avoient procurées une étude persévérante du mal que je voulois détruire, et une longue et honorable pratique des moyens de le combattre. J'attendois beaucoup d'un tel concours: mes espérances furent dépassées; et le succès me parut assuré, lorsqu'au lieu de l'hésitation à laquelle il étoit naturel de s'attendre, je ne remarquai qu'un zèle disposé à surmonter tous les obstacles, une énergique volonté du bien, gage toujours certain de réussite, et cette résolution de ne tenir aucun compte des contrariétés, qui les domine et les fait même disparaître.

Si le mal est contagieux, le bien, dans certaines circonstances, ne l'est pas moins; celle dont il s'agit en fournit la preuve. A peine quelques idées vagues d'un établissement tendant à favoriser l'extinction de la mendicité à l'aide du travail qui seroit imposé aux mendiants, eurent-elles donné l'éveil à la charité, que les plus estimables citoyens sollicitèrent, comme une faveur, une part dans ce genre de bonne œuvre. Des offres d'argent, des offres non moins utiles de services, de conseils, de co-opération, me parvinrent de toutes parts. Ce fut de ce louable empressement que surgirent et un projet plus arrêté, et des idées plus mûries, et la création d'une société dont l'objet étoit de donner de la réalité à ce qui n'étoit encore qu'une pensée, et enfin l'organisation d'une commission, qui fut chargée d'imprimer une direction positive aux intentions charitables dont étoient animés les membres de la société générale*.

L'administration

* Cette commission, composée de sept membres, non compris le Préfet, président, Mgr. l'Archevêque et M. le Maire, présidents honoraires, fut choisie par la société générale, et investie de tous les pouvoirs qui lui étoient nécessaires pour atteindre le but que l'on se proposoit.

L'administration s'étoit assurée du nombre réel des individus dont on s'occupoit d'améliorer le sort. La liste en fut mise sous les yeux de la société. Ces mendiants, que l'on n'osoit énumérer, tant on craignoit d'en trouver la quantité hors de proportion avec les moyens de les secourir; ces mendiants, qui encombroient les avenues des édifices publics, et dont on étoit obsédé dans toutes les rues, dans toutes les promenades; ces mendiants patentés, que l'on ne devoit compter que par milliers, ne s'élevoient qu'à deux cent soixante-six. En portant leur nombre à trois cents, en admettant que, pour couvrir leurs dépenses journalières, on dût ajouter 50 cent. par individu au produit du travail que l'on en obtiendrait, on reconnut qu'une somme annuelle de 54,000 fr. seroit rigoureusement suffisante, et qu'en l'évaluant à 64,000 fr., on auroit la certitude de pourvoir à tous ses besoins (la dépense d'installation exceptée). La question ainsi simplifiée, sa solution ne fut plus douteuse, et on s'occupa de réaliser un projet dont le développement se présentait sous un aspect aussi favorable.

La commission arrêta qu'un appel seroit fait à la bienfaisance des habitants de Bordeaux, et qu'en même temps elle porteroit à leur connoissance le but qu'elle se proposoit d'atteindre, et les moyens qu'elle comptoit employer pour y parvenir. Un prospectus*, dans lequel on développoit les intentions de la société, fut publié; il produisit tout l'effet que l'on s'en étoit promis. De nombreuses, de riches souscriptions parvinrent à la commission, qui bientôt s'occupa d'organiser d'une manière plus régulière la réunion des offres qui étoient ou devoient être faites. Des commissaires, pris parmi les membres de la société générale, furent chargés de se présenter au domicile de chaque habitant, et de constater la somme pour laquelle il souscriroit. Les quartiers furent distribués, et en moins d'un mois, la souscription produisit une somme de 312,000 fr., acquittable en trois années†. Le recouvrement des sommes souscrites se fait par trimestre et par un procédé qui réunit le double avantage d'une grande économie dans les frais de perception, et d'une extrême simplicité dans la comptabilité.

Les premiers soins de la commission avoient été dirigés vers la rédaction d'un règlement destiné à devenir la base invariable de ses opérations‡. Elle se livra ensuite à la recherche d'un local propre à recevoir l'établissement. Un examen approfondi la détermina à fixer son choix sur un bâtiment situé en dehors, mais tout près des limites de la ville, dans une situation élevée, saine, et qui, au moyen de quelques changements et de quelques améliorations dans sa distribution, parut devoir offrir toutes les conditions désirables. La location en fut faite pour trois années et à des conditions assez avantageuses. On dut s'occuper immédiatement du soin de l'approprier à la destination qui lui étoit assignée. Des planchers furent construits, de manière à établir sur trois étages des salles de 27 mètres 50 centimètres de longueur, sur 9 mètres 72 centimètres de largeur et 3 mètres 30 centimètres de hauteur, dans lesquelles des croisées spacieuses et correspondant les unes aux autres, favorisent la circulation de l'air.

Le rez de chaussée, séparé dans le sens de sa longueur par une cloison, est destiné aux mendiants des deux sexes auxquels l'âge ou des infirmités rendroient impossible l'usage des étages supérieurs.

Le premier étage est affecté aux femmes et le second aux hommes valides. Deux cours distinctes, terminées par un double atelier, offrent aux individus des deux sexes des moyens de distraction et de travail, exempts d'inconvénients.

Quoique très-vaste, ce local, pour convenir à sa destination, commandoit une extrême économie dans la distribution des places. La commission a adopté un système de lits qui, relevés pendant le jour et appliqués les uns contre les autres, ont l'avantage de rendre disponible pour les repas et même pour le travail, une grande partie de l'espace qu'ils occupent pendant la nuit. C'est dans l'établissement, Messieurs, qu'il faut étudier ce que ce genre de lits présente de commode et de convenable sous une foule de rapports. Je crois devoir acquitter en cette circonstance, envers M. de Lagatinerie, commissaire de la marine à Bordeaux, l'un de vos collègues les plus zélés, le tribut de gratitude qu'inspire le service, qu'au milieu de beaucoup d'autres, il a rendu, en indiquant cette manière de coucher les mendiants§.

Les ressources dont votre commission peut disposer, dépasseront probablement les besoins auxquels elle devra faire face; mais l'étendue même de ces ressources, le généreux désintéressement avec lequel on les a offertes, entraînoient le devoir de les employer avec la plus grande réserve. Ce devoir a été rempli.

§ Ces lits, dont les fonds sont en corde, se composent d'un cadre de bois supportant une pailleasse, un traversin, deux draps et une couverture de laine. Ils procurent un coucher suffisamment doux et bien supérieur à celui dont les pauvres faisoient usage. Relevés le matin, dès que ceux qui les occupent les ont quittés, toutes les parties peuvent en être visitées et nettoyées; les matelas ou pailleasses sont remués et aérés, les planchers balayés, et rien de ce qui tient à la propreté ne sauroit échapper à l'examen des surveillants. La Journée sera donc de - - - f.										-	56 $\frac{1}{10}$

On fait observer que la dépense de la journée seroit bien moins considérable pour un plus grand nombre d'années, parce que l'acquisition des lits, et l'appropriation du local, qui s'élèvent à plus de 28,000 fr., ne devant pas se représenter, elle ne figureroit plus sur les dépenses à faire après la fin de la troisième année.

La dépense totale pour les trois cents pauvres seroit de 62,767 fr. 50 cent. par année.

Nous devons espérer que ce nombre de trois cents ne sera jamais dépassé. La commission a fait appeler devant elle les deux cent soixante-six individus qui jouissoient du triste privilège d'exercer la mendicité : elle les a interrogés sur leur origine, leur âge, leurs infirmités, la position de leurs familles, leurs besoins, leurs ressources ; et elle a consigné le résultat resultat de son enquête sur des états synoptiques, qui permettent de se fixer rapidement sur ce qui concerne chaque individu. Quatre-vingt-six, qui ont été reconnus ne pas appartenir à la ville de Bordeaux, ont été renvoyés et dirigés sur les localités où ils avoient leur dernier domicile.

On a transigé avec quelques autres, que des infirmités trop graves auroient rendus à charge à l'établissement, ou que recommandoit une position spéciale. Un sacrifice équivalent à peu près à la part pour laquelle ils auroient figuré dans la dépense s'ils avoient habité le dépôt, a laissé dans leurs familles, mais sous la condition qu'ils ne mendieroient pas, 91 pauvres, parmi lesquels on compte 15 aveugles.

Un respectable ecclésiastique a bien voulu se charger du service religieux, qui, au moyen de dispositions simples, sera exercé dans le grand atelier.

Les ministres des différents cultes seront appelés à la première demande que feront les indigents, et admis toutes les fois qu'ils jugeront convenable de se présenter.

Votre commission avoit formé le projet de confier les soins de l'administration intérieure à quelqu'un de ces ordres de pieuses filles, qui se vouent avec tant de zèle et de désintéressement au soulagement de l'humanité. Les conditions auxquelles étoit attachée la réalisation de ce désir, ne se sont pas trouvées en rapport avec les moyens dont elle pouvoit disposer et les règles qui la dirigent; et, quoiqu'avec peine, elle s'est vue dans la nécessité d'adopter d'autres mesures. Jusqu'à présent le succès est tel, qu'il ne lui reste d'autre regret que de devoir à d'autres qu'à ces anges de charité, l'amélioration du sort de la classe dont les intérêts l'occupent. Les secours religieux, les soins temporels, sont administrés avec une régularité un à-propos, qui, dès ce moment, ne laissent rien d'essentiel à désirer, et qui ne peuvent que se perfectionner, lorsque la pratique aura révélé les moyens de faire mieux.

Dix-sept médecins avoient offert leurs soins gratuits. Ces messieurs ont jugé que leur nombre pourroit nuire à la régularité du service, et ils ont résolu de le réduire à quatre; mais comme aucun d'eux ne vouloit renoncer à l'honorable prérogative à laquelle son dévouement lui donnoit des droits, c'est au sort que l'on a confié le soin de désigner ceux qui seroient chargés d'acquitter la dette de tous. Le hasard qui, dans cette circonstance, ne pouvoit amener que des choix heureux, a désigné MM. Grateloup, Caussade, Bancal et Boucher de Vitray. Avant de se séparer, MM. les médecins ont arrêté les bases d'un travail rempli des vues les plus élevées, sur les moyens qu'il convient d'employer pour entretenir la santé des individus que renferme l'établissement. Je saisis l'occasion qui se présente, de leur offrir l'expression de la gratitude qu'inspire à la commission le zèle dont ils ont donné des preuves.

Des marchés passés avec des fournisseurs, par voie de soumissions cachetées, ont produit une grande économie dans les diverses dépenses auxquelles on avoit à pourvoir.

Un portion de nourriture	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	26 $\frac{1}{2}$

La nourriture de chaque individu devoit se composer de vingt-quatre onces de pain et vingt-quatre onces d'une soupe faite avec du riz, du pain, des légumes secs ou frais, de la graisse ou du beurre.

Il a été reconnu que cette quantité excédoit les besoins; elle a été réduite d'un tiers; et l'économie qui en résulte a été convertie en une distribution d'un quart de litre de vin par jour, et d'un sixième de kilogramme de viande trois fois par semaine. Ainsi réglée, la ration complète coûte 26 cent. $\frac{1}{2}$.

La commission a cru devoir autoriser le directeur à suppléer, par une distribution particulière de pain, à l'insuffisance de la ration, lorsque la nécessité lui en seroit démontrée. Cette faculté, connue des pauvres, paroît les satisfaire, et un très-petit nombre d'entr'eux en a usé.

La commission doit à la société générale qui l'a investie de sa confiance, elle se doit à elle-même de rendre un compte détaillé de l'emploi des sommes mises à sa disposition. Chaque année, dans le courant du mois de Février, ce compte vous sera soumis, et il sera imprimé. Sa publicité préviendra une sorte de laissé aller, une trop grande disposition à un excès de confiance, qui ne seroient pas sans inconvénients.

Le travail des pauvres, borné jusqu'à ce moment à la conversion des vieux cordages en étoupes destinées au calfatage des navires, a produit une somme bien faible ; mais que l'on a l'espoir de voir s'accroître par suite de l'habitude de ce genre de travail, que contracteront des ouvriers qui lui étoient étrangers comme à quelque occupation que ce fût.

La commission cherche, en outre, à établir d'autres branches d'industrie, telles que la filature du chanvre, de la laine et du lin, le tissage d'étoffes communes, la fabrication de filets de pêche, de paniers, etc. ; mais elle ne se dissimule pas que le produit en sera toujours fort restreint. Qu'attendre, en effet, de ces bras la plupart octogénaires, surtout lorsque l'on songe qu'engourdis par la fainéantise, ils ne se sont guère exercés qu'à s'étendre, pour provoquer et recevoir des aumônes ? Il faut donc des travaux bien simples, qui n'exigent ni pratique antérieure, ni réflexion, ni combinaison d'idées, ni emploi de forces. Or, de tels travaux seront peu lucratifs ; mais il n'est pas moins nécessaire, indispensable même d'en établir et d'en faire une obligation.

Les pauvres les plus valides seront employés à la réparation des chemins, et au balayage des rues, pour lequel la commission se propose de traiter, soit avec l'administration municipale, soit avec les particuliers.

Le bienfait auquel vous avez concouru, Messieurs, par des sacrifices de tous genres et par votre exemple, ne peut être bien apprécié qu'en comparant la situation passée des infortunés qui ont été l'objet de votre sollicitude, avec leur situation présente. Pour la faire cette comparaison, c'est dans les habitations malsaines, où ils languissoient en proie à toutes les souffrances, rongés par tous les genres d'insectes, respirant un air infecté par la malpropreté la plus dégoûtante ; c'est dans ces lieux, où plusieurs d'entre vous, et notamment votre honorable vice-président, ont été étudier la misère dans ce qu'elle a d'idéal, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi ; c'est là, dis-je, qu'il falloit avoir le courage de se transporter pour connaître dans toute son étendue et dans ses affligeants détails l'affreuse existence à laquelle ces malheureux étoient condamnés ; c'est là qu'on les trouvoit entassés par bandes de quatre, de six, de huit, dans des espèces de huttes toute au rez de chaussée, toutes sans autre plancher qu'une terre humide, toutes au-dessous d'un sol que le dépôt sans cesse renouvelé des plus sales immondices, tendoit à élever au-dessus du seuil de ces misérables demeures ; c'est là qu'ils se partageoient, que souvent ils se disputoient un grabat à peine recouvert d'une paille rarement renouvelée ; c'est là que, passant de l'excès de la profusion à celui de la privation, selon que les circonstances avoient bien ou mal servi leur déplorable industrie, ils dissipoient sans prévoyance le produit d'un gain obtenu sans travail, ou qu'ils souffroient toutes les angoisses du besoin présent et des craintes de l'avenir. Tels sont les êtres que votre bienfaisance a secourus. Comparez les tristes habitations d'où vous les avez tirés, à l'asile que votre charité leur ouvre ; voyez-les dégagés des haillons empestés qui les couvroient à peine ; soumis, à leur entrée dans l'établissement, à des mesures de propreté, condition première d'une bonne hygiène ; vêtus d'habits convenables ; assurés d'une nourriture saine, abondante, appropriée à leur âge ; trouvant dans le salaire du travail modéré dont on leur impose l'obligation, les moyens de satisfaire à quelques besoins que vous n'avez pas dû comprendre dans ceux auxquels vous vous êtes engagés à pourvoir, à quelques fantaisies mêmes que leur date reculée a élevées au rang des nécessités ; et dites si ces pauvres, objet de votre pieux intérêt, ne sont pas plus heureux qu'ils n'étoient ; dites si les sacrifices que vous avez provoqués, si ceux que vous vous êtes imposés, n'ont pas eu le résultat qui vous étoit promis ; et après avoir comparé ces sacrifices avec ceux que vous arrachoit l'importunité des mendiants, dites si, en ne tenant pas compte du bien que vous avez fait, il ne résulte pas quelque économie du nouveau mode d'aumône que vous avez adopté.

Ainsi, Messieurs, vous avez résolu ce problème de l'extinction de la mendicité, qui se présente, à la pensée du grand nombre, entouré de difficultés telles que l'on en considéroit la recherche comme une sorte d'amusement de l'esprit, mais non comme un objet dont on pût sérieusement s'occuper. La plus grande de ces difficultés consistait à réunir un nombre suffisant de citoyens animés de la volonté ferme et persévérante d'atteindre le but qui leur étoit proposé. Ces citoyens, et, je dois le proclamer à la gloire de cette ville généreuse, ces citoyens se sont présentés dans toutes les classes, dans toutes les religions, dans tous les quartiers. Le choix des membres de votre commission n'a été le résultat d'aucune combinaison ; et ces membres justifient par un zèle qui se retrouve dans tous les moments, qui s'applique à toutes les circonstances, la confiance que vous leur avez accordée. Ils ne m'en voudront pas, Messieurs, si, parmi eux, je cite d'une manière plus spéciale M. le marquis de Bryas, vice-président, qui, chargé des nombreux et pénibles détails de la formation de l'établissement, a consacré ses soins avec une ardeur, une assiduité, un dévouement auxquels nous reconnaissons tous qu'appartient la plus grande part du succès que nous avons obtenu.

D'importants travaux avoient classé M. Durand parmi les architectes les plus distingués de Bordeaux : les soins assidus et désintéressés qu'il a donnés aux minutieuses réparations du local destiné au dépôt, le rangent parmi les citoyens qui ont le plus activement favorisé le succès de vos soins.

M. Maillères, dont le nom s'associe à presque toutes les administrations de bienfaisance de Bordeaux, a réuni ses efforts à ceux de son digne collègue, et, comme lui, il a les droits les mieux acquis à notre gratitude.

M. Sarget, dans les fonctions d'ordonnateur général ; MM. Journu, Portal, Fabre et Blanc-Dutrouilh, ont donné et donnent constamment des preuves d'un zèle souvent invoqué et toujours empressé de répondre à l'appel qui lui est fait.

L'administration intérieure de l'établissement est dirigée avec autant de talent que de douceur et de fermeté par M. Auguste, et la répression de la mendicité à l'extérieur est confiée au au sieur Fernandez, qui justifie, par son activité, le choix qui a été fait de lui pour les fonctions d'inspecteur.

J'ai dû signaler, Messieurs, ceux d'entre vous qui se sont plus particulièrement distingués par les services qu'ils ont rendus : mais leurs efforts eussent été sans résultat, si les membres de la Société générale, les commissaires chargés de recueillir des souscriptions, et la presque totalité des habitants de Bordeaux, n'avoient, par leur empressement à favoriser la réalisation de vos vues, fait disparaître jusqu'aux moindres difficultés. L'exemple devoit être et a été donné par l'honorable magistrat à qui est confié le soin d'administrer notre ville. Son éloge étant dans le bien qu'il fait ou qu'il encourage, je me bornerai à dire qu'il a obéi à la noble impulsion de son cœur et à son habitude la plus familière, en aidant de son concours l'exécution des mesures proposées par la commission.

Vous vous étonnez, Messieurs, de n'avoir pas encore entendu citer le nom du prélat que la Providence du monde, que celle de la France ont appelé parmi nous : mais ce nom ne se place-t-il pas de droit là où se fait une bonne œuvre ? Mgr. l'Archevêque ne devoit-il pas présider à une solennité qui a pour objet d'ouvrir et de consacrer un asile à l'indigence ?

Il est au milieu de vous, Messieurs ; il y est, entouré d'infortunés, son cortège de prédilection, seule pompe qui soit digne de lui, la seule aussi que ne condamne pas la religion consolante, dans laquelle son éloquence puise de saintes inspirations, et sa vertu d'innombrables bienfaits ; il y est, et sa bénédiction va donner un caractère sacré au bien opéré par votre zèle, en descendant à la fois sur vous et sur le malheur que vous avez noblement secouru.

Ma tâche est remplie, Messieurs ; je vous ai rendu compte du bien que vous avez fait, et des moyens employés pour l'obtenir ; je vous ai signalé les citoyens auxquels vous êtes principalement redevables du succès de vos efforts et de vos sacrifices. Désormais votre ville aura la gloire, encore unique en France, d'être délivrée du spectacle affligeant de ces malheureux, dont toute l'industrie consiste à étaler et à exagérer ce que l'aspect de la misère a de plus hideux et de plus révoltant ; et cette gloire, elle en jouira avec d'autant plus de confiance, qu'elle aura la certitude que la classe objet de vos soins charitables sait apprécier dans toute son étendue le bienfait qu'elle doit à votre généreuse sollicitude.

APPENDICE.

No. 1.—SOCIÉTÉ pour l'extinction de la Mendicité dans le Département de la Gironde.

PLUSIEURS citoyens, animés du désir de faire disparaître de Bordeaux ces bandes de mendiants qui encombrant les rues et les abords des principaux lieux publics, se sont, de l'aveu et avec le concours des premiers magistrats du département et de la ville, livrés à la recherche des moyens d'atteindre le but qu'ils se proposent. Ils ont arrêté qu'un appel seroit fait à la bienfaisance des habitants de Bordeaux, dans la vue de former un établissement destiné à procurer aux mendiants du travail et toutes les ressources nécessaires à leur existence.

L'établissement que l'on a le projet de former n'a aucune analogie avec les dépôts de mendicité, abandonnés peu d'années après leur création, et que l'action unique d'une autorité absolue dirigeoit, sans égard pour les garanties de la liberté individuelle. Dans l'institution proposée, cet ordre de choses, incompatible avec les lois paternelles qui régissent la France, est écarté. Un asile sera ouvert à l'indigence ; du travail lui sera offert ; mais nulle contrainte ne sera exercée à l'égard des individus auxquels ce double genre de secours est destiné.

L'autorité administrative a contracté l'engagement d'user du droit qu'elle a de faire cesser la mendicité, le jour où des moyens convenables d'existence seront offerts aux mendiants valides ou invalides, en échange de la honteuse industrie qu'ils exercent. Cette condition sera remplie par la création d'un établissement où chaque sexe, chaque âge, chaque infirmité même, trouveront un travail approprié à leurs facultés et à leur aptitude, et une nourriture saine et abondante, qui sera distribuée au prix rigoureusement nécessaire pour en couvrir la valeur.

Des mesures seront prises pour qu'il soit pourvu aux besoins que le produit du travail ne pourroit satisfaire.

Ainsi, la classe des mendiants verra son sort amélioré par une institution qui délivrera la société de la pénible alternative, ou de laisser sans secours des pauvres vraiment dignes de compassion, ou de répandre, sans discernement, des aumônes, arrachées par l'importunité, et rarement accordées au malheur réel.

On ne peut nier que, dans l'état actuel des choses, les mendiants vivent ; que quelques-uns même vivent dans une sorte de profusion ; que tous vivent dans l'oisiveté ; qu'en leur continuant les aumônes qu'on leur fait, qu'en réglant l'emploi de ces aumônes, qu'en faisant du travail une condition obligée des secours, on aura des ressources équivalentes aux besoins ; on en fera une répartition plus égale ; on économisera, au profit des pauvres, le temps qu'ils ne comptent pour rien ; que sans ajouter aux sacrifices, on les ramènera à la pratique et à l'esprit de la religion, sans laquelle il n'existe pas de morale, et à des habitudes plus conformes aux intérêts de la société et aux leurs propres ; que conséquemment tout se réunit pour porter jusqu'à l'évidence les avantages que promet une institution dont le but est l'extinction de la mendicité. Mais ces avantages ne peuvent être obtenus qu'au prix d'avances assez considérables, puisqu'il s'agit de pourvoir à la dépense de création de l'établissement et à celle d'entretien des mendiants. C'est de la bienfaisance naturelle aux habitants de Bordeaux, que l'on attend les ressources nécessaires. On a la certitude que chaque famille, chaque individu, s'empresseront de remettre à une société dont la composition mérite quelque confiance, les sommes consacrées à ces œuvres de bienfaisance qu'excite et détermine l'aspect d'un malheureux ; que les habitants aisés ajouteront à ces sommes un excédant destiné à couvrir les premières dépenses, et qu'il résultera de ces libéralités une somme suffisante pour faire face à tous les frais.

Afin de donner aux personnes qui dirigeront leur charité vers ce genre de bonne œuvre, la garantie ou que le but indiqué sera atteint, ou que l'engagement contracté cessera d'exister, les sommes souscrites annuellement ne seront perçues que par quart, et avec la condition que le recouvrement n'en sera pas opéré, si la mendicité n'est pas réprimée dans son sens le plus absolu.

La société pour l'extinction de la mendicité s'adresse donc avec confiance aux habitants de Bordeaux, et elle espère qu'ils n'hésiteront pas à lui fournir les moyens qui lui sont indispensables pour réaliser une institution réclamée par l'intérêt général. En conséquence elle arrête ce qui suit :

1°. Une maison de travail et de secours pour les mendiants sera établie à Bordeaux. A cet effet, un local sera loué au nom et pour le compte de la société.

2°. Les mendiants trouveront dans cette maison un travail approprié à leur aptitude et une nourriture saine.

3°. Le prix de la nourriture sera prélevé sur le salaire du travail de chaque individu.

4°. En cas d'insuffisance ou de nullité du travail, il sera pourvu par la société aux besoins de tous genres en nourriture, habillement, logement, etc., que le produit du travail n'aurait pu couvrir.

5°. L'établissement sera disposé de manière à recevoir trois cents mendiants, nombre supérieur à celui que, d'après des données officielles, présente en ce moment la ville Bordeaux.

Dans le cas où, par des circonstances extraordinaires, ce nombre viendrait à s'accroître, la société se réserve la faculté de pourvoir à leur entretien actuel, autant que ses moyens lui permettront de le faire.

6°. Afin de pourvoir à la dépense que l'établissement entraînera, il sera ouvert une souscription à laquelle les citoyens de toutes les classes seront invités à participer.

L'établissement étant formé pour une durée de trois années, il est à désirer que les souscriptions concordent avec cette période de temps ; néanmoins les souscripteurs auront la faculté de ne souscrire que pour une ou deux années.

7°. La souscription ne sera obligatoire ni pour les héritiers des souscripteurs, ni pour les souscripteurs qui cesseroient d'habiter Bordeaux, ni pour ceux que des causes valables forceroient à renoncer à l'exécution de leurs engagements.

8°. Le produit de la souscription sera recueilli par des membres de la société.

9°. Le compte des recettes et des dépenses sera imprimé et publié chaque année.

10°. Le montant annuel sera perçu par quart, et la perception n'aura lieu que dans l'hypothèse où elle s'élèverait assez pour couvrir la dépense de création et d'entretien de l'établissement. Elle cessera de droit, si le but que l'on se propose n'est pas atteint.

No. 2.—SOUSCRIPTION pour l'Extinction de la Mendicité à Bordeaux.

AFIN de pourvoir à la création d'un établissement destiné à procurer aux mendiants du travail et tous les genres de secours que réclamera leur position, je déclare m'engager à acquitter annuellement, pendant _____ années de suite, la somme de _____ dont la perception devra avoir lieu par quart, et de trois mois en trois mois.

Bordeaux, le _____

No. 3.—SOCIÉTÉ pour l'Extinction de la Mendicité dans Bordeaux.

STATUTS ET RÈGLEMENTS GÉNÉRAUX.

L'OBJET que se propose la Société pour l'extinction de la Mendicité, est de supprimer la mendicité dans la ville de Bordeaux, en procurant du travail et des secours aux mendiants de la ville actuellement existants et aux individus natifs de Bordeaux, ou qui du moins y ont acquis un domicile légal, auxquels le malheur de leur situation ne laisserait à l'avenir aucun autre moyen d'existence que la mendicité.

TITRE PREMIER.

Art. 1. Pour atteindre ce but, il sera formé un établissement suffisant pour servir d'atelier de travail et de maison de refuge à trois cents individus, nombre que des documents officiels démontrent être supérieur au nombre habituel des mendiants à Bordeaux. Les sexes y seront séparés. Les enfants mâles au-dessous de sept ans seront placés dans le local des femmes.

Art. 2. Il sera également pourvu par la Société, dans la maison de travail ou dans des locaux aussi rapprochés que possible, au logement des mendiants.

Art. 3. Les mendiants qui auroient une famille résidant à Bordeaux, ou un domicile fixe et connu où ils pourroient continuer à loger, pourront être autorisés à se retirer dans leur domicile ; dans ce cas, il leur sera alloué une indemnité.

Art. 4. La Société pourvoira à la nourriture, et, autant que de besoin, à l'habillement des mendiants.

Art. 5. La nourriture sera saine et suffisante ; un règlement particulier fixera de quoi elle se composera chacun des jours de la semaine, pour les individus en état de santé et pour ceux en état d'infirmité. On prendra pour base de cette fixation, les expériences faites dans les maisons de dépôt nationales et étrangères.

Art. 6. La maison de travail et de refuge n'étant pas un hôpital, et ne devant jamais le devenir, des mesures seront prises avec MM. les Administrateurs des hôpitaux existants, pour que les individus dépendant de l'établissement que seroient admis malades, ou qui le deviendroient, reçoivent dans les hôpitaux les secours et les soins que réclame leur état.

Art. 7. Le travail des individus capables d'une occupation quelconque, proportionnée à leur âge, à leur sexe et à leur force, est considéré comme condition essentielle des secours accordés. Ce travail sera rétribué suivant sa valeur ; il donnera lieu à un salaire. Le mendiant aura droit à la moitié de ce salaire ; le décompte en sera arrêté chaque semaine ; l'autre moitié sera retenue au profit de l'établissement, comme indemnité des frais de nourriture, etc.

Art. 8. Tout mendiant qui sera reconnu impropre au travail, recevra, indépendamment de la nourriture, une indemnité en argent qui sera ultérieurement déterminée.

Art. 9. —

Bordeaux.

Art. 9. Des récompenses seront accordées, chaque semaine, à celui des travailleurs qui se sera distingué par son activité dans son travail et sa bonne conduite.

Art. 10. L'individu valide qui refuseroit le travail pendant plus de quinze jours, sera chassé de la maison.

Art. 11. Les peines déterminées par les lois seront provoquées contre les individus qui trouble- roient l'ordre dans l'établissement, ou s'y rendroient coupables de quelques délits.

Art. 12. Les mendiants devront représenter, à la première injonction qui leur en sera faite, les vêtements, les objets de travail, les outils et les différents effets qui leur auront été confiés.

Art. 13. Dans le cas d'impossibilité de leur part de les représenter, ils seront exclus de la maison, sans préjudice de l'action réservée contr'eux, comme coupables de détournement d'effets.

Art. 14. Toutes les fournitures relatives à l'établissement seront faites par voie d'adjudication ; néanmoins, après délibération de la commission administrative, prise sur le rapport d'un de ses mem- bres, à la majorité des voix, et démontrant l'avantage qui en résulteroit pour l'établissement, les fournitures pourront être faites par économie. Une délibération spéciale devra avoir lieu pour cha- cun des articles à fournir par cette dernière méthode.

Art. 15. L'établissement sera placé sous la surveillance d'une commission administrative.

Art. 16. Il sera immédiatement dirigé par un employé ayant le titre de Directeur.

Art. 17. Les mendiants du culte catholique assisteront les dimanches et les fêtes au service divin, dans une chapelle qui sera construite à cet effet. Les secours et les consolations de la religion leur seront administrés par un aumônier.

Art. 18. Les individus des autres cultes seront assistés par leurs ministres respectifs, qui seront appelés d'office, ou admis sur la demande qu'ils en formeront. Ils seront conduits aux jours de fêtes dans les temples des cultes auxquels ils seront attachés.

Art. 19. Il sera pourvu à l'éducation des enfants des mendiants par des moyens qui seront ulté- rieurement déterminés.

TITRE II. Comptabilité.

Art. 20. Le mode des écritures pour la comptabilité sera réglé par la commission adminis- trative.

Art. 21. Les recettes et les paiements se feront par un directeur-trésorier, qui sera chargé égale- ment de surveiller l'ensemble et les détails de l'établissement, de défendre ses intérêts, d'y maintenir l'ordre et de proposer les dépenses à la commission administrative.

Art. 22. Les dépenses ne seront acquittées que sur l'ordonnance qui en sera faite par un des mem- bres de la commission, qui aura le titre d'Ordonnateur Général.

Art. 23. Le directeur-trésorier devra fournir un cautionnement de 3,000 fr., soit en immeubles, soit en argent, ou en rentes cinq pour cent consolidés, soit enfin par la garantie qu'il présenteroit d'un capitaliste ou propriétaire agréé par la commission.

Art. 24. Les fonds touchés par le trésorier devront être versés, au fur et à mesure de leur recou- vrement, dans la caisse de la banque, à l'exception d'une somme destinée à pourvoir aux besoins courants, et dont la quotité sera déterminée par la commission.

Art. 25. Afin d'assurer d'une manière positive l'exécution des mesures qui seront prises pour la répression de la mendicité, il sera établi un agent qui, indépendamment de la surveillance générale que M. le Maire sera invité à faire exercer par tous les officiers de police de la ville, sera spéciale- ment chargé de cette branche de police. M. le Maire sera invité de lui conférer le titre d'Agent de Police.

Art. 26. Le traitement de cet agent sera à la charge de la Société.

Art. 27. Toutes les fonctions administratives de l'établissement, autres que celles du directeur- trésorier, de l'inspecteur et de leurs subordonnés, sont essentiellement gratuites.

Art. 28. Les traitements seront fixés ultérieurement par la commission.

Art. 29. L'excédant des recettes sur les dépenses formera une réserve destinée à la dotation de l'établissement.

TITRE III. Mode d'Admission.

Art. 30. Seront admis dans l'établissement, les individus qui sont actuellement porteurs d'une autorisation de M. le Maire pour mendier.

Art. 31. A l'avenir, pour être admis, les mendiants produiront les pièces suivantes :

1°. Un certificat de M. le Maire, constatant l'état d'indigence absolue, la profession habituelle et le degré de moralité de l'individu ;

2°. Son acte de naissance ;

3°. Un autre certificat constatant, s'il n'est pas natif de Bordeaux, son domicile légal dans la ville ;

4°. Une attestation des curés ou ministres dans les paroisses desquels il a résidé.

Art. 32. La commission aura, nonobstant la présentation de ces pièces, la faculté de refuser l'admission, soit d'après les documents sur les moyens d'existence du réclamant, qui lui auront été fournis par les membres de la Société, soit d'après la situation de l'établissement. Cette faculté ne pourra néanmoins être exercée qu'avec la forme suivante :

Quatre voix sur neuf, ou trois voix sur sept, suffiront pour l'admission ; il faudra six voix sur neuf, ou cinq voix sur sept, pour le rejet.

Art. 33. L'établissement, formé d'après les bases ci-dessus posées, remplissant les conditions d'établissement public organisé afin d'obvier à la mendicité, l'application des peines prescrites par l'art. 274 du code pénal, pourra être réclamée contre les individus mendiant dans le territoire de la commune, et dès-lors il sera permis d'espérer que l'on ne rencontrera plus à Bordeaux de pauvres demandant l'aumône.

Art. 34. Les moyens d'exécution seront fournis, 1° par les souscriptions volontaires des socié- taires ; 2° par la retenue sur le salaire du travail effectué dans les ateliers.

TITRE IV. Conseil Général de la Société.

Art. 35. La Société pour la répression de la Mendicité, se compose de tous les souscripteurs qui ont fourni ou qui fourniront des fonds pour l'entretien du dépôt de mendicité.

Art. 36. La Société se réunit en conseil général, composé de cent de ses membres, le 1^{er} Mai et le 1^{er} Decembre de chaque année.

Art. 37. Sont membres de ce conseil, les fondateurs de la Société, ceux des premiers souscripteurs qui auront efficacement concouru à recueillir les souscriptions; enfin, les souscripteurs qui auront donné les plus fortes sommes, sans que cependant le nombre total du conseil général puisse, dans aucun cas, excéder celui de cent.

Art. 38. En cas de démission ou de décès, ils seront remplacés par ceux des membres de la Société qui auront souscrit pour les plus fortes sommes.

Art. 39. M. le Préfet est président; Mgr. l'Archevêque et M. le Maire de Bordeaux sont présidents honoraires, de droit, du conseil général.

Art. 40. Le conseil général pourra être convoqué extraordinairement par M. le président, toutes les fois que les circonstances paroîtront l'exiger.

Art. 41. Dans sa réunion du mois de Février, le conseil général entend les comptes qui lui sont rendus au nom de la commission administrative. Ces comptes seront de deux sortes: 1°. compte moral de l'établissement; 2°. compte de recette et de dépense.

Ces comptes seront rendus publics.

TITRE V. Commission Administrative.

Art. 42. La commission administrative se compose de Mgr. l'Archevêque de Bordeaux, de M. le Préfet et de M. le Maire, qui en sont les présidents, et de sept autres membres élus par le conseil général.

Art. 43. Les fonctions de membres de la commission dureront sept ans; ils seront renouvelés par septième chaque année.

Art. 44. Le membre sortant sera indiqué par le sort les premières années, ensuite par rang d'ancienneté; il sera remplacé par les membres restants.

Art. 45. Les membres de la commission sont rééligibles.

Art. 46. La commission nomme parmi ses membres, à la pluralité absolue, un vice-président et un secrétaire. Le bureau se renouvellera chaque année.

Art. 47. La commission se réunit de droit, et sans qu'il soit besoin de convocation, le vendredi de chaque semaine, à deux heures après-midi; elle peut être réunie extraordinairement, sur la convocation de l'un de ses présidents ou de son vice-président.

Art. 48. Un des membres de la commission administrative est de service, chaque semaine, pour la surveillance de l'établissement.

Art. 49. Le tour de service des membres de la commission sera, pour la première fois, déterminé par le sort.

Art. 50. La commission administrative arrêtera les règlements intérieurs nécessaires pour la discipline de l'établissement; elle passera tous les marchés tant pour l'appropriation de son local, que pour l'achat de l'ameublement, des matières premières et des outils, et pour la nourriture, le vestiaire et la literie des mendiants; elle pourvoira à la vente des objets confectionnés dans les ateliers; enfin, elle exercera, relativement au dépôt de mendicité, les mêmes attributions que la commission administrative des hospices exerce sur les maisons confiées à ses soins.

Art. 51. La commission administrative pourra apporter aux présents statuts et règlement toutes les modifications dont l'expérience lui auroit fait connoître la nécessité.

Art. 52. Les délibérations de la commission administrative seront inscrites sur un registre, et signées par le président et par le secrétaire.

Art. 53. Le secrétaire certifiera la conformité des extraits des délibérations.

Bordeaux.

A sept heures et demie, l'arrangement des lits.

A huit heures, le coucher.

Le pauvre, malade, attendra au pied de son lit la visite du médecin.

M. le directeur accompagnera le médecin, ainsi que le chirurgien chargé des pansements, et les deux pauvres chargées de préparer les tisanes.

Le directeur veillera à ce que les prescriptions ordonnées par M. le médecin de service soient exécutées.

Le directeur assistera à toutes les distributions.

Les pauvres ne pourront se coucher pendant le jour, si le médecin ne l'a point prescrit.

Il est expressément défendu de fumer dans les salles ou dans les ateliers.

Les surveillants seront responsables de l'exécution du règlement: ils prendront en compte les effets mobiliers qui se trouveront placés dans leurs salles respectives, et en rendront compte au directeur.

Dans chaque salle, on désignera, à tour de rôle, des pauvres qui seront chargés de balayer l'établissement.

Les chemises seront changées tous les samedis matin.

Les draps de lit, tous les mois.

Les paillasses seront lavées et remplies lorsque le besoin l'exigera.

Les couvertures de laine, les draps de lit, seront mis à l'air et battus chaque semaine.

Le service du perruquier commencera le vendredi, et sera terminé le samedi, avant quatre heures.

M. le directeur accordera des permissions de sortie aux pauvres de l'établissement; elles seront demandées la veille, et délivrées après la distribution du pain. Dans tous les cas, ils devront être rentrés au dépôt avant trois heures du soir.

Le même pauvre ne pourra obtenir plus de deux permissions par mois.

Aucun individu ou employé ne pourra entrer dans la cuisine sans l'ordre du directeur.

MM. les employés des bureaux devront être rendus au dépôt à huit heures du matin l'été, et à neuf heures pendant l'hiver.

A tour de rôle, un employé restera au bureau jusqu'à sept heures du soir. Le dimanche, un employé sera de service à l'établissement jusqu'à cinq heures du soir.

Le portier, dans aucun cas, ne pourra s'absenter de sa loge; il inscrira sur son livre tout ce qui entrera et sortira de l'établissement.

Le directeur est spécialement chargé et responsable de l'exécution du règlement.

Un extrait en sera délivré à tous les employés du dépôt de mendicité.

La commission a décidé que les dimanches et fêtes le dépôt de mendicité seroit fermé, et que le public n'en auroit pas l'entrée.

Le présent règlement a été approuvé par délibération de la commission administrative.

MAIRE DE LA VILLE DE BORDEAUX.

No. 5.—EXTRAIT du Registre des Arrêtés du Maire de la Ville de Bordeaux.

Du 11 Avril 1827.

LE Maire de la ville de Bordeaux, officier de l'ordre royal de la légion d'honneur, gentilhomme de la chambre du roi,

Vu l'avis qui lui a été donné, qu'une Société se proposoit de former un établissement destiné à obvier à la mendicité dans la ville de Bordeaux;

Vu un autre avis portant que cette Société a réuni, au moyen d'une souscription, une somme suffisante pour assurer pendant trois années des secours en travail, nourriture, vêtements et logement, à trois cents pauvres, nombre auquel peut être approximativement évalué celui des mendiants; qu'un local destiné à les recevoir a été loué et approprié à cet usage; qu'enfin, les mendiants pourront y être admis le 1^{er} Mai;

Vu les statuts et règlements adoptés par la Société, soit pour l'administration et l'emploi des fonds qui lui sont confiés, soit pour la police intérieure de l'établissement et le régime auquel les pauvres seront assujettis;

Vu l'art. 274 du code pénal, ainsi conçu :

"Toute personne qui aura été trouvée mendiant dans un lieu pour lequel il existe un établissement public organisé afin d'obvier à la mendicité, sera punie de trois à six mois d'emprisonnement, et sera, après l'expiration de sa peine, conduite au dépôt de mendicité;"

Considérant qu'au moyen de l'établissement projeté, les conditions établies par l'article ci-dessus cité seront remplies, et que conséquemment les individus qui se permettroient de mendier, seront passibles des peines portées audit article;

Considérant que les mesures qui sont prises, assurent aux indigents un sort infiniment préférable à celui que leur procurent les moyens précaires auxquels ils doivent leur existence actuelle;

Considérant, en outre, que le zèle bien connu et le caractère des membres de la Société pour l'extinction de la mendicité, offrent toutes les garanties désirables sous le rapport de la bonne administration et de la continuité des secours;

Arrête :

Art. 1. L'établissement formé aux frais et par les soins d'une réunion de citoyens, sera, quoique régi par une commission choisie par eux, assimilé aux établissements municipaux, et considéré comme dépôt de mendicité.

Art. 2. A partir du 1^{er} Juin prochain, la mendicité, sous quelque prétexte et pour quelque cause qu'elle soit exercée, sera interdite d'une manière absolue dans la ville de Bordeaux.

Art. 3. Les individus que seront trouvés mendiant, seront arrêtés et mis à la disposition de M. le Procureur du Roi, pour être poursuivis conformément à l'art. 274 du code pénal.

Art. 4. Les indigents vivant actuellement du produit de la mendicité, et inscrits comme tels, et ceux qui réunissent les conditions requises pour participer au bienfait de l'institution, seront admis dans l'établissement.

RAPPORT fait à Messieurs les Membres du Conseil Général du Dépôt de Mendicité, par M. J. Brun, Maire de Bordeaux, Président de la Société.

Messieurs,

Séance du 10 Avril 1834.

J'AI eu l'honneur de vous présenter l'année dernière, à semblable époque, le tableau de la situation du Dépôt de Mendicité; je vous ai fait part des craintes qu'avaient conçues les Administrateurs de cet utile établissement, sur l'insuffisance de ses ressources, et les conséquences bien déplorables qui devaient en résulter. Mais, Messieurs, grâce à votre puissant concours, aux sages mesures qui ont été adoptées et à l'influence que vous avez heureusement exercée, nous avons vu retarder la fermeture de cette maison de secours, qui nous aurait paru inévitable, si nous avions pu douter de vos efforts généreux et de votre sollicitude pour les infortunés que vous avez recueillis.

Cependant, il ne faut pas vous le dissimuler, les Administrateurs du Dépôt de Mendicité n'ont pu prolonger sa durée qu'en lui imposant les plus grands sacrifices, et l'on est peut-être autorisé à dire que ce dernier effort a épuisé toutes les sources de son existence.

Ainsi, pour faire face aux dépenses de l'année 1834, on a été contraint de vendre les dernières actions que l'on possédait sur la Banque de Bordeaux; on s'est privé, par conséquent, des seuls fonds de réserve que l'on avait conservés, et tout l'avenir repose sur l'espoir d'obtenir, de la charité publique, des souscriptions assez abondantes pour détourner le malheur qui menace l'établissement.

Dans le courant de l'exercice dernier, plusieurs propositions ont été faites pour procurer au dépôt de nouvelles ressources. Au nombre des moyens que vos commissions avaient cru devoir adopter, était celui d'inviter les comités d'arrondissement, institués à l'époque funeste des appréhensions du choléra-morbus, à faire des collectes en faveur du dépôt. On avait pensé que les membres de ces comités, qui s'étaient déjà mis en relation avec les habitants de toutes les classes, et qui avaient fait un si heureux appel à leur philanthropie, trouveraient encore des bourses ouvertes pour soulager un autre genre d'infortune. Ce moyen n'a pu être employé; les comités se sont assurés que leurs démarches seraient infructueuses: nous touchions alors de trop près à l'époque où toutes les voies de persuasion avaient été épuisées pour secourir les malheureux.

La commission, forcée de renoncer à ce projet, dont l'exécution avait paru naturelle et facile, a dû se borner à faire recueillir des souscriptions par les employés du dépôt, et l'on conçoit aisément que, seuls chargés de ce soin, ils ne pouvaient avoir l'influence salutaire que les membres des comités auraient eux-mêmes exercée: aussi leurs démarches n'ont-elles presque rien produit.

Enfin, Messieurs, après avoir inutilement tenté tous les efforts possibles, la commission administrative, pressée par l'imminence du danger que courait le dépôt, proposa comme dernière ressource de s'adresser au conseil municipal de la ville de Bordeaux, et de lui demander, en faveur d'un établissement que l'on peut considérer sous certains rapports comme communal, une subvention proportionnée à ses besoins. Trois de ses membres furent désignés pour rédiger une adresse au conseil municipal; cette adresse, où l'état du dépôt est tracé avec tant de vérité et de talent, produisit l'effet que l'on s'en était promis. Le conseil municipal, appréciant l'urgence et l'utilité si bien motivées de cette demande, s'empressa de voter un secours extraordinaire de 40,000 francs, dans sa séance du 19 Novembre dernier.

L'autorité supérieure, vous le savez, Messieurs, n'a pas approuvé la délibération du conseil municipal, parce qu'elle est contraire aux lois financières qui régissent la comptabilité des communes. Néanmoins, l'allocation votée paraissait trop équitable en principe pour que M. le Ministre rejetât tout moyen de concilier les exigences de la loi et les intérêts de l'établissement qui réclamait impérieusement des secours. En conséquence, le conseil municipal a été appelé de nouveau à délibérer sur cette grave affaire, et dans cette seconde délibération il a voté, au profit du dépôt, pour 1834, un secours éventuel de 20,000 fr. Nous avons tout lieu d'espérer que cette allocation, réduite à la moitié de la première, sera sanctionnée par le gouvernement. Des renseignements officiels et authentiques ne permettent même pas de douter de cette approbation.

Mais, Messieurs, remarquez le bien, ce secours inespéré n'est qu'éventuel: il y aura toujours insuffisance même pour le présent, et nous ne pouvons prévoir dans l'avenir le point fixe où s'arrêtera la décroissance progressive de l'établissement que vous avez créé: je dirai plus, le terme assez prochain de sa durée n'est que trop présumable, si nous n'employons immédiatement tous les moyens possibles pour éviter un aussi funeste résultat.

Je crois donc, Messieurs, devoir engager le conseil général à concourir aux travaux de la commission pour assurer la destinée du Dépôt de Mendicité. Le conseil, augmenté aujourd'hui par l'adjonction de tous les membres du conseil municipal de Bordeaux, pourra, en divisant le travail, combiner favorablement le plan de ses opérations. Nous y sommes tous intéressés, puisque tous nous avons contribué à la fondation de l'établissement. Je ne vous parlerai plus du spectacle déplorable qu'offrirait la mendicité courant de nouveau les rues avec le dégoûtant étalage des infirmités ou des maux sur lesquels elle fonde ses tristes spéculations: je me contenterai de vous rappeler que, seuls en France, vous avez formé cet établissement-modèle, et qu'au milieu des difficultés qui semblent contrarier vos vues bienfaisantes et votre humanité, vous acquerriez un nouveau titre à la reconnaissance de nos concitoyens.

concitoyens, en assurant, par votre généreux concours, le maintien et la durée de cette œuvre tout à la fois de charité et d'ordre public.

Appendix (F.)

Il ne me reste plus, Messieurs, qu'à vous entretenir de la comptabilité du dépôt pendant l'année qui vient de s'écouler.

La population qui a produit pour l'année 1832, 143,824 journées, a été réduite, pendant l'année 1833, à 122,271 journées de présence, compris les pauvres secourus à domicile, ce qui fait ressortir le terme moyen des pauvres entretenus par l'établissement à 335 pendant l'année 1833.

Bordeaux.

Le total de la dépense pour les besoins ordinaires s'est élevé à 62,196 fr. 89 c., ce qui fait ressortir le prix de la journée à 50 cent. $\frac{868}{1000}$.

Ce prix est inférieur de 6 cent. $\frac{326}{1000}$ au prix de la journée en 1832. En comparant chaque article de la dépense dans les deux exercices, on reconnaît que cette différence provient principalement de la diminution survenue dans le prix des subsistances. Cet heureux résultat aurait été plus sensible encore, si les autres chapitres du budget n'avaient présenté une augmentation nécessitée par l'invasion du choléra.

Comme les années précédentes, la dépense a dépassé de beaucoup les recettes. En effet, les souscriptions que l'on n'a pu obtenir que par les soins des employés, ne se sont élevées qu'à - - - - - f. 31,306 80

Sur cette somme on aura, comme d'usage, à déduire les nonvaleurs.

En y ajoutant la portion du travail des pauvres, attribuée à l'établissement, qui ne s'est élevée qu'à - - - - - 567 19

Et les intérêts des actions de la banque - - - - - 1,400 -

On trouve que les ressources pour l'année 1833 ne s'élèvent qu'à - - 33,273 99

Ainsi, pour fournir aux dépenses de l'année, il a fallu trouver une somme de 28,922 90

TOTAL de la Dépense - - - - - f. 62,196 89

La commission administrative,

Après avoir reçu des comités d'arrondissement, institués à l'occasion du choléra-morbus, une somme de - - - - - f. 6,000 -

Un autre secours que M. le Maire de Bordeaux a appliqué au dépôt, sur la somme que Sa Majesté a envoyée pour être répartie sur les pauvres, victimes du choléra - - - - - 2,000 -

La commission a été obligée d'employer le remboursement fait par la ville de Bordeaux, de la dernière moitié de l'avance qui avait été faite à M. Coupat, pour l'achat du local - - - - - 11,000 -

Bien plus : il lui a fallu emprunter une somme de 10,000 francs en attendant que les actions de la banque, dont le dépôt était propriétaire, fussent placées d'une manière avantageuse - - - - - 10,000 -

f. 29,000 -

Le Dépôt de Mendicité se trouve réduit à la dernière ressource ; ce n'est qu'en vendant les 28 actions de la banque qui restaient que l'on a pu se procurer des fonds pour faire face aux premières dépenses de l'année 1834.

Le produit de la vente de ces 28 actions au profit du dépôt, deduction faite des 10,000 francs remboursés à la banque, a été de - - - - - f. 23,040 -

Les souscriptions obtenues pour 1834 ne s'élèvent qu'à environ - - 8,000 -

Legs de M. Jacques Guilhem en faveur de l'établissement - - 2,000 -

Sommes présumées sur les souscriptions qui restent à recouvrer - - 440 -

f. 33,480 -

On se rendra facilement compte de cette position en jetant un coup-d'œil sur les livres de l'établissement, qui sont toujours à la disposition de MM. les Membres du Conseil Général.

L'état sanitaire du dépôt, pendant l'année, a été très-satisfaisant ; moins de pauvres ont été envoyés à l'hôpital que pendant les années précédentes. Je suis heureux, Messieurs, de pouvoir vous en donner l'assurance en terminant ce rapport, comme une compensation pour tous les affligeans détails que j'ai dû vous soumettre.

Le Maire de Bordeaux, Président de la Commission
Administrative du Dépôt de Mendicite,

Bordeaux, le 10 Avril 1834.

COMMISSION ADMINISTRATIVE DES HOSPICES DE BORDEAUX.

REGLEMENT POUR L'HOSPICE DES VIEILLARDS.

But de l'Etablissement, et Organisation du Service.

Art. 1. L'hospice des Vieillards est destiné à recueillir cent quatre-vingt-onze vieillards indigents des deux sexes.

Art. 2. Cet hospice est sous la surveillance d'un membre de la commission administrative, spécialement délégué par elle.

Art. 3. Sont chargés du service intérieur de l'établissement, chacun suivant ses attributions :

Une dame de la charité, supérieure, assistée de sept sœurs ;
Un aumônier ;
Un médecin ordinaire, un médecin adjoint, et un chirurgien ;
Un préposé aux entrées, portier ; huit infirmiers ou domestiques.

De l'Administrateur-Commissaire.

Art. 4. L'administrateur-commissaire exerce sa surveillance sur toute les parties du service.

Art. 5. Il est, auprès de la commission, l'organe des besoins de l'établissement.

Art. 6. Il autorise les entrées, sorties, visites dans l'hospice, dans les cas et dans les formes que prescrit le règlement.

De la Supérieure et de ses Sœurs.

Art. 7. La supérieure et les sœurs sous ses ordres sont chargées de tous les détails du service.

Art. 8. La supérieure a autorité sur tous les employés ou préposés, et elle peut, en cas de manquement, les suspendre de leurs fonctions, pour en référer à la commission, par l'intermédiaire de l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 9. Elle a également autorité sur les habitués ; et dans le cas où ils encourroient des punitions, elle leur inflige, soit la privation du tabac, du vin et de la viande, soit les arrêts dans la chambre de discipline ou prison.

Art. 10. Elle est autorisée à faire directement les dépenses au marché et autres menus achats journaliers, sous le nom de dépense intérieure, en se conformant aux allocations du budget. Elle est remboursée de cette avance à la fin de chaque mois, sur son compte vérifié par le directeur général, agent comptable, et arrêté par l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 11. Elle paie les traitements des employés à la fin de chaque mois, conformément aux allocations du budget ; elle en est remboursée sur la production de l'état de paiement, émargé de leur acquit, vérifié et arrêté comme il est ci-dessus.

Art. 12. Pour tous autres besoins de l'hospice, il y est pourvu par la commission, sur les demandes de la supérieure, vérifiées par le directeur général, agent comptable, soumises à la commission en séance, et par elle approuvées.

Art. 13. La supérieure vérifie à l'entrée les comestibles, approvisionnements, matériaux, et généralement tous les articles qui entrent pour la consommation ou l'entretien de la maison ; elle n'agréé pas ce qui est défectueux.

Elle appose son visa sur les comptes, mémoires ou factures, pour constater que cette vérification a eu lieu, soit pour la qualité, soit pour les quantités ou poids.

De l'Aumônier.

Art. 14. L'aumônier est nommé par Mgr. l'Archevêque, sur la présentation, par la commission, d'une liste triple de candidats.

Art. 15. Il réside dans l'hospice, et ne peut s'absenter sans l'autorisation de la commission. (Décision ministérielle du 28 Juillet 1820.)

Art. 16. Il célèbre la messe tous les jours de la semaine, à sept heures et demie du matin en hiver, et à six heures en été.

Bordeaux.

Les vêpres du dimanche se disent à deux heures et demie.

Art. 17. L'aumônier assiste, dans la pratique des devoirs chrétiens, les habitués et les employés qui lui donnent leur confiance.

Il fait au moins une fois par mois une instruction religieuse pour les habitués.

Art. 18. Il observe les réglemens de la maison, pour l'ordre intérieur, les heures d'ouverture des portes, etc.

Des Médecins et du Chirurgien.

Art. 19. Les médecins et le chirurgien sont nommés par M. le Préfet, sur une liste triple présentée par la commission.

Art. 20. Le médecin ordinaire et le médecin adjoint font concurremment le service : l'un d'eux visite l'hospice deux fois par semaine, indépendamment des visites qu'ils doivent faire chaque jour, lorsqu'il y a des malades dans la maison.

Art. 21. Le chirurgien fait une visite chaque jour ; il ordonne les remèdes pour les cas pressants ; il panse les vieillards infirmes. Il peut se faire aider, pour les pansements, par des élèves externes de l'hôpital Saint-André, agréés par la commission.

Du Préposé aux Entrées.

Art. 22. Le prepose aux entrées demeure assidûment au bureau d'entrée de l'hospice.

Art. 23. Il ouvre la porte à cinq heures du matin en été, et à sept heures en hiver. Il la ferme, en toute saison, à neuf heures, et remet alors les clefs à la supérieure.

Art. 24. Il ne laisse introduire dans l'hospice aucun nouvel habitué, s'il n'est muni d'un ordre d'entrée délivré par l'administrateur-commissaire : il ne permet la sortie qu'aux habitués qui justifient d'une autorisation écrite, délivrée par la supérieure, ou d'un ordre de sortie donné par l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 25. Il ne permet la visite aux étrangers, que sur une permission du même administrateur.

Art. 26. Il veille à ce qu'aucun effet ou comestibles ne soient portés de l'hospice au-dehors.

Art. 27. Il tient le registre de porte, constate, tant audit registre que sur les mémoires, comptes ou factures, la vérification qu'il est tenu de faire de la nature, poids ou quantité de tous approvisionnements, denrées ou matériaux entrants.

Il lui est expressément défendu de gratter, rayer, intercaler ou mettre hors de sa date aucun article dudit registre, toute rectification ne pouvant y être faite que par le directeur général agent comptable, qui l'établit d'une manière circonstanciée et motivée, sans rature ni surcharge sur les articles défectueux.

Art. 28. Il tient les registres de population, remet les états périodiques de mouvement au bureau du directeur général agent comptable.

Art. 29. Il remet à l'Hôtel de Ville, conformément aux lois, les déclarations des décès, certifiées par la supérieure.

Art. 30. Il fait, pour la maison, tous comptes et écritures dont il est chargé par la supérieure.

Art. 31. Il ne peut s'absenter sans l'autorisation de la commission.

Des Infirmiers ou Domestiques.

Art. 32. Les infirmiers ou domestiques exercent leur emploi sous les ordres de la supérieure, en se conformant à ce qu'elle leur prescrit pour l'ordre du service, le soulagement des pauvres et la bonne tenue de l'établissement.

Des Habitués.

Art. 33. Pour être admis à l'hospice des Vieillards, il faut réunir les conditions suivantes, et en rapporter la preuve :

Etre âgé au moins de soixante ans ;

Etre dans un état complet d'indigence ;

Etre dans l'impossibilité de pourvoir à son existence par le travail.

Art. 34. Les demandes en admission doivent être adressées à la commission administrative ; et si elle reconnoît que le pétitionnaire est dans le cas d'être admis, elle renvoie la pétition à l'administrateur-commissaire, pour délivrer l'ordre d'entrée à mesure de la vacance des places.

Art. 35. Le tour d'entrée est fixé alternativement par le rang d'ancienneté d'inscription et par celui d'ancienneté d'âge.

Art. 36. Les habitués portent l'habit de la maison.

Ils ne forment qu'une seule classe, et n'ont qu'un même ordinaire. Ils prennent les repas aux réfectoires communs.

Les exceptions aux dispositions du présent article sont accordées, dans les cas et pour des circonstances extraordinaires, par la commission, sur la proposition de l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 37. Les habitués concourent, suivant leur âge, leur intelligence et leur sexe, aux travaux de la maison, et donnent leur temps auxdits travaux, soit dans l'atelier du linge, soit dans les autres parties, de neuf heures à midi, et de deux heures à cinq.

Les

Les heures pour les transports de bois, d'eau et autres, pour le jardin, pour les soins de propreté, sont fixées par la supérieure, suivant que le service l'exige.

Art. 38. Les habitués sortis de l'hospice sans permission, de même que ceux sortis définitivement par autorisation ou ordre de l'administrateur-commissaire, ne peuvent plus être admis sous aucun prétexte.

Art. 39. Ceux qui, ayant eu la permission de sortir momentanément, se seroient livrés en ville à la débauche, à la mendicité, ou qui auroient commis des délits susceptibles d'être punis par l'autorité, seront exclus de l'établissement.

Art. 40. Les habitués qui ne professent pas la religion Catholique, sont autorisés à sortir pendant deux heures, chaque jour de fête consacré dans leur culte, pour assister aux cérémonies qui ont lieu dans leurs temples.

Art. 41. Les mêmes habitués, lorsqu'ils sont malades, et qu'ils désirent être assistés par leurs pasteurs, en préviennent le préposé aux entrées. Celui-ci est alors tenu de faire avertir le pasteur désigné, qui est reçu dans l'hospice quand il se présente.

Art. 42. Les habitués se lèvent à cinq heures du matin en été, et à sept heures en hiver. Après le lever, ils font leurs lits, nettoient les dortoirs, et immédiatement après se fait la prière du matin, en présence d'une sœur.

Art. 43. Ils se couchent à huit heures et demie en été, et à six et demie en hiver. La prière du soir précède le coucher; elle est faite, comme celle du matin, en présence d'une sœur.

Art. 44. Le déjeûné a lieu à sept heures en été, et à huit heures en hiver; le dîné à midi, et le souper à cinq heures, en toute saison.

Art. 45. Les habitués ne peuvent avoir du feu à leur disposition particulière, et il leur est défendu de fumer dans les dortoirs, les chambres ou les salles.

Dispositions Générales.

Art. 46. L'heure du coucher des employés ne peut être portée plus tard qu'à dix heures: passé cette heure, il ne doit plus y avoir ni feu ni lumière dans l'hospice, à l'exception des lampes nécessaires pour veiller.

Art. 47. La chapelle de l'hospice n'est pas ouverte au public.

Art. 48. La commission fait les règlements de détail que peut nécessiter l'application des articles organiques qui précèdent. Si les cas non prévus exigent des modifications ou additions au règlement général, il y est procédé par M. le Préfet, sur la proposition de la commission.

Art. 9. Elle a également autorité sur les aliénés de toute classe entretenus dans la maison, et elle l'exerce pour l'ordre du service, en ayant égard à l'état de chacun d'eux.

Art. 10. Elle est autorisée à faire directement les dépenses au marché, et autres menus achats journaliers, sous le nom de dépense intérieure, en se conformant aux allocations du budget. Elle est remboursée de cette avance à la fin de chaque mois, sur son compte vérifié par le directeur général agent comptable des hospices, et arrêté par l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 11. Elle paie, à la fin de chaque mois, les traitements des employés, conformément aux allocations du budget. Elle en est remboursée sur la production de l'état de paiement émargé de leur acquit, vérifié et arrêté comme il est dit ci-dessus.

Art. 12. Pour tous autres besoins de l'hôpital, il y est pourvu par la commission, sur les demandes de la supérieure, vérifiées par le directeur général agent comptable, visées par l'administrateur-commissaire, soumises à la commission en séance, et par elle approuvées.

Art. 13. La supérieure vérifie à l'entrée les comestibles, approvisionnements, matériaux, et généralement tous les articles qui entrent pour la consommation ou l'entretien de la maison. Elle n'agrée pas ce qui est défectueux.

Elle appose son visa sur les comptes, mémoires ou factures, pour constater que cette vérification a eu lieu, soit pour la qualité, soit pour les quantités ou poids.

Art. 14. La supérieure est chargée du registre de la population; elle correspond directement avec la commission, pour tout ce qui a trait à l'entrée ou à la sortie des aliénés séquestrés, soit provisoirement, soit définitivement, et elle remet au directeur général agent comptable les états périodiques de mouvement.

De l'Aumônier.

Art. 15. L'aumônier est nommé par M^{gr}. l'Archevêque, sur trois candidats présentés par la commission administrative des hospices.

Art. 16. Il ne peut s'absenter sans l'autorisation de la commission. (Décision ministérielle du 28 Juillet 1820).

Art. 17. Il est chargé de tout le service religieux de l'établissement; il célèbre la messe à huit heures chaque jour de la semaine, et le Dimanche à neuf heures.

Les vêpres des Dimanches et fêtes ont lieu à deux heures.

Art. 18. Il assiste, dans la pratique des devoirs Chrétiens, les personnes qui habitent la maison, administre les sacrements, fait les funérailles.

Art. 19. Il fait, au moins une fois par mois, une instruction Chrétienne pour les infirmiers.

Art. 20. Il observe les règlements de la maison, pour l'ordre intérieur, les heures d'ouverture des portes, etc.

Des Médecins et Chirurgiens.

Art. 21. Les médecins et chirurgiens sont nommés par M. le Préfet, sur une liste de trois candidats présentés par la commission.

Art. 22. Les médecin et chirurgien ordinaires se partagent le service de l'hôpital, conformément à leurs attributions respectives.

Les aliénés en traitement sont visités chaque jour par le médecin ou le chirurgien, sans préjudice des soins extraordinaires que pourroient nécessiter des maladies graves, soit des aliénés, soit des employés.

Art. 23. Les médecin et chirurgien ordinaires appellent en consultation les médecin et chirurgien adjoints, soit pour des cas de maladie extraordinaire, soit pour des autopsies cadavériques.

Art. 24. En cas d'absence ou de maladie du médecin ou chirurgien ordinaire, ils sont respectivement remplacés dans leur service par le médecin ou chirurgien adjoint.

Art. 25. Les médecins et chirurgiens ordinaires et adjoints se réunissent en conférence le Mardi de chaque semaine.

Art. 26. Les jours de conférence, les médecins et chirurgiens ordinaires et adjoints réunis, procéderont à l'examen des aliénés entrés pendant la semaine précédente, et ils rédigeront, sur la situation particulière de chacun d'eux et relativement à leur état d'aliénation, un rapport qui sera adressé à la commission par la supérieure.

Art. 27. Il sera en outre remis à la commission, à la fin de chaque trimestre, un état de tous les aliénés, avec des notes sur leur curabilité ou incurabilité présumée.

Du Préposé aux Entrées.

Art. 28. Le préposé aux entrées se tient assidûment au bureau d'entrée de l'hôpital.

Art. 29. Il ouvre les portes à cinq heures du matin dans l'été, et à sept heures en hiver. Il les ferme, en toute saison, à neuf heures du soir, et remet alors les clefs à la supérieure.

Art. 30. Il ne laisse introduire dans l'hôpital et n'en laisse sortir aucun habitué, qu'autant qu'il lui est justifié du billet d'entrée ou de sortie délivré par la commission et par l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 31. Il ne permet l'entrée de l'établissement aux étrangers qui veulent le visiter, ou aux parents qui désirent voir des aliénés, qu'en vertu d'une permission écrite de l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 32. Il veille à ce qu'aucun effet ou comestible ne soit porté de l'hôpital en dehors.

Art. 33. Il tient le registre de porte, constate, tant audit registre que sur les mémoires, comptes ou factures, la vérification qu'il est tenu de faire, de la nature, poids ou quantités de tous approvisionnements, denrées ou matériaux entrants.

Il lui est expressément défendu de gratter, de rayer, intercaler ou mettre hors de sa date aucun article dudit registre, toute rectification ne pouvant y être faite que par le directeur général agent comptable, qui l'établit d'une manière circonstanciée et motivée, sans rature ni surcharge sur les articles défectueux.

Art. 34. Il remet à l'Hôtel de Ville les déclarations, certifiées par la supérieure, des décès qui surviennent dans l'hôpital.

Art. 35. Il fait, pour la maison, tous comptes et écritures dont la supérieure trouve bon de le charger.

Art. 36. Il ne peut s'absenter sans l'autorisation de la commission.

Des Infirmiers.

Art. 37. Les infirmiers et infirmières exécutent les ordres de la supérieure, dans toutes les parties du service qu'elle leur confie pour le bon ordre de la maison et pour le plus grand soulagement des aliénés.

Art. 38. Ils veillent à tour de rôle, et l'infirmier de veillée fait pendant la nuit plusieurs tournées dans l'établissement.

Des Aliénés.

Art. 39. Le mode d'admission et de sortie des aliénés, le règlement des pensions ou journées, etc., demeurent maintenus ainsi qu'il est fixé par l'arrêté réglementaire de la Préfecture, du 20 Décembre 1814.

Les ordres d'admission ou de sortie sont délivrés par la commission, et rendus exécutoires par le visa de l'administrateur-commissaire.

Art. 40. Les aliénés sont pensionnaires ou indigents. L'ordre d'entrée que fait délivrer la commission indique à cet égard la classe à laquelle appartient l'aliéné, et le quartier dans lequel il doit être placé.

Art. 41. Les soins médicaux, l'application des remèdes, bains, douches, ou autres moyens de guérison, sont les mêmes pour toutes les classes. Il n'est établi de différence entre les aliénés indigents et les pensionnaires, que relativement au régime alimentaire et à leur séparation dans des quartiers distincts.

Art. 42. Les pensionnaires que leur famille n'entretient pas de vêtements, sont revêtus du costume de l'hôpital.

Art. 43. La supérieure règle, d'après les saisons, et en consultant l'état des divers individus, les heures du lever et du coucher.

Art. 44. Immédiatement après le lever, les loges et les cours sont nettoyées et balayées, les lits faits, etc., par les infirmiers, aidés des aliénés indigents que leur état permet d'employer à ces travaux.

Art. 45. Les aliénés font trois repas par jour, savoir :

Le déjeuné,

Le dîné,

Le souper.

Chaque aliéné prend son repas dans sa loge, à l'exception de ceux que la supérieure juge susceptibles d'être réunis dans des réfectoires communs.

Art. 46. Les aliénés sont constamment surveillés dans chaque cour par deux infirmiers, sous les ordres d'une sœur.

Art. 47. Les parents des aliénés qui désirent les voir, s'adressent par écrit à la supérieure, qui, après avoir reconnu si l'état de l'aliéné permet les communications, en prévient les parents, par écrit également, en indiquant le jour et l'heure auxquels ils pourront être reçus. Munis de cette réponse, les parents se présentent à l'administrateur-commissaire, qui délivre, s'il y a lieu, le permis de visiter.

Dispositions Générales.

Art. 48. Le public n'est point admis dans la chapelle de l'hôpital des Aliénés.

Art. 49. La commission fait les règlements de détail que peut nécessiter l'application des articles organiques qui précèdent. Si des cas non prévus exigent des modifications ou additions au règlement général, il y est procédé par M. le Préfet, sur la proposition de la commission administrative.

Bayonne.

CONSULATE OF BAYONNE,

DEPARTMENT OF THE LOWER PYRENEES.

ANSWERS to the QUERIES of the Poor Law Commissioners, enclosed in H. M. Consul's Despatch, 12 June 1834.

VAGRANTS.

1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country? 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—Mendicity, under the head of vagrancy, is not prevalent in the department of the Lower Pyrenees; the relief afforded to French subjects passing through the department, seeking work (which seldom occurs), or returning to their native places, is at the rate of three sols per league, or $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per mile; but this relief is more frequently granted to foreigners in distress, and is paid by the several mayors at certain stations or towns on their route. There is no public relief granted to vagrants living by begging.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

There are no public or private establishments or relief afforded to the destitute able-bodied or their families; but this description of pauper is seldom or ever to be met with in this department.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

There are no public or religious institutions or regulations for the relief of the poor in general; they subsist by begging; and when no longer able to do so, they receive a trifling relief from "The Ladies of Charity" (Dames de la Charité), who make quarterly collections from the respectable inhabitants, which these ladies distribute in food, fuel or money, to the pauvres hontus, or infirm, as the case may be; but this private voluntary subscription is very inadequate.

The inhabitants of Bayonne (and it is hoped and expected that the example will be followed in other places) are now occupied in forming, by voluntary annual subscriptions, an establishment for the relief of the poor; a commission of gentlemen has been appointed, and there is every prospect that this charitable undertaking will be crowned with success.

I have added my name to the list of subscribers, and have only to regret that my means will not admit of my subscribing more largely, considering that His Majesty's subjects in distress may benefit by this establishment.

SICK.

In the towns there are public hospitals for the sick and wounded; but when convalescent, they are obliged immediately to quit the hospital, destitute or not.

At the Chef Lieu of the department (at Pau) there is a public venereal hospital, where females who have been found by the police to have the bad disorder upon them are conveyed, even from one end of the department to the other, in open carts, escorted by the gendarmery; a disgusting practice in a civilized country, and it might be supposed completely at variance with French courtesy.

CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—Illegitimate children (infants only) are received into the hospitals established by the famous St. Vincent de Paul, but where the parents have no communication with or control over them; these children are placed out to nurse in the country at about 5s. a month, and are afterwards provided for by the hospital, if in the course of seven years they are not claimed by the parents. The secrecy of this excellent establishment, which is supported by the funds of the corporation and endowments (as also the hospital for the sick), has proved a complete preventive of the horrible crime of infanticide.

If females were compelled by law to support their illegitimate children, without the option of depositing them in the hospitals, the crime of infanticide would undoubtedly be increased to an alarming degree.

2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—There are no regulations which compel parents to assist in the maintenance of bastards; but when not deposited in the hospitals, the mothers have invariably been found to bestow upon their infants the most scrupulous care and attention, the natural consequence of having had the firmness and humanity not to abandon their offspring, notwithstanding the facility of concealment held out to them by the hospital.

3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—Illegitimate children are supported in no other way than by their admission into the hospital, or in the manner above stated.

ORPHANS, FOUNDLINGS, OR DESERTED CHILDREN.

There are no public or private institutions or regulations for orphans.

Foundlings in a state of infancy are received into the hospitals of St. Vincent de Paul.

Deserted Children—There are no public or private regulations or institutions under head; but I have not heard of a case in question in this department.

CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

Cripples.—Obliged to beg if destitute, there being no public or private institutions or regulations for cripples.

The deaf and dumb, if poor and destitute, are obliged to beg; there are excellent establishments in the large towns for their instruction, for those who have the means.

Blind.—Obliged to beg, there are no public or private institutions for them.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

There are no public or private institutions for idiots.

There is an institution (Maison de Force) for the admission of lunatics at the Chef Lieu of the department only (at Pau).

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt, or the expectation of relief, appears to produce any, and what effect,

1st, On the industry of the labourers? 2d, On their frugality? 3d, On the age at which they marry? 4th, On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—The small prospects of public or private relief held out to the lower classes has naturally the effect of giving impulse to industry and frugality, and increasing the mutual affection of parent, children and other relatives; it does not appear to produce any particular effect on the age of marriages.

5th, What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible? (See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts?")—There can be no comparison drawn between the self-supported able-bodied labourer of the lowest class, and the person subsisting on alms or public charity, there being no public establishments or relief for the poor.

LABOURERS, &c.

1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—The general and average amount of wages of an able-bodied male labourer is at the rate of 25 sols, or 1 s., per diem, either in summer or winter, or in the town or country.

2. Is piece-work general?—Piece-work is not general.

3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A good artisan may expect to earn from 2 s. 6 d. to 3 s. per diem, an average workman from 1 s. 3 d. to 1 s. 6 d. per diem, throughout the year, Sundays and fête days excepted.

4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?

5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?

6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?

7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife, and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?

8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?

9. Could it lay by anything, and how much?

10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?

11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?

12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?

13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?

The above questions relative to hired country labourers are not altogether applicable to this department, which is invariably divided into small farms, not exceeding from 20 to 30 English acres each, the families on each farm sufficing for the cultivation thereof, the proprietors or the farmers being themselves the labourers of the soil, the neighbours assisting each other in time of harvest; consequently it seldom occurs that a hired labourer is called in; but when employed they are paid at the rate of about 1 s. per diem, without food. The women, and the children from the age of 10 years, constantly work on the land. The children generally receive a primary education at the village day-schools, where there is always a schoolmaster or mistress appointed by the authorities; price of education, 2 francs

(about 1 s. 7 d.) per month. At these schools the children are prepared for their first communion; they learn reading, writing and calculation. The food of the proprietor or farmer labourer chiefly consists in vegetable soups, potatoes, salt fish, pork, bacon, &c., and seldom or ever butcher's meat, and invariably Indian corn bread, homebaked. These persons (who are generally the owners of the soil) procure for themselves a comfortable subsistence, but they are seldom able to lay by anything. The equal division of the land prevents in a great measure mendicity. The families on each farm in the whole department consist on an average of about five persons.

14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—The population of the department of the Lower Pyrenees, according to the last census taken in 1831, is 428,401; of which, annual deaths 8,507.

15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—Proportion of annual births, 11,266.

16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—Proportion of annual marriages, 2,583.

17. The average number of children to a marriage?—Each family in general is not numerous.

18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—Annual legitimate births, 10,489; illegitimate ditto, 777; total 11,266.

19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year? 20. Before the end of their tenth year? 21. Before the end of their eighteenth year?—The only calculation on deaths that I have been able to obtain is as follows; viz.

From 3 months to 4 years	-	-	-	-	3,307	deaths.
Ditto - - 4 to 20	-	-	-	-	1,516	—
Ditto - - 20 to 40	-	-	-	-	811	—

N. B. It is calculated that persons attain a more advanced age in this department than in any other in France.

22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—There is nothing remarkable as to the age of marriage; very young marriages are not common.

23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—Males cannot marry in France under the age of 25 years, and females under the age of 21, without the consent of both their parents, or producing a certificate of their death. Having attained the ages of 21 and 25 years, if the parents refuse consent to the marriage, then the children are compelled to make three legal acts of respect or declarations, when the marriage can be legally celebrated at the town-hall, in the presence of the mayor or his assistants. The law does not require any religious ceremony.

24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—Amongst the lower orders, their savings are very inconsiderable.

25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—There are no saving banks of any note. The lower classes invest their money sometimes in the purchase of small farms, or on houses and land in the neighbourhood; but more frequently they keep it locked up at home.

DENMARK.

LETTER from Peter Browne, Esq., to the Right hon. Viscount Palmerston, G. C. B., &c. &c. &c.

My Lord,

Copenhagen, January 21st, 1834.

I HAVE the honour of enclosing Replies to the series of Questions relative to the provision for the poor in Denmark, required by your Lordship in Sir George Shee's Circular of the 30th November. I likewise enclose a translated copy of the Poor Laws, together with two communications made to me on the subject, by country gentlemen of great practical knowledge, and who have long and anxiously watched the working of the system in all its various points of view.

I have, &c.

(signed) Peter Browne.

Enclosure, No. 1.

(Enclosure, No. 1.)

VAGRANTS.

Question 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer. Very little indeed in the Danish dominions.

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded, and under what regulations?—A. None, except when taken ill; but all expense incurred by his illness must be paid by the parish to which he legally belongs, as also the expense of his burial, should he die.

DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—A. The system of billeting is resorted to when there is no regular poor-house established in the parish.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. Depends on the discretionary decision of the Poor Committee.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c. and in which they are set to work?—A. Some have already been bought or built. Wherever the poor are numerous, the parish builds or procures a poor-house, as less expensive than the billeting system. Poor-houses are on the increase at present, so much so that it is thought something will be done to prevent its going further. In the island of Funen there is a general poor-house, or house of industry, for the whole island, into which all poor and vagrants who will not work in the parish poor-houses are sent and compelled to labour; there they are subject to strict discipline, and in cases of insubordination, solitary confinement is inflicted. It is intended to establish such houses in all the great divisions of the Danish dominions. Such labour as is imposed in the parish poor-houses is very trifling, and the whole of the machinery employed in the management extremely defective. I do not think it would be possible to alter it much for the better. The system itself is wrong; favouritism, prejudice and partiality have so much room for play, that relief is often refused where it is required, and often afforded when it should be refused.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—A. Many establishments of this nature exist—rather, however, to be designated benevolent than religious. It is the business of the Poor Committee, where such establishments exist, to take care that the will of the founder be in all points of view carried into effect; but such are liable to great abuse, in consequence of the defective machinery employed. They possess some trifling privileges and exemptions, not sufficiently important to note. The great majority of these establishments existed before the existence of the Poor Laws (1803 generally established). It has been found, that bequests in favour of charitable institutions, as well as private charity, have diminished since the introduction of Poor Laws, and that, therefore, the latter tends to dry up the fountain of individual benevolence and charity. The Jews must support their own poor.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—A. Left to the discretion cretion of the Poor Committee, according to circumstances; but this discretion, for reasons assigned in Answer 3, is often exercised in a manner both injudicious and unjust.

Q. 6. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided for such persons, in agriculture or on public works?—A. A pauper, able and willing to work, and who states he cannot procure work, must have it found for him by the Poor Committee; but this is seldom the case. A story, well hung together, will generally procure him provisions, sometimes money. And herein arises abuse; he obtains the one or the other, works at home for himself, and for others from his home, and pockets or consumes besides, gratis, what he receives from the parish. It is true that this sort of trickery cannot be long practised by the same individual; but still there is always a great temptation to attempt it, and as the individual energy of the pauper is always sharp and active, it is greatly an overmatch for the Poor Committee, who, having their own business, private and public, to attend to, can hardly be expected to sift each case with the degree of accuracy and patience necessary to detect and punish the attempted imposition.

Q. 7. To what extent, and under what regulations, are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons, or their families, at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. Left to the discretion of the Poor Committee in all cases.

Q. 8. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they relieved, by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated, or apprenticed?—A. The children of all poor persons are educated gratis, and the parish is taxed, for the payment of the schoolmaster, repairs of school-house, books, paper, pens, ink, &c. When the poor cannot afford to clothe their children, clothes are provided. Such clothes are often made by the poor working in the parish poor-houses. In manufactories the children are allowed to work the whole day; but the master manufacturer must provide a schoolmaster, &c. at his own cost, and all the children he employs must receive instructions during the evening. All children must attend the parish school, except in the above case.

Q. 9. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—A. Only the parents.

Q. 10. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they assisted by loans?—Sometimes for a short period; this, however, is not common.

IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who through age are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. Such often find asylums in the establishments referred to, No. 4, (previous head.) But in case they are not admitted, the parish to which they belong is obliged to support them in the poor-house or otherwise.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—A. Vide previous head, No. 5.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they boarded with individuals?—A. Vide previous head, No. 2.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—A. Vide previous head, No. 1.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families?—Vide previous head, No. 9.

SICK.

Q. 1. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. In every bailiwick there is an hospital into which the sick poor are admitted, or, what is more generally the case, medical attendance and medicines are supplied them at home, at the cost of the parish. Every parish has its midwife, every district its surgeon, and at least one apothecary, and every bailiwick or province its physician. These persons are obliged to attend the poor at a stipulated rate, enjoying besides some exclusive privileges.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. Vide No. 1, above.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. None.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. In Copenhagen there is one very extensive, in which the women are maintained till quite recovered. In the country none. But the parish midwife, who has been expressly educated for the purpose, is obliged to attend all the women belonging to it. She is paid as well as the physician, surgeon, &c. by an annual charge on the parish.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—A. None, of which I am aware.

Q. 6. To

CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The support of such falls in the first instance on the mother. The father, however, on her application is obliged to assist until the child is 10 years old, but no longer. The yearly sum which he is to contribute is settled by the high bailiff of the province, according to circumstances more or less. If the father cannot, or will not, pay the stipulated sum, he is confined in prison a day on bread and water for every dollar (2s.) which the amtsmand (high bailiff) has directed him to be assessed. The least sum he can be rated to pay is 10 dollars per annum, or 1*l.* sterling. It very often occurs that imprisonment under such circumstances and for such causes takes place.

Q. 2. To what extent, and under what regulations, are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. Parents of the mother can be compelled, but in no case the parents of the father.

Q. 3. To what extent, and under what regulations, are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. In case the father and mother cannot support them, they are then supported as other children of the parish.

Q. 4. To what extent, and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

You are requested to state whether the receipt or the expectation of relief appears to produce any and what effect—

Q. 1. On the industry of the labourers?—A. On their industry, allowed on all hands to be most injurious, involving the levelling principle to a very great degree, lowering the middleman to the poor man, and the poor man who labours to the pauper supported by the parish. It tends to harden the heart of the poor man, who demands with all that authority with which the legal right to provision invests him. There is no thankfulness for what is gotten, and what is given is afforded with dislike and reluctance.

Q. 2. On their frugality?—A. The Poor Laws greatly weaken the frugal principle.

Q. 3. On the age at which they marry?—A. Encourage early and thoughtless marriages. The children are brought up with the example of indolence and inactivity before their eyes, which must be most prejudicial in after-life. I have often remarked amongst the people, who are naturally soft, susceptible and sympathizing, an extraordinary insensibility towards those who voluntarily relieve them, even at the moment of relief, and no gratitude whatever afterwards. I can attribute this most undesirable state of feeling, so contrary to what might be expected from the natural character of the people, solely to the perpetual association of right to relief. Thus does the system always disturb and often destroy the moral and kindly relation which should subsist and which is natural between the higher and lower orders. The poor man becomes stiff and sturdy; the rich man indifferent to the wants and sufferings of the poor one. He feels him a continual pressure, at moments inconvenient to relieve, and under circumstances where he would often withhold if he could, partly from dislike to the compulsory principle, and often not regarding the case as one of real charity, and disapproving, as he naturally may, of the whole system of Poor Laws, administration. From all I have observed I feel persuaded (and I have lived a good deal in the country, having had much connexion with the lower orders, and not having been indifferent to their condition either moral or physical) that a more mischievous system could not have been devised—that poverty has been greatly increased by weakening the springs of individual effort, and destroying independence of character—that the lower orders have become tricky, sturdy and unobliging, the higher orders cold and uncharitable, and in short, that ere long, unless some strenuous steps are taken, Denmark will drink deep of the bitter cup of which England, by a similar system, has been so long drinking to her grievous cost. Were there no other objection, the machinery is wanting to conduct so delicate and complicated a system. And were it the best possible, and had the managers no other occupation but but the one, the ingenuity of idleness to escape from action is so great, that it would often, very often defeat eyes less actively open to detect it. I have spoken with few who do not object to the system from first to last, or who do not press an opinion that the state of the population before the existence of the Poor Laws was more desirable by far than at present.

Q. 4. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children and other relatives?—No doubt it materially disturbs the natural dependence and affection of parent and child. The latter feels his parent comparatively needless to him; he obtains support elsewhere; and the former feels the obligation to support the latter greatly diminished. In short, being comparatively independent of each other, the affections must inevitably become blunted.

Q. 5. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity: is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour, more or less eligible?—A. Were I a Danish labourer, I would endeavour to live partly on my own labour and partly on the parish, and I feel persuaded that a labourer so living in Denmark will be better off than one who gets no help from the parish; that is, the former, from a knowledge that he may fall back on the parish, will spend all he earns at the time on coffee, spirits, tobacco, snuff, &c., whereas the latter, who certainly can live on his industry (except under extraordinary and occasional emergencies, sickness, &c.) is debarred from such gratifications. Under such circumstances, the poorer labourer is better off than the poor one.

LABOURERS, &c.

Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer by the day, the week, the month or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—A. Between 6*d.* and 8*d.* a day. In harvest time provisions, but of a very poor quality, are given.

Q. 2. Is piece-work general?—A. Not very, and not well executed.

Q. 3. What, on the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest-work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A. About 15*l.* The Sunday in one shape or other is almost, if not altogether, as much a day of work as any other of the week. Artisans may be rated at one-third more, but their relative position in point of means is the same, because of the greater expense of living in towns, and being generally more extravagant and debauched.

Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—A. Little short of the whole of their earnings. Artisans are not by any means so sure of work as labourers. I should prefer the position of the latter to the former in this country, unless a first-rate artisan.

Q. 5. Is there any, and what, employment for women and children?—A. In summer they can easily procure work, but not in winter.

Q. 6. What can women and children under sixteen earn per week in summer, in winter and harvest, and how employed?—A. A woman may earn about 4*d.* a day if she be industrious during the year round. Children until fourteen being kept at school can help their parents but little, except in spring and harvest time, when they are allowed to remain at home to assist in sowing and reaping. During these two months, perhaps, they may earn, including two under sixteen, about 1*s.* per day, and the husband 8*d.* The least quantity of food, and the most simple, on which each such person can live, is 3 lbs. of black or rye bread, which costs about 4 skillings, or 1*d.* per lb., and about 1 lb. of butter each week, costing 6*d.* If you take the seven days (they generally work on Sundays) and suppose a family as above described in regular work, their earnings will be 12*s.* a week, and the cost of their food will be about 1*s.* 4*d.* per day, or about 9*s.* 4*d.* per week; and when it is considered that the remaining 2*s.* 8*d.* is to cover house-rent, fuel, beer and clothing, the labourer and his poor family will be found to have no large balance in hand between them and parish relief, especially if sickness or other such event should occur, making an extraordinary demand on their means, together with a deduction from their power of earning.

Q. 7. What, on the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years respectively (the eldest a boy) expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A. Very little more than a woman, perhaps in harvest a trifle more, about 6½*d.* At Copenhagen the wages are higher. My replies refer to the country generally. But in the country provisions are in the same proportion cheaper.

Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A. It is frequently done; the food, wholesome rye bread, bad milk cheese, shocking butter, coffee, as it is called, profusion of tobacco and snuff, and too much spirits, which are unfortunately cheap and very bad.

Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—A. I do not think, under ordinary circumstances, it could.

Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—About one acre, for which he pays (his house-rent included) about thirty days work, but which generally falls much more heavily on the occupant than the proportion of the time he gives, because his landlord, sometimes a great proprietor, sometimes a small one, sometimes a farmer (who takes the farm with the cottages on it, the tenants subject to duty work) takes care to employ him when labour is most scarce, and therefore most dear, in spring and in harvest. His labour thus given may be valued at about 2*l.*, a large deduction out of the 25*l.* per annum he, his wife and children may with great industry earn.

Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—
A. Generally the nobility.

Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—A. Never sold; rent paid as per Answer 10.

Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—A. None, except annexed to their habitations. In this case one acre. About half of the country is in possession of petty proprietors, the remainder half great proprietors, whose situation was very bad, but is now, although slowly, on the improve, like that of all other proprietors. They let the land to farmers, who, as well as the little proprietors, employ those who live solely by labour. Farming labour, however, is often, indeed very generally, executed by hired servants taken from the class of labourers. Such labourers are much better off than those who live in hired cottages, and are dependent on daily work.

Q. 14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?

Q. 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?

Q. 16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?

Q. 17. The average number of children to a marriage?

Q. 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?

Q. 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?

Q. 20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their tenth year?

Q. 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their eighteenth year?

—A. I defer replying to these questions for a short time, as a new census of the population, and all relating to it, will be shortly published.

Q. 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—A. Women, 22, men, 28, when the period of serving or rather training for the army is over.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. No cause by law, except when the couple happen to be both paupers living in the parish; but this is so easily evaded that it is no hindrance whatever. The prudential check, however, operates considerably. I am informed that in Funen it often occurs that amongst the lower orders, in case of cohabitation, there is an understanding that marriage is not to take place unless the woman become pregnant. Then the peasant immediately, as in honour bound, marries her. Amongst the higher orders matrimonial engagements are often made several years before marriage takes place.

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st. the unmarried, 2d. the married, save?—A. The unmarried man can save more, but, being more improvident, saves less.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—The first thing a Dane does with his savings is to purchase a clock, then a horse or cow, which he hires out, and which pays a good interest. Then his ambition is to become a petty proprietor; and this class of persons is better off than any in Denmark. He purchases cheap (all present charges on the land taken into consideration), and his way of living being very economical. Indeed, I know of no people in any country who have more easily within their reach all that is really necessary for life than this class, which is very large in comparison with that of labourers. It is very rare that petty proprietors get parish relief. The amount of savings invested in the Savings Banks since the establishment in 1816 is upwards of 10,000,000 dollars, or 1,000,000*l.*, about 15*s.* per head for the whole population. Two millions of these dollars are invested at

Copenhagen,

Copenhagen, principally by servants, petty shopkeepers, and artisans a little better off than the rest. So large an unemployed sum proves how small the means are of industriously employing capital in this country, as likewise that the people are naturally saving.

Enclosure, No. 2.

THE POOR ESTABLISHMENT IN DENMARK PROPER.

(A.) for the Country.

THE country people may, as well as the rest of the inhabitants of the kingdom, be divided into two principal classes; the one comprehending those able and bound to provide for themselves by their own means or labour, consequently not needing support from the public, or their fellow citizens; the other, the really indigent, who are unable without assistance to procure for themselves and their families the most scanty means of supporting life.

The assistance rendered the indigent by the public or their fellow citizens for their maintenance, is generally called alms.

The laws and establishments of the country have provided for such really indigent people, either by admitting them into hospitals and poor houses, or affording them aid by compulsory or voluntary assessments on their fellow citizens, founded on law.

The Danish Law B. 2. 6. 19. treats of hospitals, and the regulations therein contained are common to the whole realm, including the cities and towns as well as the country. The greater number of hospitals have their own special foundations, and only few poor houses are found in the country districts, to which the said regulations (principally concerning those on a larger scale) are applicable.

Various opinions have of late been entertained as to the question "whether the poor, according to common law principles, are entitled to crave support, and the rich consequently in duty bound to afford the same by assessments." In England, where poor laws have long existed, Malthus, in his Essay on Population, endeavours to prove the perniciousness of this maxim, even to the class of individuals intended to be benefited thereby; considering that such individuals are thus induced rashly to intermarry; occasioning distress that can only be imperfectly relieved, and imposing a burden too heavy on their fellow citizens.

The legislature of our country has for a length of time considered it to be a sacred duty for the rich and those in easy circumstances to provide for the indigent (Ordinance of 6th October 1731), but it is only by recent ordinances that it is made incumbent on the parishes in the country and towns, to provide for the poor by contributions regulated by the respective poor committees.

According to the General Regulations (Reglement) for the poor establishments in the country, dated the 10th of June 1803, published by the Chancery under the sanction of his Majesty, the whole country is divided into parish districts, as many as there are parsons, each parish being bound to provide for its own poor. In extraordinary cases all the parishes contained in a bailiwick (amt) must contribute to support a single one; and certain expenses considered as relating to more than one district, and as too heavy for the same, are to be defrayed out of a general poor fund common to the whole bailiwick.

General Regulations.

The poor establishment for each parish is administered by a Committee. These committees are subordinate to a Poor Directory for each bailiwick, and the whole poor establishment is under the control of the Chancery.

Poor Committees.

It being incumbent on each parish to provide for the poor in the same, it is a matter of importance to decide what poor people shall be considered as belonging to each parish. In this respect the general regulations above mentioned declare (§ 6.) that any individual who for the last three successive years has resided in a parish, in the enjoyment of a lawful livelihood, shall be entitled to support, when becoming in want thereof. The same right is granted to those who have been born and educated in the parish, and who shall be residing there at the time they become in need of support, even although they may formerly have been domiciliated at another place. And likewise to those who during the last three years, notwithstanding occasional periods of absence, have upon the whole resided more at the parish in question than at any other place, and maintained themselves lawfully during their stay. The same privilege is extended to strangers, who may have established themselves in a parish with a reasonable prospect of maintaining themselves there, but who afterwards, through unforeseen misfortunes, have become indigent. (§ 8) grants the same right to persons craving immediate relief, provided they have not resided so long at another place in the Danish dominions as to be entitled to support there, or provided their birth-place cannot be ascertained. It is further enacted by a placard of 14th December 1810, that the aid a poor person is judged to be in need of, is to be given to him at the place he requires the same, even in the case that he has not resided there for three years, and that he shall not leave, much less be forcibly expelled from, the parish in which he is supported before it has been ascertained, either by correspondence with the respective magistracy, or by a resolution from the Chancery at what other place he ought to be provided for in future. The parish thus judged in duty bound to provide for him must thereupon reimburse the other parish that supported him ad interim for the amount of its disbursements. It is enacted by the same placard that no person not yet wanting support is to be turned out of the poor district in which he lives, under the pretext that he might likely in course of time become a burthen on the district. A poor person, having relations or friends willing and able to assist him, may be permitted to live with them, and there enjoy the pecuniary support allowed him from the parish to which he belongs.

Remarks.

1. A circular letter from the Chancery of 5th March 1803, declares, that every person able and in duty bound to contribute to the poor, shall, in case of his afterwards becoming in want, be entitled to support from the parish, without distinction as to religion.

2. It is a matter of course that wives, widows and children, who are in want, are entitled to support from the parish of the husband and father, so long as they do not reside at another parish. Natural children follow the mother in this respect.

The different classes.

The parish committees are to decide, if and how far a person demanding support of the poor establishment may be considered to be really in want of the same (§ 35). As a general rule, it is declared, (§ 5) that only such persons as are unable to earn their bread in a lawful manner by their own exertions, are to be considered qualified for support; but in respect to the degree and mode of support (§ 21) divides them into three classes.

1. Those who are so old and infirm that they are nearly totally unable to earn any thing for the first necessities of life.

2. Orphans, or the children of parents, whose mental disabilities, ill health, or bad morals are such that the rearing and education of the children ought not to be left to them.

3. Families, or single persons, from some cause or other, unable to earn as much as will barely support their own lives and that of their children.

Members of the Committee.

The parish committee is to consist of the parson, the police-master of the place, one of the most considerable landholders, and three or four of the most respectable parishioners, according to the extent of the parish. (§ 2.)

The Parson.

It is in particular incumbent on the parson,—

1st. Minutely to examine the poor applying to him for support, and to arrange an interim provision for those in need thereof; for which purpose, he shall be furnished with requisite advances from the poor fund of the parish to defray running expenses. (§§ 16, 17, 44, 45.)

2d. To inform the district physician when any of the poor require his assistance in case of illness (§ 19, 20); and see that the physician's directions are duly followed.

3d. To publish from the pulpit the names of the persons appointed members of the committee, and admonish the congregation to support them in their functions (§ 27); and likewise make known from the pulpit when the committee holds a meeting. (§ 30.)

4th. To keep the records of the committee, for which purpose he shall be provided with a protocol, at the expense of the parish, authorized by the high bailiff (amtmand.) (§ 32.)

5th. At the end of every year to lay before the committee a detailed plan for the provision of the poor for the ensuing year, agreeably to a Schedule sent by the Poor Directory for the bailiwick; containing a list of all persons entitled to support; his opinion as to what ought to be allowed every individual; and in what manner the same ought to be assessed on the parishioners; and, finally, a list of those that have applied for support, but who were not considered as entitled thereto. (§ 34.)

6th. To publish from the pulpit the plan for the provision of the poor, and cause the same to be sent to the overseers of the parish, to be by them made known to the rest of the parishioners. (§ 36, 38.)

7th. To keep account of the receipts and disbursements of the poor fund, and reply to the remarks and observations made regarding the same.

The District Judge.

The District Judge, being a member of committees in all the parishes under his jurisdiction, is to meet in the same, as often as his other official duties permit; and, when he is prevented, he shall appoint one of the overseers to meet for him.

The Landholder, to be a member of the committee, is chosen by the high bailiff, and some other respectable landholders.

The

The rest of the members, being three or four of the parishioners, are to be chosen by the parson, the police-master, and principal landholder, and, after three years service, by all the members of the committee. It is their duty to impart to the rest of the members all elucidations required; to assist the parson and police-master in executing the resolutions of the committee; to collect and deliver to the parson all voluntary contributions, &c.

The committee, as a body, has to decide the provision for each poor person; and how, and how much each individual parishioner has to contribute towards this provision.

According to the general regulations, (§ 12,) the members of the first class shall be provided with,

- (a) Food.
- (b) The necessary clothes.
- (c) Lodgings and fuel.
- (d) Medical assistance in case of illness.

Concerning the food no invariable rule is laid down; but it is left to the respective poor committees to decide how the parishioners are to deliver what is required, whether in bread or other victuals (which ought to be conveyed to those that are too old or weak to fetch the same themselves), or in grain or money, or otherwise providing for the poor in the manner most expedient.

By a letter from the Chancery of 24 November 1804, a resolution passed by the Poor Directory for the bailiwick of Soroë has been approved of, by which it is stipulated that the provision for the poor throughout the whole bailiwick is to be regulated in this way: that its members shall, in as far as they cannot be lodged and boarded in the houses of respectable inhabitants of the parish, and when circumstances do not require an exception from the rule, enjoy the support allowed them in bread, grits, flour and other victuals, according to the local situation of the place; as also in clothes, fuel, lodging and other necessities, which are to be delivered in kind by the inhabitants of the parish, or purchased by the committee for account of the poor's fund; whereas the support in money is to be limited to a mere trifle: and it is supposed that this mode of providing is most in harmony with the intentions of the legislature. As to lodgings and fuel, it is in general stipulated that the same shall be procured for the poor belonging to the first class, by lodging them in convenient houses.

In respect to poor children, it is enjoined (§ 13) that the parish committee shall lodge them in some house or other, in order to be reared and educated under the inspection of the committee, until they can go into service or be otherwise provided for; and this inspection of the committee shall continue until the children are confirmed. They shall frequent the school from their sixth or seventh year, and be instructed gratis, and be provided with the necessary books and writing materials (§ 41, 42, 43.) The maximum of the term for supporting children must be their eighteenth year.

Concerning the poor belonging to the 3d class, it is enjoined (§ 14.) that they shall so far receive aid as to insure them a supply of the first wants of nature, without which life cannot be supported, and recourse must be had to begging; but it must be made a matter of necessity for them to work for their maintenance, as much as they can. Pains must be taken to procure the labour suitable to their strength, and, in as far as possible, at the common price; and it is only when this will not suffice that they are to receive support, which is not to be given in money, but in food, clothes, fuel, &c.

The committees are in duty bound to provide lodging for the poor who are in want of the same, either by building houses for them, or, when this cannot be done, by quartering them with the parishioners, till other measures can be adopted.

As to the sick and infirm of all the three classes, it is enjoined, that the parson shall, when a poor person requires medical aid and attendance, give him a note to the district physician, which he is himself to go with and deliver, if he is able to walk so far, but if not, he shall be conveyed thither, that the physician may be able to examine his situation, and give his opinion in writing to the parson. If the sick person is not in a situation to be conveyed to the physician, the parson shall send a messenger, at the cost of the poor fund, to the physician with a letter, describing as correctly as possible the state of the sick person. Should the physician then find that his personal presence is necessary, he must let the parson know the time when it will be convenient for him to attend the said person, and conveyance back and forward shall be furnished to him, in rotation, by such of the parishioners as keep horses and carriages employed for farm use. The physician is to receive a remuneration from the poor fund of three marks per visit. The parson, or, if he is prevented, the member of the committee living nearest the sick person shall see that the prescriptions of the physician are duly observed, and that the sick person is properly attended to. If any person should be reduced to indigence in consequence of long illness, the committee shall support him until his circumstances are recovered again. If a sick person belongs to another district, he shall not be removed until such can be done without injuring his health.

Ways and means.

The committee shall likewise provide for sick servants, in so far as their master or mistress are unable or unwilling to do so.

A poor person, dying without relations, able and willing to defray the expenses of interment, shall be buried at the expense of the poor fund; which shall be entitled to receive reimbursement from the effects of the deceased in as far as they will go. If the effects fetch a sum above the amount expended, the surplus shall fall to the poor fund, unless the heirs indemnify it for what has been expended on the deceased. (§ 23, 24.)

The committees are authorized to punish the poor in case of disobedience or misbehaviour, either by a public reprimand or by imprisonment; but not without previously consulting the master of police.

In respect to the second principal duty of the parish committees, to determine who shall contribute to the expense of the poor, and in what proportion each individual is bound to do so: § 35 contains the general rule, that it being first ascertained how much each poor person is to receive, in what the same consists, and when and how it is to be distributed, the committee shall then decide what and how much each parishioner has to contribute according to his hartkorn,* and his other means, from whatever sources derived. The proprietors of country seats or villas are also to contribute for the time they may reside at them. It has since been enacted that servants also contribute; of which more hereafter. As soon as the committee have drawn up a plan, it is to be sanctioned by the High Bailiff or Poor Directory for the bailiwick, and published by the parson in the manner aforesaid. If any of the parishioners should find occasion to complain of being overcharged, they shall be at liberty to do so, by representing the case to the bailiff; but till he has decided they shall comply with the plan. In order to encourage the parishioners to give voluntarily more than the law has enacted, the parson and other members of the committee shall publish the amount of what each is willing to contribute.

Although the general rule is that the poor shall receive aid in kind, still there may be certain cases where pecuniary relief cannot be avoided, and the committee must frequently have occasion for pecuniary means. For this purpose it is enacted, that every parish shall have its poor chest, the income of which shall consist in—

1. The yearly contributions in money, either voluntary, or as fixed by the committee.
2. The revenue of a poor-box, circulating in the church on certain holidays.
3. Voluntary donations, on selling real property. (§ 44. 46.)

The court officers shall not record conveyances of real property in the books of registry, without a certificate from the respective parsons, that this gratuity has been paid both by the seller and purchaser.

4. A contribution for each male servant in the parish, originally two marks yearly, and for each female servant, originally 20 skillings yearly, but now in some parishes more than doubled.

Meetings of the Committees.

The committee shall have four meetings during each year, for the purpose of deliberating on the support of the poor, and determining what contributions may be necessary for that object; and due notice shall be given from the pulpits of the times of their meetings. At these meetings the individuals receiving parish support are bound to appear when called; and in the one which takes place in the beginning of December, a plan for the maintenance of the poor during the ensuing year shall be produced by the parson, and deliberated on by the committee, to be afterwards sanctioned by the high bailiff, or poor directory for the bailiwick. If a parish is situated in more than one bailiwick, the plan and accounts must be sent to each, in so far as they may relate to them.

The Poor Directory.

The Poor Directory for the bailiwick consists of the bailiff, the collector of the King's taxes, the dean, and two respectable and considerable landholders, appointed by the Chancellor. The bishop of the diocese has also a seat in the directory, when his other functions permit him to meet. (§ 3.) To this directory are to be sent complaints against the Poor Committee, either in respect to the contributions imposed or to other matters. The directory has also to examine, revise, decide and give acquittance to all accounts relating to the poor establishment, (§ 26. 29. 39. 61.) and shall yearly report to the Chancery the condition of the same, in all the districts of the bailiwick, and in dubious cases shall require a resolution from this department of Government (§ 4.)

General Poor Chest.

The collector of the King's taxes shall take care of the general poor-chest for the bailiwick, and render account to the directory of the receipts and disbursements (§ 47, 50). The intention of this chest is to defray such expenses as do not relate to a single parish only, and

* A ton of hartkorn carries in Zealand, Funen, and the better parts of Jutland, from six to twenty acres of land, according to the quality of the soil.

and in extraordinary cases to give relief to a particular parish (§ 9, 10, 49). The revenues of this chest consist in—

1. A contribution, called Herreds casse penge, to be collected by the overseers of the parishes.
2. Fines awarded by sentences of the courts of justice, or by the reconciling courts.
3. One quarter per cent. on all private property (moveables) sold in the country at public auction.
4. A small contribution from every servant in the bailiwick.

The Poor Directory assembles twice a year, but the high bailiff may call together the members oftener, if business requires, and he is authorized to despatch such business as cannot be delayed; but he shall at the next meeting inform the directory of what he may have done.

The poor having thus been provided for, begging is prohibited, and declared to be liable to punishment. In the general regulations, (§ 62,) begging is thus defined: all persons walking about, asking and receiving alms, in consequence of words and gestures, or by exhibiting infirmity or decrepitude, shall be considered as beggars; and (§ 63) permits all and every one to detain such persons, and deliver them to the nearest parish overseer, who is to take down the deposition of the person thus detained, and that of the detainer, and other circumstances, and thereafter carry the former to the police-master, together with the said depositions, for further investigation. If it is deemed necessary the committee shall be permitted to engage one or two persons, ad interim, for discovering and apprehending beggars. They shall receive wages, and two marks per mile out of the poor box.

In adjudging punishment for begging, it is to be taken into consideration whether the mendicant was in need of support or not. In the first case he shall, the first time, be imprisoned fourteen days, the second time four weeks, and the third time work for a year in the house of correction. For every time the offence is committed, the punishment to be doubled (§ 64). But if the mendicant is able to work, and thus not entitled to support from the parish, he shall the first time be imprisoned four weeks, the second time eight weeks, and the third time work for two years in the house of correction, which last punishment is to be doubled for every time the offence is committed. When the term of punishment is expired, the beggar is to be sent to his home under inspection, and his travelling expenses by land in every parish through which he passes to be paid by the poor-chest of the bailiwick in which the parish lies; but his conveyance by water to be paid by the parish bound to receive him. Sick beggars and poor people not belonging to the parish, shall not be sent away before they are able to undertake the journey, and the parish in which they are, shall provide them with medical assistance, &c., and bury them if they die. If children are found begging with the consent of their parents, the latter shall be punished as if they had begged themselves; but if they beg without the consent of the parents, the children shall be warned and put under surveyance, and if they continue to beg they shall be punished with flogging.

A master of a vessel or ferryman, carrying a poor person not provided with a passport from the magistracy, shall at his own expense carry such poor person back to the place from which he came.

Any person lodging a poor person for more than one night, without giving in a report to the overseer of the parish, shall pay a fine of three marks for every night.

An overseer of a parish who, without permission of the police master, releases a beggar under arrest, shall pay a fine of four rigsbank dollars. But persons employed for taking up beggars, if they release one from detention without a proper warrant, shall be imprisoned for eight days on bread and water.

Any person neglecting to furnish carriage conveyance to poor people or beggars, when ordered to do so according to their rotation, shall pay a fine of one rigsbank dollar, besides the expenses.

All fines stipulated in the general regulations shall fall to the poor-box of the bailiwick; and all cases concerning transgressions shall be treated as matters of police.

In order to give an idea of the magnitude of the contributions and supplies in two parishes, forming a parsonage, with a population of about 1,400 souls, the following extract is made from the plan of support for 1833,

CONTRIBUTION.

Bread	- -	3,530 lbs.	Rye	- -	29 barrels.
Grits	- -	55 bushels, Danish.	Barley	- -	27 $\frac{1}{2}$ barrels.
Flour	- -	77 bushels.	Money	- -	367 rigsbank dollars.

In general the contribution in money only amounts to the half of the above sum; but in consequence of an underbalance arising chiefly from an epidemical disease a couple of years ago, it was doubled for this year. Of this contribution a single peasant (farmer) bears, bread, 103 lbs.; grits, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ bushels; flour, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ bushels, or the value thereof in grain; money.

independent of extraordinary and occasional support to them and others.

The contributions and supplies may be and are probably less in other parsonages, this one being rather burdensome from local circumstances.

(B.) for the Metropolis, the Cities and Towns.

Is nearly regulated on the same principles, but with this remarkable difference that the contributions are generally levied and distributed in money, instead of in kind: cooked victuals are however sometimes allowed the members of hospitals and poor-houses as well as to some other persons. In the metropolis and in several other cities and towns there are considerable workhouses, where the poor able to work are constrained to labour, according to ability.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS occasioned by the QUERY:

“THE practical workings and effects of the actual system upon the comfort, character, and condition of the inhabitants?”

Benevolent as the Danish poor system will appear from what is above stated, it is generally objected to it that the too great facility of gaining admittance, particularly to the third class, encourages sloth and indolence, especially in the country where the means are wanted to establish workhouses, the only sure way of controlling the activity of those supported. It is however supposed that the funds accumulated in the general poor chests for each bailiwick, and which in some of them are considerable, will in course of time be partly employed for erecting workhouses.

It is further objected to the present system, that it already begins to fall too heavy on the contributors, and that in course of time, with the constant increase of population, it will go on to press still more severely on them, inasmuch as their number and means do not by any means increase in a ratio equal to the augmentation of the number wanting support.

Denmark having no considerable colonies has no opportunity of getting rid of a part of her surplus population by encouraging emigration, which when available would certainly seem to be the best method of providing for those persons who are unable to find the means of subsistence in their own country, and who at the same time are able to work, and to bear the hardships of a long voyage and change of climate.

N. B.—The reader is respectfully requested to observe that by the term Directory is meant the central, or general poor committee for the whole bailiwick, to which the parish committees are subordinate.

Inclosure, No. 3.

LETTER to Peter Browne, Esq. &c. &c.

My dear Sir,

Frederikskilde, 10th September 1833.

THE Report on the Danish poor system requested by you was sent to Mr. G. Fenwick before I had the pleasure of receiving your esteemed letter of the 6th instant. To the additional queries therein contained, I now subjoin the following answers:

Question

Question 1. The effects produced by the present Poor Law system as contrasted with the effects when you had no such in operation?—Answer. Before the introduction of the present Poor Law system, the distress was much greater, and begging of the most rapacious and importunate kind was quite common in the country. This was not only a heavy burthen on the peasantry, but was in other respects the cause of intolerable annoyance to them; for the beggars when their demands were not satisfied had recourse to insolence and threats, nay even to acts of criminal vengeance. This is no longer the case, and in so far, therefore, the present system has been beneficial.

Q. 2. What feelings are generated by it in the hearts of those who confer as well as receive the poor-rate, whether it has dried up the fountain of private benevolence?—A. The contributions are generally yielded with good-will, but received with coolness and indifference, for it is no amiable trait in the character of our common people that they are never satisfied, but whenever they receive any thing always expect more. Although the contributions, when compared with the means of the contributors, are in many places heavy, yet private charity is very common. Begging, notwithstanding the severe prohibitions against it, is still carried on, particularly in scanty years. The beggar rarely leaves the peasant's door without receiving his morsel of bread or something better, and the peasantry are uniformly averse from lending their assistance to arrest or detain beggars. During the epidemic of 1831, private benevolence was very extensively shown to the numerous sufferers, whose necessities greatly exceeded the relieving powers of the poor committees. It may here be observed, that the general poor chests for the bailiwicks did not in general grant the aid which was reasonably expected, and which the strictest interpretation of the law would have sanctioned.

Q. 3. Whether it tends to the increase or decrease of poverty; whether it is considered to be a tax on industry, or a premium on indolence; what effect it produces on the feeling of independence of character?—A. It is a fact that poverty now appears in less striking features than it did before the introduction of the Poor Law system. This may, however, proceed from causes with which that system has no connexion; for example, from the increased wealth of the country in general, from improvements in agriculture, from the large additions made to the quantity of arable land which have been in a ratio greatly exceeding that of the increased population. If the clergyman, who is and will always be the leading member of the poor committee, was able to combine with his other heavy duties, a faithful observance of the rules prescribed for him in the management of the poor, I am of opinion that the system would neither be a tax on industry nor a premium on indolence. But it rarely happens that the clergyman can bestow the requisite attention on the discharge of this part of his duty, and therefore it is not to be denied that the present Poor Law (not from any defect inherent in the system, but merely from faulty management) does occasionally act as a tax on industry and a premium on idleness. In connexion with this part of the subject it may be remarked, that many of the clergy are young and inexperienced, wanting the local and personal knowledge so essential for the proper administration of the system. Others, again, are old and weak. The frequent change of clergymen is also attended with injurious effects.

Q. 4. Whether it has weakened or strengthened the natural ties between the higher and lower orders, &c.?—A. The actual system, wherever it has been ably and duly managed, has undoubtedly strengthened the said ties, as the Danish nation in general has a high sense of the benevolent intentions of Government, and willingly meets the same without murmur or discontent. But it is a common fault in this country that the duties imposed on its public servants are greater than they can satisfactorily perform, and to this general remark, the administrators of the Poor Law form no exception. Hence the system, as I have already hinted in my answer to No. 3, is in many places very indifferently conducted, and where this is the case, the effect has been to weaken in a very great degree the natural ties between the higher and lower orders.

POOR LAWS OF DENMARK.

Count Holstein's Statement and Opinion of the System of Danish Poor Laws.

By an ordinance of the 5th of July 1803, the support of the poor was made obligatory in the provinces of Denmark, and by which each parish is obliged to support such destitute persons as have had a dwelling there for three years, unless such persons had lived in another parish for three years at a later period, and by which a right to be supported there had been subsequently acquired; in case, however, that a poor person has not dwelt for three years in any particular parish, then the parish in which he was born is bound to his support. Children until 18 years of age have a similar right wherever their father had possessed or acquired it. The support of the poor, however, is limited strictly to such things as are absolutely necessary for the support of life, and are supplied only in the degree to make up what the pauper is himself unable to earn or procure for his existence.

The cost of medical attendance and medicines are defrayed by the parish. The care of the poor in each parish devolves upon a commission, consisting of the clergyman, who is the president, the principal landed proprietor, the police master, and some peasants. In the month of December of each year, this commission is obliged to exhibit a plan setting forth who the poor of the parish are who will need parish relief in the course of the following year, and the quantity and nature of the support which each pauper may require, and how much each person in the parish is to contribute towards carrying the plan into execution. This plan or proposal for the support of the poor for the coming year must be made public in the parish, and if any one finds cause of complaint, he is to complain to the high bailiff of the province, who will judge of and decide upon its merits. The execution of the project devolves on the clergyman, together with a few peasants, who are agents for the poor. There must be, however, four meetings of the Commissioners in the course of each year, when an exposée must be made of all extraordinary receipts and disbursements; the clergyman has the power of calling extraordinary meetings in case of any extraordinary emergency. The strict rule is, that the poor shall receive provisions, not money; the provisions afforded are bread, butter, bacon, cheese, wood and turf. Free lodging is likewise given.

The poor are divided into three classes; first, such as can earn nothing, and therefore must be supported in toto; second, children; and third, those who require partial assistance. Besides to such, aid is afforded to those who are suffering under sickness, or in consequence of accidents, also sometimes small loans are advanced for a short time. All the property of a person deriving assistance from the parish is noted down, and when he dies it becomes the property of the poor funds. The yearly account for the support of the poor from the several parishes composing the bailiwick, is sent at the expiration of each year to the high bailiff and a court of direction or provincial commission, consisting of the high bailiff, the commissioners of taxes, the dean and two landed proprietors, who have the revision of and decision upon the correctness and propriety of the accounts and statements.

Besides the parish poor fund, there is a provincial poor fund, which embraces the poor of all the parishes composing the bailiwick; it is destined to meet the deficiencies when any of the parishes falls short of the means necessary for the support of the poor belonging to them, also affording means to relieve such distress as may be occasioned by extraordinary occurrences or accidents. From this fund is likewise supplied the means of supporting at different institutions those who are mad, blind, deaf and dumb, &c.; also poor-houses or houses of industry are built or purchased from its funds. All beggary is interdicted, and it is the duty of the police to seize all beggars and vagrants, and to send them back to the parish on which they have a legal claim for support. In case they are foreigners they are conveyed beyond the boundary of the country. Wherever, and under whatever circumstances a poor man falls sick, he must be supported by the parish where it occurs, but his own parish is responsible for the cost attendant on his recovery, or for his burial should he die. Poor persons who are disposed to work but cannot find it, the parish poor commission is bound to supply it.

ABSTRACT of Count Holstein's Opinion on the Danish Poor Laws.

ALTHOUGH it is undoubted that the very first duty which religion enjoins is to support and comfort the poor, it still is a question which involves considerable doubt, whether such provision should be made obligatory by law; and although no Government should be indifferent as to the discharge of religious duties, still it is disastrous when a Government will meddle in legislation, where those subject to it have no need of their interference.

An obligatory Poor Law, as ours, involves the following serious disadvantages:

1st. The dread of poverty is diminished, and he who is half-poor works less instead of more, so that he speedily becomes a complete pauper. Those who are young and capable of labour are less economical, always having the poor rate in view, as a resource against want; likewise marriages are contracted with much less forethought, or consideration as to consequences.

2d. The morality of the poor man suffers, for he looks upon his provision as a right, for which he, therefore, need not be thankful; and, 3d, the morality of the rich man suffers, for the natural moral relation between him and the poor man has become completely severed; there is no place left for the exercise of his benevolence; being obliged to give, he does it with reluctance, and thus is the highest principle of charitable action, Christian love, exposed to great danger of destruction.

4th. As the clergyman of the parish is the president of the Poor Committee, he becomes involved in transactions peculiarly unsuited to his sacred calling, sometimes even compelled to resort to the extremity of distraint to compel his own parishioners to pay the allotted proportions, and thus does the moral influence of him, who should be a picture of the God of love, become every day less and less powerful.

It appears to me, that in this country an obligatory Poor Law might have been avoided had the Government encouraged the establishment of voluntary benevolent societies in the parishes (where the clergyman should always have a voice), the especial business of which should have been to look after the poor, who might have easily been supported by the voluntary contributions of their respective communities; always, however, with the understanding, that in cases of extraordinary distress or difficulty, such societies could look to the Government to lend a helping hand. However, the obligatory system has now been at work too long to escape from it without considerable difficulty.

Pastor Gruntrigg's OPINION on Danish POOR LAWS.

Honoured Sir,

WE have been much lauded in Germany for our system of Poor Laws ; but so, one might say, " we have our reward." From Englishmen, at least, we never can expect praise, when they learn, by our own confession, that the very thing for which we have been lauded is precisely what in England a sorrowful experience has shown to be a nuisance that ought peremptorily to be got rid of. As a good patriot therefore, I could wish that our poor system had never been mentioned in England ; but since we must in this matter also confess our weakness, I can only take the opportunity of your having asked my opinion to assure you, that I am far from being the only one who sees clearly that we stand much in need of a better example from our very experienced and ingenious kinsmen of England than the poor tax.

You may easily suppose that a man whose calling and delight it is to preach the Gospel to the poor, does not grudge them the crumbs that may fall from the rich man's table. But although we, who but in vain have attempted to make a figure in fabrics and manufactures, are not so ill off in regard to the poor as the "great proficient in every art," still we must confess that our attempt to put in practice the impossibility of setting every thing to rights in this world has, on our small scale, had the same unfortunate result as it had on the large scale over the water. Men are very apt to imagine, particularly in our days, that it is an easy matter to manage every thing in this world better than God Almighty himself ; but constant experience shows them, when they make the trial, that as a result of all their labour, they only spoil what is good and make worse what is bad ; and most especially is this the case when they attempt to distribute the gifts of fortune better than Providence has done, for instead of thereby making many well off at the expense of the rich, they only make a greater number and a worse set of paupers ; so that riches are only rendered more invidiously conspicuous, and more an object of hate, and quite incompetent to relieve the general distress. If people persist in remaining blind to this important truth, they will certainly one day or other see a general distribution of riches ; but it will only be when the poor have become so numerous and so reprobate that nothing will longer suffice for them, and it will only be to see riches again amassed and abused in a manner worse than before. Every compulsory law, therefore, for the support of the poor, is a great blunder which must always be attended with unfavourable, and possibly in the course of time, with most ruinous effects ; inasmuch as it undermines the right of property, and fosters that worst enemy of civil society, which undoubtedly is the propensity to live a life of indolence at our neighbour's expense. All the fine sentiment which on such occasions is generally adduced, suffices not to fill one hungry belly ; still less will it be able to support the state when by its own exertions it shall have reduced to beggary all its industrious, well-minded, smaller citizens who are its true pillars, and shall have filled the country with lazy miscreants who will not even condescend to beg, but who demand support as a right, and who are likely to be of opinion that if at any time they must employ their hands for any other purpose than cramming their bellies and stealing, the most profitable use they can put them to is to murder the few remaining rich.

I know very well that the question has been put, whether it does not follow as a matter of necessity that a Christian state supports its own poor ? Now, whether people are aware of it or not, they are in this case only using an empty play of words as an argument in a serious matter ; for though I am very well aware that in a pure Christian state, that is to say, in a state composed exclusively of real Christians, there would be no beggars, yet neither would there be in such a state any sluggards, spendthrifts, usurers or the like ; and as in our present states we have but too many of all such, it would be the greatest folly to apply to them, merely because they have the appellation of Christian, what could only be applied to a state such as none of ours is, and such as no power or wisdom can make them to be.

But is it not a matter of the utmost importance to the state that pauperism should not increase to such an extent that the country becomes overrun with beggars, and the temptation to have recourse to unlawful means of livelihood becomes almost invincible ?

Yes, to be sure. But when common sense teaches the maxim and experience confirms it, that compulsory laws for the maintenance of the poor only serve to increase their number, and to hasten a development of things which the state has so much reason to dread, is it not clear as day, that we must not choose as our protection against danger that which not only increases it when present, but necessarily invites its approach.

The greatest legislator the sun ever shone upon, I mean Moses, has in this respect as well as in so many others, given us an example worthy of all imitation, if we would only learn to understand and apply it rightly. In the law, for example, he paid all possible attention to the interest of the poor, but he enacted no punishment for the rich, who notwithstanding should suffer them to beg and starve ; that is to say, he made the support of the poor a church law, for the observance of which men were not answerable to their temporal magistrate, but only to God and their conscience. This example has also in former times, as we know, been imitated generally in places where Christianity was introduced, and in none more than England and Denmark, as the numerous hospitals and other charitable institutions institutions sufficiently testify. Now, however insufficient the ancient system may appear, particularly at a time when the influence of Christianity both on rich and poor is at the lowest ebb, there will at all events never be any other good counsel against the spreading of pauperism and its frightful effects, than that the State exerts itself by the help of its own means to find work for the unemployed, to give education to helpless children, and to procure asylums for cripples, old and sick; leaving the rest to private beneficence and to Christianity, whose influence in this respect it is evidently good policy to look upon as invaluable, and to give it as free play as possible. Such private and Christian beneficence will no doubt be also in many ways abused, but the State is not on that account hated, nor can the worthless build with insolent defiance on what they know depends on the free will of the giver. On the other hand, experience shows that neither Christian benevolence will be exhausted, nor the natural feelings blunted by the abuse which worthless individuals may make thereof; but that both these evils take place to a frightful extent, where the support of the poor is made a burden on the district, so that even parents and children, in a way formerly unheard of, withdraw from each other the help which they could, and under other circumstances would, nay must yield to the tie of consanguinity.

I am therefore certain that the greatest improvement we could make on our poor system, would be to abrogate entirely all our high-praised ordinance relating to it, and so let the matter find its own level; for the first advance to the better is to arrest all progression to the worse, and in our little country, which is chiefly inhabited by agriculturists, situated on small portions of land, it would by no means exceed the ability of the State to effect what is necessary to secure work to such of the unemployed as wished it; while on the other hand, it is quite clear that we have no right to send any one to the House of Correction, merely because he is poor, and may perhaps steal to-morrow; we must first wait till he has actually stolen.

It is not to be denied that the problem is much more intricate, and of much more difficult solution, where the landed properties are large, and the manufactories numerous; but in such countries the resources are also more abundant. In such a country colonization would undoubtedly be one of the most effectual means of arresting the progress to ruin. It being well understood, however, that it is to be colonization and not transportation, as if poverty were a crime; and moreover that the expenses of the same be not, in whole or in part, laid upon the already overburdened districts, which themselves were in want of support, but are supplied from voluntary subscriptions, or from the funds of the State. There can besides be no doubt, that in every country the only way to induce the rich to make a real sacrifice for the poor is to ask it once for all, so that they have the prospect of thereby buying themselves free from daily importunity and impending danger; in all other cases they will manage to shove the burden on the half poor, who by that means become wholly so.

Peter Browne, Esq.

Mr. Thaloman's OPINION ON A REPORT ON POOR LAW SYSTEM of Denmark.

I HAVE the honour to reply to your highly-esteemed letter, in which you request from me a view of the system of the Poor Laws in Denmark.

My reply shall be as concise as possible; but, if you wish for a more detailed statement, I shall be happy to give it to you; as I am well acquainted with the subject, particularly in as far as regards the country districts, where it has occupied my personal attention during a period of 15 years.

I.

The King, who is absolute, can make any law he pleases for the good of the country.

Founded on this principle, the first Ordinance for the management of the poor appeared in the year 1798.

The dues, out of which by degrees a poor fund has been amassed, were for the bailiwicks,

- | | | | | | | | | |
|-------------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|--------------------|
| 1. Each farm | - | - | - | - | - | - | 4 | skillings, yearly. |
| Each half ditto | - | - | - | - | - | - | 2 | do. |
| Each farm servant | - | - | - | - | - | - | 2 | do. |

2. Uncertain, 1½ per cent. on the amount of all auctions. All these dues are paid into the treasuries of the bailiwicks.

During the first 20 years, the disbursements of the poor fund were not great. But immediately on the lapse of that period, there was all at once to be seen the effects of the parcelling system introduced and operating in full vigour in the period between 1782 and 1806, and subsequently continuing.

The estates of the nobility, and the larger properties belonging to the farming class, where formerly only one family lived, are now perhaps split among from 50 to 100 families. On such diminished properties, it was often only the first purchasers that could have a livelihood; for such purchasers generally commenced with capitals so small, that though they might be sufficient for themselves, there was not nearly enough for their children.

Management of the Poor in the Country.

One or more parishes, according to the pleasure of the high bailiff, make a Poor District. In each district there are Commissioners, consisting of,—

1. The parson.
2. The parish officer.
3. Two or three farmers.
4. The police-master.
- 5 & 6. The high bailiff and dignified clergy, viz. the bishops and provosts.

1. The first four make out (every quarter) an accurate list of the poor in the district.
2. These Commissioners draw up a scheme of how much each inhabitant of the parish is to pay in proportion to his fortune.

When once this poor-rate has received the sanction of higher authority, the sums fixed in it are (in case of refusal to pay) enforced by legal means.

That is to say, the effects of the person in default are first appraised and then sold at public auction.

Whoever has resided three years in a district is entitled to apply for parish relief.

When the commission recognises any one as entitled to parish relief, he receives, according to circumstances,

1. Free lodging and fuel.
2. Clothing and food.
3. School instruction for his children, and medical aid when he or his family may be sick.

On the other hand, the poor person is obliged to labour for the benefit of the parish, as far as his strength will allow. When he will not work, he is punished with confinement on bread and water.

The Towns

have their own poor administration, which is supported by the wealthier part of the community in the same way as in the country, partly by voluntary contributions, and partly by annual fixed poor-rates.

In the towns, the commissaries, consisting of the burgomaster and several citizens, fix what each individual has to pay in proportion to his fortune.

Hitherto these institutions have had a salutary and beneficial effect on the nation, inasmuch as many thousand individuals have been prevented from strolling about as beggars, and many thousand children have received a good education, and have grown up to be useful and orderly citizens. Neither as yet have any remarkable symptoms of dissatisfaction appeared among the wealthier classes. But we cannot be without some apprehension for the future, since the poor-rates have been augmented to such a degree that it would be very difficult to collect larger contributions than those now paid. And as sufficient attention has not been paid to this circumstance, that the farmers are continually building small cottages, in which poor people establish themselves, since the Government have been unwilling to throw any restraint on marriages between poor persons; there seems reason to fear, that in the lapse of another period of 20 years, the poor in many districts will to such a degree have multiplied their numbers, that the present system will yield no adequate means for their support.

In the towns much embarrassment is already felt, the poor having increased in them to a much greater extent than in the country.

A new census will be commenced on the 18th February. When the results are made known, we shall then have it in our power to say exactly how many poor persons there are in the whole country.

All the taxes of a considerable merchant of Dram in Norway, who owns eight trading vessels actually employed, amounted during last year to not more than the school and poor rates of one large farm in the heath district which you visited last year.

LETTER from Peter Browne, Esq. to the Right hon. Viscount Palmerston, G. C. B. &c. &c. &c.

My Lord,

Copenhagen, 5th April 1834.

I FORWARD several documents relating to the Poor Laws of this country, consisting of Mr. Macgregor's valuable communications, a Report from the Danish Chancery, and a statement of the principal charitable institutions of Denmark, drawn up by a French diplomatic agent at Copenhagen, in the year 1823.

One point I shall merely remark, which is, that all persons acknowledge that landed property has increased in value in this country, that the population has been very nearly stationary for the last few years, and yet that the poor rate is rather increasing: an acknowledgment which necessarily involves the fact, that notwithstanding an increase of means to pay the poor rate from an increased demand for labour, in consequence of more capital and industry being now than previously employed in the cultivation of land, still the charge for the poor is increasing, and that the increase of poverty increases with the increase of industry and its consequent wealth.

Surely this at once shows that the system is working banefully. I myself know that the agriculturist has no harder creditor than the claimant on the poor rate; that the moral relation between rich and poor has been injured by the system; that private charity has in a great measure ceased to flow; and that every day the outcry against the system, from first to last, becomes louder and louder.

From Mr. Macgregor's Report we gather, that as often as the "authorities' attention is withdrawn by affairs of higher importance" (which must always be the case) "serious inconvenience results;" that under such and such circumstances, which exist, and which must not only continue to exist, but must increase, "the country must gradually sink under the pressure of an insupportable burden, and finish by becoming a vast receptacle of paupers;" that "the feeling of reluctance to have recourse to parochial relief has been gradually diminished in this country since the introduction of Poor Laws. The poor have accustomed themselves more and more to consider the poor rates in the light of a fund, from which they are legally entitled to draw relief in all cases of distress," and under other circumstances, unavoidable and irremediable as it strikes me, "the natural consequence will be, that the lower classes throw themselves on the poor rates, and that pauperism gradually will overrun the country." If the advocates of the Poor Laws are compelled to allow all this, I leave it to your Lordship to judge, whether the disease professed to be cured, if left to itself, can be productive of greater evils than those inseparable from the attempt to remove it.

I have now to apologize to your Lordship for the time I have taken in bringing my Report to a close, and to collect the information bearing upon it. I have done my best, and must now look to your Lordship's kindness to forgive any defects which may appear in the information I have supplied, or my attempts to throw light upon it.

I have the honour to be, &c.

REPORT* upon the DANISH POOR LAWS, their Administration and Operation.

Francis C. Macgregor, Esq. to Sir George Shee, Bart. &c.

Sir,

Elsinore, February 23d, 1834.

IN compliance with your Circular of the 30th November, I have the honour of submitting to you, for the information of the Poor Law Commissioners, the following Report upon the Poor Laws, the condition of the poor, and the legal and charitable provision made for their support in the Kingdom of Denmark, to serve as an illustration of the answers to the questions contained in the annexed Paper.

The Danish Poor Laws acknowledge it as a principle, that the country is under the obligation to afford relief to its poor, while at the same time they require a return in labour from those that are able to work. These laws are embodied in the following Regulations, namely:

1. Regulation for the relief of the Poor in the City of Copenhagen and its suburbs, dated 10th April 1799;
2. Regulation for the relief of the Poor in the Town Districts, dated 5th July 1803;
3. Regulations for the relief of the Poor in the agricultural districts, of the same date; which laws have been revised and amended by different Royal ordinances published at various periods.

I shall confine myself, in my Report, to the two latter regulations, and refer you, with regard to the former, to the Report of Mr. Browne, His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen, who, from his station and greater means of obtaining information, is better enabled also to convey an adequate idea of the working of the system than I am. In the first instance I shall treat of the administration of the Poor Laws in general, and of the persons appointed to distribute that relief.

Each market town, or kiöbstæd, (of which there are sixty-five in Denmark) constitutes a separate Poor District, in which are also included those inhabitants of the adjacent country who belong to the parish of that town. In the country each parish forms a Poor District.¹

The Poor Laws are administered in the market towns by a Board of Commissioners, consisting of the curate, of one of the magistrates (if any), of the provost (byefoged) in his quality of policeman, and of two or more of the most respectable inhabitants of the place.

Board of Commissioners in each parish.

In the country this is done in each district by a similar board, of which the curate, the policeman, besides one of the principal landholders, and three to four respectable inhabitants are members, which latter are nominated for a term of three years.²

The Commissioners in the town districts are subordinate to the bailiff (amtmand) of the division, and to the bishop of the diocese, who, as directors, appeal in doubtful cases to the Chancery at Copenhagen.³ In the country all poor districts in a bailiwick belong to and are under a common Board of Directors, consisting of the bailiff, the collector of the king's taxes (amtsforvalter), all the higher clergy of the diocese, and two substantial landowners, who are proposed by the amtmand, and nominated by the Chancery, for a term of three years.

Are subordinate to a Board of Directors.

To this Board of Directors for the administration of the Poor Laws in the bailiwick (who also appeal to the Chancery) the bishop has access whenever his clerical duties permit him to be present.⁴

It particularly devolves upon the curates, to whom the care of the poor is immediately confided, each of them in his parish, to use their best endeavours to provide for the wants of the necessitous, in conformity with the existing regulations.⁵

§ 4.
The immediate care of the poor devolves upon the Curate.

On a pauper applying for relief the curate has to take his deposition (if in a market town, in the presence of an overseer), in which document ought to be recorded the applicant's name, age and state of health; how long he has resided in the parish, and where; whether he has already been relieved on a former occasion; the nature of his distress, and its causes; whether he can earn any thing and procure work; whether he receives any relief from relations, friends, or by any other means; to what extent he requires relief, and of what nature.⁶

Curate's investigation of claims made for parish relief.

The curate has to communicate the result of his examination to the other members of the Board, stating at the same time to what extent he has found it necessary to relieve the immediate wants of the pauper. This is to be done at the next meeting, which is held, in order that the Board may determine upon the nature and extent of the permanent relief to be granted to the pauper.⁷

Curate has to consult Commissioners who have to award permanent relief.

In the town parishes every householder (with the exception of noblemen and civil or military officers) is bound to perform the duty of an overseer. They are elected by the Commissioners, and must accept, unless they can allege well-founded reasons for declining the office, the term of which is for three years.⁸

§ 7.
Overseers to be elected in the town parishes.

The same regulations apply to the rural parishes.⁹ Where a townsman, although his objections have been found insufficient, still refuses to perform the duties imposed upon him, he loses his civil rights and privileges.¹⁰

These duties are chiefly confined to their interference and advice in all cases of relief. Not being parties to the administration of the poor fund, they have no responsibility in that respect.¹¹ Where they show apathy or negligence, a fine may be imposed upon them by the bailiff of the division, upon a representation of the Commissioners to the Board of Directors.¹²

§ 8.
Duties of Overseers.

The principal duties incumbent upon overseers are the following:—

1. To confer with the Board of Commissioners, or any of its members, on all subjects relating to the management of the Poor Laws in their district, and to give them the advice or the information they may require on the subject.
2. To assist the Commissioners in executing the resolutions voted at their meetings.
3. To communicate to them any disorder, obstacle or opposition which may occur in the ordinary course of proceedings.
4. To collect and deliver over to the Commissioners the charitable donations or other contributions towards the poor fund, receivable without the intervention of the magistracy.
5. To contribute to the best of their power, that the object of the Legislature, the effectual relief of the poor, may in every respect be accomplished.¹³

In the market towns the Commissioners are to meet once a month, or so often as occasions may require; but in the country it may be done quarterly, viz. early in December, March, June and September.

§ 9.
Ordinary meetings of the Commissioners.

The meeting is to be announced on the Sunday preceding, from the pulpit, by the curate, who has at the same time to summons the poor that may stand in need of relief to appear and apply for the same on the day and at the place appointed by the Commissioners.¹⁴

Protocol to be held.

A protocol of the proceedings of the meeting is to be held, in the market towns by one of the parish clerks, and in the country by the curate, and it is to be signed by all the members present at the close of such meeting.¹⁶

§ 12.
Proceedings at the Quarterly meetings.

The proceedings at the quarterly meetings will embrace the following objects:—

1. The Commissioners have to ascertain if the parochial fund, from some particular cause, has been subject to any extraordinary expense during the preceding quarter.

2. They have to receive the charitable contributions that have been collected, the amount of which is to be entered in the protocol, the same as the sums that have been advanced or paid out of the parish fund.

3. They have to examine, if all the resolutions concerning the relief of the poor that were passed in the preceding meeting have been carried into effect.

4. They have to revise the list of paupers who are on the parish, in order to ascertain their good or bad conduct; whether any amongst them have died or left the district; or whether the circumstances of any, from contingent causes, have improved to such a degree that less or no relief will be requisite in future.

5. They have to ascertain whether there are any new applicants for relief, or whether the circumstances of those already inscribed have become so embarrassed, and their prospects of gaining a livelihood so distant, that further and greater relief will be absolutely necessary.

6. They have to determine upon the extent of relief to be granted for the next quarter, in proportion to the increase or decrease of paupers during the last quarter, the particulars of which are to be noted in the protocol.¹⁷

following year.

At the meeting to be held at the commencement of December, the curate (or the overseers, as the case may be) has to lay before the Board of Commissioners an estimate of the various sums which are likely to be required for the support of the poor in the ensuing year; to which are to be added the following particulars:—

1. An exact list of all the paupers supposed to require parochial relief, with an accurate account of the nature and extent of their wants, of their present circumstances, and of their moral conduct.

2. His (or their) opinion of the extent of relief to be granted to each individual pauper.

3. The ordinary funds of the parish having been found insufficient to cover the whole expense, the curate is to state his opinion to what extent the deficiency ought to be levied by assessment upon the householders of the parish.

4. An account of the various persons who have applied for relief, but whose claims have been rejected.¹⁸

§ 14.
Discussion on the estimate and the assessment of poor-rates.

The said estimate, to be drawn up according to a uniform plan adopted by the Board of Directors, is to be examined by the Commissioners, whose observations are to be briefly stated in the protocol, after which resolutions are to be passed by plurality of votes with regard to the nature and extent of relief to be granted to the poor in the ensuing year, how and in what manner this is to be effected; and what rate is to be assessed on each householder.¹⁹

§ 15.
How to proceed where votes are equal.

Where it so happens that the votes on both sides of the question are equal, the case is to be referred, in the town parishes, to the decision of the directors, and in the agricultural districts to the bailiff or amtmann, for the ultimate decision of the directors of the bailiwick.²⁰

§ 16.
Public notice to be given of the estimate and the assessment.

As soon as the estimate above alluded to has been agreed upon in all its details, it is to be announced on the Sunday following from the pulpit by the curate, who will render a short account of the labour of the Commissioners in the preceding year, and at the same time make an appeal to the benevolent feelings of the community to lend their aid in supplying the poor with what may be requisite for their support according to the estimate and assessment made by the Commissioners of the district for the next year.²¹

In the town parishes a duplicate of the estimates is to be transmitted to each of the overseers, who have to communicate the same to the householders in their respective districts. In the agricultural parishes the curate circulates a copy of it through the medium of the proper parish officers.

That document is particularly to exhibit the amount which the members of the Board of Commissioners have assessed upon themselves, that their example may give an impulse to the charity of the rest of the community.²²

Persons aggrieved by assessment, to appeal to the Directors.

Any person considering himself aggrieved by the assessment, may appeal to the Board of Directors; but until their decision is received, he must abide by the award of the Commissioners.²³

Poor rates may also be levied on extraordinary emergencies.²⁴

The Commissioners will take the earliest opportunity of submitting a report on the estimate and its result to the Board of Directors, who, approving of the plan adopted, are to preserve a copy of the same in their archives.²⁵

The correspondence is managed by the curate of the parish, as the principal and acting member of the Board. His letters under the seal of the Board and marked "On Poor Concerns," are, under certain restrictions, exempt from the payment of postage.²⁶

Having treated of the persons authorized to distribute relief, I have now to point out the various duties they have to perform towards those that are destitute, and entitled to relief under the Poor Laws.

No person, not having applied for relief, shall be removed from a district, under the pretence of the probability of his becoming a burthen to the parish hereafter.²⁷

The existing laws and ordinances do not prohibit the poor contracting marriages, and the officers acting under the Poor Laws cannot therefore prevent them.²⁸ On the other hand, all those persons who are in the receipt of parish relief are not allowed to marry, unless by permission granted on special grounds by the Commissioners.²⁹

All persons are to be considered as destitute and entitled to relief, who are unable, with their own labour, to earn the means of subsistence, and thus, without the help of others, would be deprived of the absolute necessities of life.³⁰

The provisional relief which a pauper may be found to require, is to be administered to him promptly, and at the place where he applies for the same, although he may not have a settlement there. He must not leave it, nor be obliged to leave it, until it has been decided by the proper authorities in what district he is to receive permanent parochial relief.³¹

The poor to whom parochial relief may be awarded, are divided into three classes. To the first class belong the aged and the sick, and all those who from bodily or mental infirmity, are wholly or partially debarred from earning the means of subsistence. In the second class are included orphans, foundlings and deserted children, as well as those, the health, resources or morals of whose parents are of a description which would render it improper to confide the education of children to their care. The third class comprises families or single persons, who from constitutional weakness, a numerous offspring, the approach of old age or similar causes, are unable to earn a sufficiency for the support of themselves or children.³²

Paupers of the first class who are destitute of other support, are to be supplied by the proper parish officers:

(a) With food (or in market towns where the necessary establishment for that purpose are wanting, with money in lieu thereof); and to which, in the agricultural districts, the inhabitants have to contribute according to the orders issued by the Commissioners, either in bread, flour, pease, groats, malt, bacon, butter or cheese, or in corn, or in money, or by rations, or in any other manner, which, from local circumstances, may be deemed most expedient:³³

(b) With the necessary articles of clothing:

(c) With lodging and fuel, either by placing them in establishments belonging to the parish, or in private dwellings:

(d) With medical attendance, either at their own dwellings or in places owned or rented by the parish.³⁴

The children belonging to the second class are to be placed with a private family, to be there brought up and educated at the expense of the parish, until they can be apprenticed or provided for in any other manner.

The Commissioners are carefully to watch over the treatment and education of the children by their foster parents and that such of them as have been put out to service are properly brought up and instructed until they are confirmed.³⁵

The paupers of the third class are to be so relieved, that they may not want the absolute necessities of life; but avoiding mendicity on the one hand, they must at the same time be compelled to work to the best of their abilities for their maintenance. To render the relief of paupers of this description more effectual, care must be taken, that, if possible, work be procured for them at the usual rate of wages; and where the amount does not prove sufficient for their support they may be otherwise assisted, but in general not with money but with articles of food and clothing, to be supplied them at the expense of the parish.³⁶

§ 29.
How paupers are to be relieved in case of sickness.

Where a pauper, in case of sickness, applies for medical advice, or medicine for himself or family, the curate is to deliver to him a written order to the physician or surgeon of the district, which the pauper is to deliver himself, if the nature of his illness allow him; but if not, he is to be conveyed thither, that the physician may examine the nature of his disorder, and prescribe the remedies and the diet he may deem necessary.³⁷ Where the patient is affected to such a degree that he is unable either to go or be conveyed, a messenger shall be despatched to the physician by the curate, with a note, describing as accurately as possible the patient's case. Should the physician deem his personal attendance necessary, a conveyance is to be furnished to him at the expense of the parish.³⁸ It behoves the curate and the overseers to visit the pauper during his illness, assisting him with their advice in all what may tend to promote his recovery.

In cases of mental derangement, where restraint should be necessary, application must be made to the magistrates.³⁹

Physicians are not entitled to any fee for attendance and the cure of a pauper, unless they have to travel, in which case they may claim a certain rate per day, proportionate to the length of the journey, which, together with the expense of medicine, is defrayed, in ordinary cases, by the parish; but in syphilitic or contagious disorders in the rural districts, from the general charity fund of the bailiwick.⁴⁰

§ 30.
Pauper to receive temporary relief
after sickness.

A pauper, whose means of gaining his livelihood have been abridged by reason of sickness, is to be relieved out of the poor rates, until he is again enabled to provide for himself.⁴¹

§ 31.
Burial of a pauper.

Where any one of the paupers of a district dies without having relations, who could, or would provide for his burial, the charges are to be defrayed out of the poor rates, in so far as the effects left by the deceased may not prove sufficient.⁴² However, the services of all persons required in the burial shall be performed gratuitously.⁴³

§ 32.
Extraordinary or
may be granted.

It is provided by various Ordinances, that extraordinary relief may be granted in all cases of emergency, where an individual is in momentary distress and has applied in vain to private charity for assistance, and the Commissioners have discretionary power to assist him with a loan or otherwise out of the poor-rates, on his giving security for the amount.⁴⁴

The causes of his momentary distress being removed, his effects may be distrained in satisfaction of the debt, but care is to be taken that he be not deprived of the most indispensable materials, furnishing the means of hereafter supporting himself by his own industry. However, every one who is able-bodied must support himself without becoming chargeable to the parish.

In cases where families are left houseless, the Commissioners are authorized to procure them a habitation, by becoming security for the rent, and where such habitation is not to be obtained for them, they may be quartered upon the householders in rotation, until a dwelling can be found in some other place.

Should the rent not be paid by the parties when due, such persons must be considered as paupers, and be removed to that district where they may be found to have a settlement. The house-rent thus disbursed, must in this case be looked upon as temporary relief, and be borne by the parish that advanced it. Where parish officers refuse to obey these injunctions, they may be compelled by a fine, to be levied daily until they comply.⁴⁵

Authority of officers acting under the Poor Laws over paupers in the parochial establishments.

All persons entrusted with the immediate superintendence of paupers placed in the different workhouses, and in other public establishments for the poor, possess the same authority over them in point of discipline, as the Danish laws confer upon a master over his domestics.⁴⁶ This is further illustrated by the (§ 157) of the Regulations for the city of Copenhagen of the 1st July 1799, where it is enacted, that it is lawful for the several Commissioners, where earnest remonstrances have proved without effect, to dictate and inflict certain punishments upon the paupers for such offences as are contrary to public order and good morals.⁴⁷ In cases of contumacy and insolence towards their superiors, of inebriety, ill treatment of children by their parents, and vice versa, of wilful waste of the raw material to be manufactured, of embezzlement of goods or working tools, and of similar public and domestic offences and disorders, the Commissioners are authorized not only publicly to reprimand those offenders that have attained the lawful age, but also to punish them by incarceration,⁴⁸ it having been proved to the satisfaction of the Chancery, that a proper place exists in the establishments suitable for a prison. The intervention of the police-master of the place is however at all times required where punishment is dictated.⁴⁹ Children under the age of 15, are punished according to the regulations for the establishments of public instruction.⁵⁰ bodily defects or deformities, are asking alms or receive the same.⁵¹ Every person who is found begging in a township, or on the high road, may be seized by any of the inhabitants and delivered over to the proper parish officers to be consigned to the policeman. Parents or foster-parents who have induced their children to beg, or have not prevented them from doing so, are to be considered as having begged themselves.⁵²

Different Ordinances even make those persons amenable to the law who, by giving alms to notorious beggars, frustrate the beneficial effects of the provisions made by the Legislature for the suppression of mendicity.⁵³

In the market towns, all persons belonging to the working classes are obliged to enter into fixed service, unless they have some ostensible means of subsistence, which must be proved to the satisfaction of the magistrates, if required.⁵⁴

In the agricultural districts, every person belonging to the class of peasants, who is not a proprietor or occupier of land, a tacksman (boelsmand), or cottager⁵⁵ (huusmand), or subsists upon some trade or profession,⁵⁶ is to seek fixed service, unless he be married and permanently employed as a day-labourer. However, this is in nowise to apply to those persons (be they foreigners or natives) who, being provided with passports from the proper authorities of the place whence they proceed, are seeking agricultural employment as day-labourers.

It is equally lawful for those, who during the summer are employed in fishery or navigation, to earn their bread as day-labourers in winter, or at any other season when they may be at home.⁵⁷

Where a single person of either sex belonging to the labouring class is not able to obtain a place, he (or she) shall within two months before the regular term when regular servants are changed (Skiftetid) apply to the parish beadle, who on the Sunday following at church meeting, is publicly to offer the services of his client, and inquire amongst the community if any person is in want of a servant, and will receive him (or her) as such. Should the said person not get a place within a fortnight, a similar inquiry is to be made in the neighbouring parish.

All those that have not followed the line of conduct pointed out in the preceding regulation, and are without steady employment, shall be considered as vagrants, and punished accordingly.⁵⁸

The curates have to communicate to the bailiff or amtmænd within a month after the fitting-time, under a penalty, a list of all the persons in his parish that have been left without employment.⁵⁹

It is also provided, that where parents, without sufficient reason, keep more grown up children at home than they absolutely require for their service, it shall be considered indicative, either of their being in comparatively good circumstances, or that their income has been improved by the additional labour of their children, and their poor and school-rates are to be raised in proportion.⁶⁰

The law has provided, that in each district there is to be established a poor-house, in which paupers who are on the parish may be boarded and lodged, (a mode of supporting them, which is more and more generally adopted) and where persons who are houseless may find shelter and temporary relief. As those paupers which are able to work ought to be employed, in order that they may pay off with their labour the debt they have incurred with the public, a workhouse is to be combined with each poorhouse, where raw materials may be worked up by the inmates for account of the parish. In districts where the number of poor is very considerable, houses of industry are to be erected, to which, if circumstances permit, an establishment is to be added, where beggars, vagrants and similar persons may be kept to hard labour.⁶¹

Combined with the poorhouses, there is to be (at least in the townships) an hospital, or according to local circumstances, a certain number of rooms in such poorhouses, to be allotted to the sick. By an order of the 6th June 1806, the Chancery is authorized, according to the particular exigencies of each bailiwick, independently of the hospitals already existing, to sanction the establishment of one or two, and in particular places, of three hospitals in each of the seventeen bailiwicks in Denmark.⁶²

However, that salutary measure has hitherto only been executed in few places.

I shall now proceed to the provisions that have been made by the Danish laws with regard to the settlement of paupers, a subject of constant litigation between the different parishes, and which therefore deserves a minute investigation.

That district in which a pauper has been permanently resident for the last three years, (without in the meantime having been supported by any other parish) is under the legal obligation of affording relief to him and his family, when called upon.⁶³

Settlement of Idiots.

The wife and children of a pauper are entitled to relief in the district where he has a settlement, the same as his widow, in so far as she does not remove to another place, whereas bastards are chargeable to the parish to which the mother originally belonged.⁶⁴

Idiots being deficient in understanding, and therefore unable to choose their place of abode, they cannot, by triennial residence in a parish, acquire a settlement. The law for that reason considers them in the light of children, who are to be supported by that parish to whom they originally belong as such.⁶⁵ § 40.

Settlement of soldiers.

A soldier while in the service has not, but he may acquire the right of settlement by three years residence in a parish, after having been discharged.⁶⁶

§ 41.

Where the husband and his family reside in different places.

As it has already been observed, it is the district where the husband has a settlement which is bound also to support his family.

Where the family lives in another parish than that where the husband has resided for three years, he does not thereby acquire a right to be relieved in the former district.

In conformity with this rule, the Chancery decided in the case of a day-labourer who had been settled in a district for many years, that he was entitled to relief there, although his wife and children had for upwards of three years been living in another parish.⁶⁷

§ 42.

In case of separation or divorce between married people.

Where a married man is unable to contribute towards the maintenance of his separated wife and children, that duty devolves upon the parish where he has a settlement.⁶⁸

Where marriage is entirely dissolved, the wife is considered in the light of a widow.

The children that were born during matrimony are to be relieved by the father's parish, and the person who afterwards marries the mother thereby tacitly subscribes to share in the obligation which the law has imposed upon her, of supporting her illegitimate children, if she have any.⁶⁹

The same rule is applicable where a widower and a widow from different parishes join in matrimony, both parties having children. Lastly, a husband is obliged to maintain the children begotten in adultery by his wife during wedlock, if the parties notwithstanding continue to live in the matrimonial state.

Settlement of children in general.

During matrimony, and where a separation has taken place, it is incumbent upon the parish where the husband is settled to maintain the children (be they step-children, or begotten by both parties); but where the marriage is dissolved it devolves, in all ordinary cases, upon the mother.

However, in cases of legal divorce it will greatly depend upon the agreement made between the parties at the time, whether the father or the mother are to bring up all or only part of the children, and in general that agreement decides what parish is to bear the burthen on the parents becoming paupers.

The children retain their settlement in their relative parishes until they can support themselves by entering into service or otherwise, and it is immaterial whether they live with their parents or with other persons.

However, they are not in any case entitled to farther support as children, on having attained their eighteenth year.⁷⁰

Where the child of a pauper has been received and supported by foster parents, who, from having afterwards been reduced to pauperism themselves, or from not having made any provision for the same on their death, have left it destitute, such child shall be reinstated into all the rights belonging to the settlement of its parents.⁷¹

Settlement of bastards in particular.

The Ordinance of the 14th December 1810, (§ 13,) enacts, that illegitimate children shall follow their mother, and being found destitute, they are to be supported, even after the mother's death, by that parish where she had a settlement, but that such obligation shall cease on their having attained their eighteenth year. A circular from the Chancery, dated 24th February 1816, further explains, that after the rule of partus sequitur ventrem, bastard children ought to be supported by the parish to whom the mother belongs, when she is unable to provide for them, being herself a pauper.

§ 45.

Settlement of widows.

A widow, as every other self-subsistent person, can gain a settlement in a parish by three years' permanent residence. Until she have acquired such right in another district, she retains a claim to support in that parish in which her husband was settled.⁷²

Her children follow her into her district, where they are to be brought up until they can maintain themselves.⁷³

§ 46.

In how far the liability to afford relief rests on the birth-place of a pauper.

In cases where the first rule, quoted (§ 38,) cannot be applied, the duty of supporting a pauper devolves upon the parish where he was born.⁷⁴

With regard to bastard children, it is held, that where neither the mother's birth-place nor her place of settlement can be ascertained, the district where the child was born is liable to defray the expense of his support.⁷⁵

DENMARK.

Where the regulations from (§ 38-46) are not applicable, the obligation of affording relief devolves upon the district where the first application is made. In consequence thereof, a beggar, or a vagrant known to be a native of Denmark, without it being possible for the parish officers to ascertain his birth-place, or where he may have permanently resided for the three last years, or at least for the last twelve months, must be relieved by the parish in which he has been apprehended; but the amount so disbursed is to be refunded by the bailiwick.⁷⁶

Where, however, the last fact has been ascertained, he is to be consigned to that parish where he has been resident for the last twelve months.⁷⁷

Where it cannot be made out, which of two bailiwicks is a pauper's place of birth or settlement, there both shall defray the expense from their respective funds; but the parish in which the pauper abides at the time shall make the disbursement.

A foreign beggar, who has been in Denmark for a number of years, is to be supported in the parish where he has been seized, if he has not had a fixed abode in any other place for three years.⁷⁸

It has been established as a general rule with regard to foreigners, that three years residence in Denmark constitute a claim to relief, if they should thereafter become paupers.

Where an applicant who has claims to relief in a district, has relations or friends in another, who would contribute to his subsistence if he were to repair thither, it shall be lawful to the Commissioners to grant permission to such person to receive in a foreign district that pecuniary allowance, which would have been dispensed to him if he had remained in his own.⁷⁹

§ 47.
Pauper may sometimes receive relief without residing in the parish.

The Danish law has established the principle, that every individual receiving relief of any kind under the Poor Laws, is bound, either with his property or his labour, to refund the amount so disbursed for him, or any part thereof, and authority has therefore been given to the Poor Law Commissioners, "to require all those whom it may concern, to work to the best of their ability, until all they owe has been paid off."

SECTION IV.
Of the right of the Poor Law Administration to claim reimbursement of their expenses for the support of paupers.

That right can for the present only be exercised in a few places, either because the work-houses and houses of industry which are thereby pre-supposed to exist, do not exist in sufficient number, or because those that actually are in existence are very deficient in proper size, internal arrangement and good management.

I shall first dwell upon the measures that are taken by the Poor Laws against the paupers themselves, with regard to their effects or any property of which they may come possessed, and then quote the several cases where the parish is entitled under these laws, to claim reimbursement of the whole, or part of its expenses from other parties.

On relief being awarded to a pauper, the Commissioners of the district have forthwith to take an inventory of, and to appraise his effects, which are only to be delivered over to him for his use, after having been marked with the stamp of the board.⁸⁰

§ 48.
Proceedings with regard to the effects of Paupers.

Any person receiving goods or effects so marked, either by way of purchase or in pledge, shall be liable to the restitution of the property, to the payment of its value, and besides to a fine.⁸¹

In case of a pauper who has been in the receipt of parish relief, the Poor Law Commissioners have a legal right to claim the effects left by the deceased; but where the produce of the sale exceeds the amount disbursed, the surplus only devolves to the parish in so far as the lawful heirs cannot or will not reimburse the sums expended in his subsistence.⁸²

Effects of paupers deceased devolve to the parish.

For the relief afforded to a pauper or his family, the parish may, even without the consent of the parties, claim and recover those demands which they may have upon another person.⁸³

The same right is retained by the parish upon the pauper, if he should happen to acquire property at a later period, as well as it extends to his effects at his demise, though he should not have received relief at the time of his death.⁸⁴

The law has in several instances imposed upon other parties than the parish, the duty to contribute, wholly or in part, to the support of a certain class of destitute persons, and on their neglecting to do so, they may be legally compelled to reimburse those expenses to which the parish has been subjected in the first instance. The principal cases of this nature are the following.

Relief is sometimes to be administered, or the expense of it refunded by other parties than the parish.

Although relatives cannot be legally compelled to support those of their families that are destitute,⁸⁵ yet there are a few exceptions from the general rule. It is for instance provided by Law 1-19-7, that a lunatic or maniac shall be delivered over to his relatives, who are bound to take charge of him, but cannot or will not, they provide for him, he is to be confined by an order from the Poor Commissioners in some private place until arrangements have been made for his reception in the nearest asylum.⁸⁶

parents or from the children of lunatics,⁸⁷ either wholly or in part, according to circumstances.⁸⁸

Also deaf and dumb children.

§ 52.

Husband to maintain his deserted or separated wife and children.

The same regulations are applicable with regard to the maintenance of the deaf and dumb,⁸⁹ and in both instances the support of such persons devolves upon the parish, whenever their nearest relatives cannot afford to defray the expense.

According to the principles laid down in the Ordinance of the 16th November 1813 (§ 11), it is incumbent upon the husband to support his separated (or deserted) wife and her children, in so far as he is able, and it is therefore lawful for the magistrates to stipulate the amount of the contribution which persons so situated, as well as the putative fathers of bastards, are annually to pay towards the support of such wives and such children respectively.

Father of bastards to contribute towards their maintenance.

Persons refusing to contribute may be compelled to work for the benefit of the parish.

However, the putative father of a bastard child, even if he have the means, cannot be held to bring it up entirely at his own expense, a part of the obligation resting upon the mother, who is represented by the parish in all cases where she is reduced to pauperism.⁹⁰

An Ordinance of the 13th August 1814 expressly enacts, that wherever a person, circumstanced as above stated, absolutely refuses either to refund or to pay by instalments the debt he has so contracted with the parish, he shall be forced to pay it off by working for the benefit of the same, and not be allowed to leave the parish; but that if he do so notwithstanding, he is to be punished by imprisonment in the house of correction. The Commissioners are further authorized to stipulate the amount such individual is to pay off per week, in proportion to his capability to work, to the actual rate of wages and other concurring circumstances, and that where such person either refuses to work, or is idle or negligent during the working hours, he is to be imprisoned on bread and water until he reform his conduct. These proceedings may also be resorted to where the father of a bastard child (the mother of which is on the parish) cannot pay the weekly allowance towards its maintenance, which has been stipulated by the magistrates.⁹¹ It must, however, be remarked, that this mode of enforcing payment is hardly applicable but in the few parishes in which there are both workhouses and houses of correction.

In what cases masters are to pay for the cure of their servants.

In all ordinary cases, the master is obliged to support his servant during sickness, and so long until the latter, for some lawful reason or other, leaves his service. However, the expenses immediately connected with his cure are to be borne by the menial himself, or if he have no means, by the parish in which he is entitled to relief.⁹²

But where it can be sufficiently proved that a servant has received a bodily hurt or injury on the service of his master, the latter, so far as he is able, shall refund to the parish the expenses disbursed by the same for the cure of the patient.

By whom labouring mechanics are to be relieved in case of sickness.

In conformity to an Ordinance of the 14th December 1810 (§ 14), amended by another of the 29th January 1828, labouring mechanics in distress are to be relieved in the same manner as other casual paupers; but in cases of sickness, occurring in places where there exists a guild or corporation of the craft or trade to which he belongs, the funds of the same shall be made available under certain restrictions and to a certain extent, to defray the expenses of his cure.⁹³

That district which has been found liable to support a pauper, who afterwards leaves it, shall be bound, on his being sent back, to indemnify the parish where he has received temporary relief for the expenses thereby incurred, in so far as they do not exceed 1 s. 1½ d. sterling per week for food, and 9 s. sterling in the whole for clothing; cases of sickness however excepted.⁹⁴

Remark.—Between Denmark and Sleswick Holstein there exists a convention of reciprocity with regard to the expenses of casual relief as well as of removal of the paupers, vagrants and beggars, belonging to each of the two counties, which, although under one King, form distinct Governments.

How paupers are to be removed to their settlements.

Where a pauper happens to fall sick at the time when he is about to be removed from the parish where he has received temporary relief, his removal shall be delayed until it can be effected without injury to his health.⁹⁵

Otherwise the pauper or vagrant (the parish where he has a settlement having been ascertained) shall be sent thither through the medium of the magistrates, either by land or by water. If by land, he will be forwarded (either on foot or by carriage, according to circumstances) from one district to the other until he arrive in the parish where he is to receive permanent relief.

Foreigners who have not resided for three years in a district are to be sent out of the kingdom, in so far as their health allow it.⁹⁶

The removal of paupers or vagrants to their homes by water, and their subsistence during the passage, is to take place at the expense of the parish which is to provide for their support.

SECTION V.
Of the parochial fund and the contributions to same.

The Parochial Fund and the nature of the contributions to the same will form the subject of the 5th Section of my Report. It is not only made obligatory upon the house and landholders to contribute to that fund, but also upon servants and labouring mechanics, in short upon all persons, without distinction of religion, who are not on the parish themselves, and whose circumstances are such that they can afford to pay the contribution in proportion to their incomes, without thereby depriving themselves of the necessities of life.

The only exception are the military, and persons receiving pay from the military fund, who are only liable to contribute in so far as they have private means.⁹⁹

The Receipts of the Parochial Fund are derived from various sources, which may be classed under the following heads, viz.

§ 57.
Receipts of the parochial fund.

1°. An annual contribution in money, either voluntary or levied, upon the inhabitants, according to the assessment of the Board of Commissioners in each parish, and in proportion to the amount annually required for the relief of the poor.

This contribution is recovered in four quarterly instalments, each of which is payable in advance. The Commissioners have to transmit a list of those persons that are in arrears to the bailiff of the division, who may levy the amount by distress.

2°. A contribution assessed upon the produce of the ground tax in the townships;

3°. One quarter per cent. of the proceeds of goods and effects sold by public auction in the townships;

4°. Fines and penalties adjudged to the parochial fund by the Courts of Justice and the Commissioners of Arbitration in the townships;

5°. Produce of collections in churches and hospitals on certain occasions; of the sale of the effects of paupers deceased; of the sale of stray cattle having no owner; voluntary donations on the purchase or sale of houses and lands; contingencies;

6°. Interest on capital, and rent of lands or houses bequeathed to, or otherwise acquired by the poor administration.

Per contra, the Expenditure and Disbursements of the Parochial Fund are the following:

§ 58.
Expenditure of the parochial fund.

1°. Expenses incurred by the permanent relief to the poor who have a settlement in the parish;

2°. Provisional relief to paupers belonging to other parishes, the amount of which is afterwards refunded by the latter;

3°. Disbursements for the cure of persons labouring under a syphilitic disorder, as also the expenses for persons included in § 50 to 54, part of which are repaid;

4°. Disbursements for raw materials to be worked up in the workhouses;

5°. Expenses for the deaf and dumb born of indigent parents, and who are sent to the public institutions;

6°. Stationery, messengers, wages to beadles and other subalterns, besides contingent expenses.

In the townships one of the members of the commission is elected treasurer by plurality of votes; in the rural districts it devolves upon the member who is the principal landowner.

§ 59.
Who is to act as Treasurer.

The treasurer has to advance the sums required for the service by the curate or the overseers, who have to account to him for the amount.¹⁰⁰

In the townships the accounts concerning the administration of the parochial fund are made up by the treasurer, who is also accountant, and they are attested by the other members of the board. The balance sheet and the accounts must be transmitted to the Board of Directors before the end of March every year, under a penalty.

§ 60.
How accounts in the townships are to be made up, audited and passed.

They are audited by the auditor of the high-bailiwick, and on being found correct, they are allowed by the Board of Directors, who are authorized to give a discharge to the Commissioners.¹⁰¹

In the rural districts the Board of Commissioners render an account to the directors of the bailiwick. The balance sheet and the accounts, which are made up by the curate, and closed on the 31st December of each year, are attested by the Board of Commissioners, and transmitted to the provost or head-clergyman of the division before the 1st of February following.

How accounts are to be rendered in the rural parishes.

After having been revised by the clergyman they are forwarded to the directors of the bailiwick, who proceeds with them in the manner already pointed out in the preceding paragraph.¹⁰²

SECTION VI.

Of the Board of Directors for the bailiwick, and of the separate poor fund of the same.

§ 62.

Half yearly meetings of the Board of Directors.

Having rendered a general account of the management of the Poor Laws, and in particular of the duties devolving upon the Commissioners established in each district, I have now once more to revert to the Board of Directors as the organ of communication with the Government in all matters concerning the poor.

The meetings of the Board of Directors for the bailiwick (refer to § 3) are to be held at the residence of the bailiff or amtmann twice a year, namely, in April and October, and where, from an accumulation of business, it is impossible to dispatch it on one day, the meetings are to be continued the following days, and until all pending affairs are brought to a conclusion.¹⁰³

The bailiff is authorized to call meetings at any other time when it should be requisite.¹⁰⁴

The several members of the board have in all cases to attend such meetings gratuitously, but they are entitled to a conveyance free of expense under an order to that effect from the bailiff.

Bailiff may dispatch business in the name of the Board.

The business which occurs during the time intervening between the half-yearly meetings, is to be dispatched by the bailiff alone, in the name of the board, and he has to decide in all cases which do not admit of delay, rendering an account of his proceedings to the board at their next meeting.¹⁰⁵

He is also to be careful that the requisite documents in support of claims are furnished in time, in order that all cases to be submitted to the board may be ready for their decision.¹⁰⁶

§ 64.

Proceedings of the Board of Directors.

At these meetings all objects concerning the management of the Poor Laws generally are to come under consideration of the board, but particularly the complaints that have been made.

Moreover the balance sheets and accounts referring to the poor-fund of the bailiwick and to the parochial fund are there to be revised, and a discharge to be given to the parties when found correct.¹⁰⁷

The board has also to submit an annual Report to the Chancery on the poor-law concerns of each of the parishes in the bailiwick.

Treasurer and accountant of the poor fund.

The collector of the King's taxes in the division is treasurer to the separate poor-fund of the bailiwick, of which he renders an account to the board. With him are also deposited the bonds and other public securities belonging to the fund.

He receives the annual balances from the several parochial funds of the division in so far as they may not be required as advances towards the service of the following year.¹⁰⁸

His annual accounts are laid before, and revised by, the Board of Directors, who give him a discharge when found correct.

Receipts of the separate poor fund of the bailiwick.

The receipts of the separate poor fund of the bailiwick consist chiefly, 1°. In a proportion of certain dues levied in each of its jurisdictions; 2°. In fines and penalties adjudged to the fund by the tribunals and the commissions of arbitration in the agricultural districts; 3°. In $\frac{1}{4}\%$ of all goods and effects sold by public auction in the country; 4°. In the interest on capital belonging to the fund.

§ 67.

Expenditure of the same.

This fund has been established for the following purposes: 1°. Of contributing to the support of paupers who, although not properly belonging to the poor of the district in which they have become distressed, must still be relieved; 2°. Of assisting the parochial fund in extraordinary cases; 3°. Of defraying all expenses of a general nature that ought to be assessed upon the several parish funds within the jurisdiction of the bailiwick.

SECTION VII.

Of the operation of the present system of poor laws and of the effects of the same upon the condition of the poor.

§ 68.

On what principles managed by the parish officers.

It must be allowed that the Danish Poor Laws are dictated by a humane and benevolent spirit; they protect from want the aged and the infirm; they relieve the sick and provide for the education of helpless children. The condition of the poor (I particularly allude here to the two first classes) has been materially improved through their agency; a great deal of misery has either been prevented or removed, and their operation has been most beneficial on different occasions, when great numbers of working people were suddenly thrown out of employ from the circumstances of the times. But it is not the theory of the law; it is its practice which ought to form the standard of its worth: however, as it would lead too far to enter into all the details concerning its operation, I confine myself to stating that the Poor Commissioners, more or less, agree upon the following general principles: 1°, That they ought not, in the first instance, to shrink from a thorough investigation into the merits of the several claims which come before them; 2°, That a distinction must be drawn between the persons reduced by misfortunes beyond their control, and those applicants whose distresses arise from temporary causes, and are either the result of improvidence, or of indolent and dissolute habits; 3°, That firmness in stemming the tide of pauperism is an imperious duty they owe to the public, although often difficult and even painful to perform; 4°, That on dispensing relief, it should be given in kind wherever circumstances permit, and not in money; 5°, That no more must be granted to able-bodied paupers than what is absolutely necessary to sustain life; and 6°, That the able-bodied be made to work on all occasions where it can be done.

It

¹⁰³ Reg. R. § 57.¹⁰⁴ Idem. § 58.¹⁰⁵ Idem. § 59.¹⁰⁶ Reg. R. § 60.¹⁰⁷ § 61.¹⁰⁸ Idem. § 47. Circ. Chanc. 24 Feb. 1821.

It is hardly imaginable that in an administration, the branches of which are so numerous and so widely spread, the various agents that are employed should all of them strictly act upon one uniform system; and although complaints have from time to time been made in several places of an increase of paupers and poor rates, yet I have every reason to believe, that on the whole the management of the poor in this country is conducted as well as the complicated and imperfect machinery which is employed possibly admits of. It appears that waste and extravagance are carefully avoided, and that the sums annually contributed by the rate payers, although perhaps not at all times applied with judgment and impartiality, are at least mostly expended with economy. However, be the management of the Poor Laws good or bad, yet the system itself seems to have answered an important object, that of checking the rapid growth of pauperism. I admit, that paupers have increased in Denmark these last thirty years, in the same proportion with the increase of population (pari passu); but I am far from believing that the proportion which they bear to the whole population is much greater now than it was in 1803, namely, 1=32, although some of the townships, from particular circumstances, may form an exception. I have diligently perused all the different reports that have been published for the last five years upon the present state of the rural economy of the country, and they all concur in stating that there is a slight improvement in the value of land; that idle people are seldom found; and that there is sufficient work in which to employ the labouring population.

But the imperfections, inseparable from all human institutions, also affect the system of the Danish Poor Laws; and I shall endeavour to point out the most conspicuous, in so far as I have been able to ascertain them from practical men, whose opinion I judged it necessary to consult on so important a subject. § 69.
Defects of the system.

1°. It is considered very injurious that the managing officer in the larger parishes is not permanently appointed for the purpose, nor a person who is paid for his services, as it cannot be reasonably expected, that a man having his own affairs to attend to, should devote either sufficient attention, or a great portion of his valuable time to the performance of an unpleasant duty, without receiving any remuneration for his trouble. Gratuitous services cannot be relied upon, and seldom stand the test of time.

2°. Serious inconvenience is also stated to arise from the want of a sufficient number of spacious and well-regulated workhouses. It would therefore be highly recommendable that incorporated workhouses or district houses of industry were formed in the principal towns at convenient distances, where the surrounding rural parishes, on contributing to the maintenance of the establishment, could send their able-bodied paupers to be set to work. It has been remarked, that in districts where a workhouse is established, the number of paupers is comparatively small, no doubt owing to their objection to its discipline, where they have the least chance of being otherwise employed. A workhouse is also an excellent touchstone in the hands of the parish officers, by which to distinguish real and comparative distress.

3°. Another want which is most sensibly felt in this country is, that of an adequate number of establishments, where those paupers which prove to be dissolute, refractory, turbulent or habitual drunkards, may be confined and subjected to hard labour. The only two establishments of that description I know of, but which are no wise sufficient, are at Odense, in the Island of Funen, and at Flensburgh, in the Dutchy of Sleswick.

4°. The law of settlement, as it at present stands, is equally objectionable, it giving rise to frequent disputes between the parishes, thus causing much vexation and delay, and besides great expense by the removal of paupers.

Moreover it must confine the labourer to the narrow limits of his own district, preventing him from seeking work in another parish when he cannot obtain it in his own.

Birth, according to the Danish laws, confers only a settlement where a legal claim by residence cannot be made out; but in how far it would be advisable to resort to any change of system, remains still to be decided.

5°. The greatest desideratum however is, that the administration of the Poor Laws be entrusted, as to their general superintendence, to a Central Board of Commissioners, composed of active and experienced men, well acquainted with the different branches of industry, as also with the character of the class of people they have to deal with, and whose affairs they have to manage. Such an independent authority does not exist. The Danish Chancery, who have the superintendence at present, cannot fulfil the object, so long as their attention is constantly withdrawn by affairs of higher importance with which they are already overburthened. Hence a great delay arises in the dispatch of business, a very serious inconvenience in urgent matters.

It frequently happens besides, that the spirit of the laws is misinterpreted, and their favourable operation frustrated by the parish officers themselves, in all cases where a sufficient distinction is not made between absolute and relative want. It can only be obligatory upon the public to relieve the person that is absolutely destitute; I mean to say, him who is driven by necessity to subscribe to the terms stipulated by the law of making a return in labour. Where the parish officers on the contrary deviate from that principle by interfering in cases of relative want, that is to say, by assisting those whose situation is tolerable; where they take it upon themselves to fulfil a duty towards the poor without binding them by an obligation in return; there all charitable feelings must become blunted in the individual; there the country must gradually sink under the pressure of an insupportable burden, and finish by becoming a vast receptacle of paupers.

Effects of the receipt or the expectation of relief on the labouring population.

The feeling of reluctance to have recourse to parochial relief has been gradually diminishing in this country since the introduction of Poor Laws; the poor having accustomed themselves more and more to consider the poor rates in the light of a fund from which they are legally entitled to draw relief in all cases of distress.

Any facility therefore given on the part of the parish in dispensing it, immediately increases the number of applicants, and of course ultimately the number of paupers, which latter would still be more considerable if one-half of the labouring population were not engaged as farm servants. Pauperism is therefore chiefly confined (especially in the country) to the class of day-labourers, both mechanic and agricultural, who, when aged and decrepit, or burdened with large families, throw themselves upon parish relief whenever they are distressed from sickness or from some other casualty. But happily the allowance-system, which is productive of so much mischief, is not acted upon here to the same enormous extent as in England, and as the able-bodied can expect nothing beyond the absolute necessities of life, they have no inducement for remaining idle, and they return to work the moment they are able, and have the chance of obtaining any. Relief, therefore, or the expectation of it, has hitherto not been found to produce any sensible effect upon the industry of labourers generally, neither upon their frugality, although it is more than probable, that any relaxation in the management of the system would stimulate them to spend all their earnings in present enjoyment, and render them still more improvident than they already are. Nor are the Poor Laws instrumental in promoting early marriages amongst the peasants; but it being their custom to form engagements at a very early period of life, this, in the absence of all moral restraint in the intercourse between the two sexes, leads to another serious evil, Bastardy, which has so much increased of late years, that out of ten children, one is illegitimate. It is a well-known fact, that the ties of love and mutual affection between parents and children are generally found relaxed, not only in families of paupers who are on the parish, but also in those of beggars and vagrants, which perhaps is owing more to a neglected education, and to the state of continual dependence and misery in which they live, than to any immediate influence of the Poor Laws as they are managed here.

The situation of an independent working labourer preferable to that of a pauper.

It is a principle generally adopted in this country, that a person supported by the public purse, ought not to fare so well as the independent working labourer, and where that principle is not strictly upheld, the natural consequence will be, that the lower classes throw themselves upon the poor-rates, and that pauperism gradually overruns the country.

A pauper in this kingdom lives in a state of degradation and dependence; he only receives what is absolutely necessary for his subsistence, and must often have recourse to fraud and imposition to obtain that, what is reluctantly given.

The working labourer on the other hand enjoys a certain degree of freedom and independence, although his means may be small, and that sometimes he may even be subject to great privations.

He may perhaps sit down with his family to a scanty meal, but at least he partakes of it with the gratifying feeling of having earned it.

From the above considerations, the condition of such a labourer, even one of the lowest class, seems to be preferable to the condition of a person subsisting upon alms and public charity.

Hitherto pauperism has not taken deep root in this country; but should it ever so happen that the labouring population readily submit to all the restrictions imposed upon them by the parish officers, and that this is found not to be owing to any transitory causes, such as a single year of distress or sickness, then, in my humble opinion, the time is arrived and no other remedy left to correct the evil than for the Government to promote emigration.

I have the honour to be, &c.

REPLIES to the QUERIES of the Poor Law Commissioners, by Francis C. Macgregor, Esq. Consul.

I.—VAGRANTS.

Question 1. To what extent and under what form does mendicity prevail in the several districts of the country?—Answer. Begging in the streets and on the highways is interdicted, and the offenders are punished according to law. Still mendicity prevails to a certain degree in the towns, but to a greater extent in the country, where it is more difficult to suppress it. [Refer to my Report, suprà, § 34.]

Q. 2. Is there any relief to persons passing through the country, seeking work, returning to their native places, or living by begging; and by whom afforded and under what regulations?—A. The expenses attending the removal of paupers, beggars and vagrants to their homes or over the frontier, are to be defrayed in each district through which they pass, from the general poor fund of the Division, and the parish officer refusing to receive and forward forward persons so sent by the proper authorities, is to pay a fine and costs. Agricultural labourers may travel all over the country in search of work, when provided with the proper certificates. [See my Report, §§ 35. 56.]

II.—DESTITUTE ABLE-BODIED.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are they, or any part of their families, billeted or quartered on householders?—A. The system of billeting or quartering is not generally resorted to in this country, but where circumstances require, lodgings are procured for the paupers at the expense of the parish. In cases of emergency they may however be quartered on householders in rotation. [See Report, § 33.]

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. This is done in many instances, but it depends entirely upon the local arrangements made for the subsistence of the poor in each parish.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there district houses of industry for receiving the destitute able-bodied, or any part of their families, and supplying them with food, clothes, &c., and in which they are set to work?—There are no district houses or incorporated workhouses, where paupers belonging to different parishes can be sent. The workhouses and houses of industry established in some of the principal town parishes are only open to the paupers of each of them respectively. [Refer to my Report, § 36.]

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations do any religious institutions give assistance to the destitute, by receiving them as inmates, or by giving them alms?—A. There are no religious institutions, properly speaking, but many institutions, as well as legacies left for certain charitable purposes, and which are managed by trustees under the will of the founders. Bequests to a considerable amount have besides been made from time to time for the general support of the poor, which property is administered under the Poor Laws.

Q. 5. To what extent, and under what regulations, is work provided at their own dwellings for those who have trades, but do not procure work for themselves?—It is left to the discretion of the Poor Commissioners to act as circumstances may require and in the manner best adapted to the local arrangements of each parish.

Q. 6. To what extent and under what regulations is work provided for such persons in agriculture or on public works?—A. The law has made it incumbent upon the Commissioners to procure employment for a pauper willing and able to work, but who cannot obtain any; however it is often evaded, and the labourer, in lieu of receiving employment, is thrown upon the parish for relief. Paupers are never employed upon the roads.

Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations are fuel, clothing or money distributed to such persons or their families; at all times of the year, or during any particular seasons?—A. Supplies of fuel, clothing and money are granted under the Poor Laws, and distributed the whole year round, to all paupers legally entitled to relief; the extent of which is left to the discretion of the Commissioners according to the circumstances of each individual case. However, relief in money is not so frequently given as relief in kind, especially in the rural parishes, where the contributions in a great measure consist in grain and articles of provision.

Q. 8. To what extent and under what regulations are they relieved by their children being taken into schools, and fed, clothed and educated or apprenticed?—A. The children of the poor are provided with food and clothing, where their parents cannot afford the same. They receive instruction at the expense of the parish, upon whose inhabitants a certain rate is assessed to defray the charge of a schoolmaster and his establishment. Their parents, or foster parents, are bound under a penalty to send them regularly to school, which they must attend until the age of 14–15, when they are confirmed, and apprenticed to some trade, or put out to service.

Q. 9. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship are the relatives of the destitute compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking charge of part of their families?—A. The Danish laws do not in general make it incumbent upon relatives to support those of their families that are destitute, except in the cases of lunatics and the deaf and dumb, where the liability to support them extends upon the parents or upon the children, when they can afford it. Parents are only legally obliged to maintain their children until their eighteenth year when they have the means. [Refer to my Report, § 51.]

Q. 10. To what extent and under what regulations are they assisted by loans?—A. The Commissioners have a discretionary power to grant loans or to make advances in cases of momentary distress: under what restrictions will appear from the § 32 of my Report.

III.—IMPOTENT THROUGH AGE.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there alms-houses or other institutions for the reception of those who, through age, are incapable of earning their subsistence?—A. Where persons of this description are not entitled to admittance in one of the institutions alluded to in the Answer to Query 4, Section II., they are subsisted in the alms or poor-house of that parish where they have a legal settlement. Establishments of this nature are now existing in many of the parishes, and are becoming more and more general.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations is relief in food, fuel, clothing or money afforded them at their homes?—A. Is only resorted to in parishes, where no appropriate houses for the poor exist, or if they do exist, where circumstances prevent their admittance in the same.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?—A. The same.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations are they quartered or billeted on the householders?—A. The billet or ticket system is not customary; but where such paupers cannot be accommodated in poor-houses, a lodging or a habitation is procured for them at the expense of the parish.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to assist them with money, food or clothing, or by taking part of their families. [See Answer to Query 9, Section II.]

IV.—SICK.

Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there district institutions for the reception of the sick?—A. In each bailiwick there is a district institution for the reception of the sick poor; and most of the parishes have infirmaries, where they are supplied with medical advice and medicine at the expense of the parish. In each of the medical districts either a physician or a surgeon is stationed for the purpose of attending the poor, and in the larger towns there is at least one apothecary.

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are surgical and medical relief afforded to the poor at their own homes?—A. They receive medical advice and medicine at their homes in places in which there is either no institution for the sick, or where circumstances prevent their being sent to, or received in, the same, where they exist.

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are there institutions for affording food, fuel, clothing or money to the sick?—A. To the best of my knowledge, there are no institutions of that kind, except soup societies which have been formed in the principal towns, but which supply the poor of the place generally.

Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations is assistance given to lying-in women at their homes, or in public establishments?—A. There are three lying-in hospitals in the Danish dominions, namely, at Copenhagen, Kiel and Altona, where poor women are attended gratuitously, and where at the same time persons are instructed in midwifery. In the other places lying-in women, being destitute, are generally attended by the midwife of the district at their homes, at the expense of the parish, and are treated like other sick persons.

Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations are there any other modes of affording public assistance to the sick?—There are none of which I am aware.

V.—CHILDREN.

Illegitimate.

Q. 1. Upon whom does the support of illegitimate children fall; wholly upon the mothers, or wholly upon the fathers; or is the expense distributed between them, and in what proportion, and under what regulations?—A. The support of bastards devolves in the first instance upon the mothers; however, the putative father is obliged, when called upon, to contribute to the maintenance of the child until it is ten years of age, but no longer. The amount of the allowance, for which an order is given by the bailiff of the district, depends upon the circumstances of the father, and the minimum would be about 1*l.* per annum. Where the mother has become a pauper, the bastard must be supported by the parish to which she belongs; but the parish has a claim upon the father for his share of the expense. [Refer to my Report, §§ 44. 52.]

Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are the relatives of the mothers or fathers ever compelled to assist in the maintenance of bastards?—A. The law, as it now stands, does not compel either of them to contribute to the maintenance of bastards. [Refer to my Report, § 51.]

Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are illegitimate children supported at the public expense?—A. Illegitimate children become chargeable upon the parish in all cases where the father and mother are unable to support them. Bastardy is of frequent occurrence in this country.

DENMARK.

	ORPHANS.	FOUNDLINGS.	DESERTED CHILDREN, whose Parents are known.
Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations are they taken into establishments for their reception?	-- A. Are placed, according to existing circumstances, either in some public institution or with foster parents, to be brought up and educated for account of the parish.	-- The same. The number of these children is comparatively small.	-- The same. It is of rare occurrence in this country that parents desert their children.
Q. 5. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?	-- A. Never. The Government, however, give great encouragement to those of the peasantry who foster children belonging to any of the townships. A peasant, for instance, whose own son has been drawn for the military service, may replace him by his foster son, the latter being fit.
Q. 6. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?	A. They are frequently so, but this is entirely left to the discretion of the Commissioners.
Q. 7. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	A. The law does not require their relatives to support them. There are orphan houses at Copenhagen, Sleswick, Kiel, Altona, and in different other places.

VI.—CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, AND BLIND.

	CRIPPLES.	DEAF AND DUMB.	BLIND.
Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception? 2. Or, are they billeted or quartered on householders? 3. Or boarded with individuals?	-- Cripples, being destitute, are supported by the parish in which they have a legal settlement. There are some establishments in which crippled and maimed persons are received.	-- There are two establishments; one at Copenhagen, founded in 1807 for 90 children, and another at Sleswick in 1809 for 75 children. Where the parents cannot afford the expense of their education and maintenance, it is defrayed by the parish where they have a legal settlement.	-- The only institution for the blind is at Copenhagen, and was founded in 1811. Children sent there must be supported by their parents if they have the means, otherwise they must be supported by the parish to which they belong.
	Destitute persons of this description are generally supported in the parish to which they belong, in a manner best suiting the local arrangements of each particular place.
Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	-- A. The parents of a cripple are not obliged to support him after his 18th year. If at that period he is unable to support himself, he is entitled to relief in the parish where his parents are settled.	See Answer to Query 9, Sect. II.	-- There is no law compelling the parents say relatives of a destitute blind to maintain him.

	IDIOTS.	LUNATICS.
Q. 1. To what extent and under what regulations are there establishments for their reception?	-- A. There is no particular establishment for their reception; but the parish must provide for them, where their parents cannot afford it.	-- There are different establishments for lunatics. The principal are at Bistrupgaard near Roeskilde , and another in Sleswick . Lunatics from all parts of the kingdom are admitted; but the parties sending them must defray the expense of their maintenance. The hospitals and poor-houses in many places, have particular rooms adapted for the reception of lunatics. They are not quartered upon householders, but boarded and lodged according to circumstances, the same as other paupers.
Q. 2. To what extent and under what regulations are they billeted or quartered on householders?	—
Q. 3. To what extent and under what regulations are they boarded with individuals?	A. The same as other paupers.
Q. 4. To what extent and under what regulations, and to what degree of relationship, are their relatives compelled to support them?	-- A. Idiots having attained the age of puberty, and not being able to maintain themselves, must be relieved by the parish, the law not generally compelling parents to support their children after their 18th year. See my Report, § 39.	-- A lunatic must be supported either by his parents or by his children; and where they cannot afford the expense or any part of the same, it must be defrayed by his parish. See my Report, § 51.

EFFECTS OF THE FOREGOING INSTITUTIONS.

- 1st. On the industry of the labourers?—See my Report, § 70.
 2d. On their frugality?—See my Report, § 70.
 3d. On the age at which they marry?—See my Report, § 70.
 4th. On the mutual dependence and affection of parent, children, and other relatives?—See my Report, § 70.
 5th. What, on the whole, is the condition of the able-bodied and self-supporting labourer of the lowest class, as compared with the condition of the person subsisting on alms or public charity. Is the condition of the latter, as to food and freedom from labour more or less eligible?—(See p. 261 & 335 of the Poor Law "Extracts.")—See my Report, § 71.

LABOURERS, &c.

Q. 1. What is the general amount of the wages of an able-bodied male labourer, by the day, the week, the month, or the year, with and without provisions, in summer and in winter?—A. Where no provisions are given, a labourer in this neighbourhood may earn from 9d. to 10d. per day in summer, and 6d. to 7d. in winter. Receiving food, in summer 6d. to 7d., and in winter 4d. to 5d. per day. In the interior of the country the rate of wages is one-third less. For further particulars with regard to the rates of wages of different descriptions of labourers, see the Statement marked Annex (C.)

Q. 2. Is piece-work general?—A. Piece-work is by no means general; but an able labourer may earn from one-third to one-half more than the highest summer wages above quoted.

Q. 3. What, in the whole, might an average labourer, obtaining an average amount of employment, both in day-work and in piece-work, expect to earn in a year, including harvest work, and the value of all his advantages and means of living?—A. I am unable to answer this question with any degree of accuracy, it being hardly possible to ascertain the average earnings of persons who are not permanently employed. I am, however, induced to believe, that in this part of the country from 12l. to 15l. would be a fair computation of what a labourer, on an average, may expect to earn in the course of the year.

Q. 4. State, as nearly as you can, the average annual expenditure of labourers of different descriptions, specifying schooling for children, religious teachers, &c.?—A. I refer to the Statement in the Annex, marked (C.)

Q. 5. Is there any, and what employment for women and children?—A. In summer, women can always find employment in harvest, in making turf where it abounds, in digging up potatoes and in weeding; in winter chiefly in knitting and spinning. Children can hardly earn any thing, their parents being legally obliged to send them to school three days in the week.

Q. 6. What can women, and children under 16, earn per week, in summer, in winter and and harvest, and how employed?—A. An industrious woman in summer may earn about 2s. 6d. to 3s. per week, and during harvest time a little more, without food. These earnings must however be limited to only four months of the year; the remaining eight months she will not be able to earn more than 1s. 6d. to 2s. per week. From the reasons already stated in the preceding answer, children must be expected to contribute but little to the common stock, and the produce of their joint labour may probably not exceed 7d. per week on an average.

Q. 7. What, in the whole, might a labourer's wife and four children, aged 14, 11, 8 and 5 years, respectively, (the eldest a boy), expect to earn in a year, obtaining, as in the former case, an average amount of employment?—A. From the answers to the preceding questions it would appear, that the joint labour of a woman and three children would produce on an average 6l. annually.

Q. 8. Could such a family subsist on the aggregate earnings of the father, mother and children, and if so, on what food?—A. With prudence and economy, which however are no characteristics of the peasantry of this country, I doubt not, it might be done. Their principal food consists of rye-bread, groats, potatoes, coffee, butter, cheese and milk, in which articles a family consisting of man, wife and three children would expend about 15l. per annum in this neighbourhood. In other parts of the country they fare worse. Food is cheap.

Q. 9. Could it lay by any thing, and how much?—A. From what has come under my own observation, and from the information I have derived from persons living amongst the peasantry, I must opine, that a family cannot lay by any thing.

Q. 10. The average quantity of land annexed to a labourer's habitation?—A. Perhaps an acre of land, taking a general average; but the quantity varies according to the class to which a labourer belongs. There are, 1°. Cottagers, "Huusmænd," with land, of which about five acres are annexed to their habitations; and 2°. Cottagers without land, or having only a small garden. The former however are the most numerous. Adding to these the labourers in fixed service, the total forms nearly one-third of the population.

Q. 11. What class of persons are the usual owners of labourers' habitations?—A. The owners of labourers' habitations are the nobility and other landed proprietors. The Crown also owns large tracts of land.

Q. 12. The rent of labourers' habitations, and price on sale?—A. For a habitation without land, the rent is generally 12 days' labour, and with a small garden about 1l. per acre. The price on sale of the former would be from 5l. to 6l., and of the latter about 10l.

Q. 13. Whether any lands let to labourers; if so, the quantity to each, and at what rent?—A. The habitations with land, of which there is at least one upon every small farm, and a great number upon the large estates, are inalienable, nor can the proprietor take them into his own hands. The rent is generally paid in labour, and would not exceed 2l. to 2l. 10s. in money. No land let to labourers.

Q. 14. The proportion of annual deaths to the whole population?—A. The present population is computed at 1,250,000, and the average mortality of the last five years, as per Table marked Annex (B.) amounts to 34,710, the proportion would therefore be 1 = 36, but considering that the mortality was uncommonly great during 1829, 30 & 31, the right proportion would be 1 = 40.

Q. 15. The proportion of annual births to the whole population?—A. According to Table (A.) the proportion is 1 = 34.

Q. 16. The proportion of annual marriages to the whole population?—A. According to Table (A.) the proportion is 1 = 123.

Q. 17. The average number of children to a marriage?—A. According to Table marked Annex (A.) the proportion is 3,675 = 1.

p. 298.

Q. 18. Proportion of legitimate to illegitimate births?—A. According to Table (A.) the proportion is 9,661 = 1.

Q. 19. The proportion of children that die before the end of their first year?—A. I am unable to reply to this question, the Danish Mortality Lists not stating the particulars.

Q. 20. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 10th year?—A. According to Table (B.) the proportion is 1 = 3,581.

Q. 21. Proportion of children that die before the end of their 18th year?—A. The Danish mortality lists do not state the particulars.

Q. 22. Average age of marriage, distinguishing males from females?—A. No statistical details on the subject have been published in Denmark, so far as I know. For men I should take the age of 28, when their liability to military service expires, and for women 22.

Q. 23. Causes by which marriages are delayed?—A. According to the civil law of Denmark, marriages cannot be prevented on account of the poverty of the parties; but all such persons as are in the receipt of parochial relief are not to be married, unless the Poor Commissioners allow it on special grounds. There are many circumstances by which marriages may be delayed, but over which the law has no control. [See my Report, § 22.]

Q. 24. Extent to which, 1st, the unmarried; 2d, the married, save?—A. The labouring classes, particularly in this neighbourhood, are sensual and improvident. But if any of them save, I am induced to think, they would only be able to do so while they are single. Once married, and especially begetting many children, saving is out of the question. This applies both to mechanical and agricultural labourers. However, the farmers on a small scale (I allude to those who are industrious and economical) may lay by in times when the corn prices are high.

Q. 25. Mode in which they invest their savings?—A. They may invest their savings in savings' banks, which are combined with the banks of deposit (Laane-Casser) that are established in the principal places of Denmark, but particularly in Sleswick-Holstein, which has a very considerable share in the total of the deposits, which are estimated at from 800,000*l.* to a million sterling, and of which sum Copenhagen owns about one-fourth. It must however be observed, that great part of the money deposited belongs not to the lower but to the middle classes.

REMARKS.

The labourers in manufactories are generally paid according to agreement for a certain quantity of work done, and are seldom hired by the week. They have to find their own board and lodging. A spinner's weekly earnings amount to from 6s. to 7s.; that of a weaver, cutter or dresser to from 7s. to 12s. A woman for cleaning wool is allowed 1/2 d. per pound. According to a legal enactment, young children employed in factories must attend school at least three hours per day.

Several crafts and trades in the towns enjoy exclusive privileges, and form corporations to prevent the intrusion of foreign workmen, who must pay certain dues to such corporation on being allowed to work. With a few exceptions they all find their own board and lodging. Apprentices not receiving wages are generally found by their masters.

With regard to agricultural labourers, I refer to the particulars contained in the annexed Observations on the Agricultural Population of Denmark.

The wages quoted in the preceding Tables are the highest and the lowest that were given within the last two years.

The Danish money has been reduced into sterling at the rate of 4s. 6d. sterling per specie of two Rixbank dollars.

DENMARK.

OBSERVATIONS relative to the STATE of the AGRICULTURAL POPULATION of Denmark.

THE agricultural population of Denmark, including the Dutchies of Sleswick and Holstein, form about two-thirds of the whole population of the kingdom, which latter in the years 1801-3 amounted to 1,530,195, and is now, with the addition of that of Lanenburgh, computed at near 2,000,000, being an increase of about twenty-six per cent.

The agricultural population of the kingdom may be divided into the proprietors of large estates, including their factors and the farmers on a large scale; into the very numerous class of "gaardmænd," who are either small proprietors or tenants, and comprise the "boelsmænd," who own part of a copyhold, and into that of "huusmænd," or cotters, who hold from one to five acres of land. Then follow the farm servants and day labourers without land, who constitute about one-half of the agricultural population, the whole of which, according to an official statement, consisted in the years 1801-3 of the following numbers:

In Denmark:—Population 926,110.

Landed proprietors and farmers	-	-	-	-	415,610	} Total 672,410
Farm servants	-	-	-	-	123,147
Day labourers (agricultural)	-	-	-	-	133,653

In Sleswick Holstein:—Population 604,085.

Landed proprietors and farmers	-	-	-	-	196,017	} Total 365,862
Farm servants	-	-	-	-	58,397
Day labourers (agricultural)	-	-	-	-	111,448

The soil is owned by the Crown, the nobility, the small landed proprietors, and by different public institutions. Towards the close of the reign of Frederick V. the landed property of the Crown was so considerable that in 1763 it was computed to amount to one-sixth of all the arable land; but the greater part was soon after divided into farms of a convenient size, and disposed of by public sale. The far greater part of the land, however, was in possession of the nobility, whose estates were also in many instances divided into small allotments, whenever the sale of them was judged necessary or expedient. Previous to the above-mentioned period there were but few landowners amongst the peasantry, but their number afterwards increased, partly in consequence of the measure just alluded to, which allowed them to become purchasers, and partly owing to a great proportion of land having been let out to the tenantry on long lease (arvefæste.) The peasantry had hitherto been serfs to the lords of the soil, but in 1786 they were not only emancipated from feudal bondage, but the relations between the landlord and tenant were regulated upon principles of justice and equity, and the respective rights and duties of both parties were more clearly defined. According to these regulations, the houses and lands of the tenantry, the stock and implements of husbandry on the farm, belong to the landlord. As a consideration for the property which is given in lease to the tenant for the joint lives of himself and his wife, he has to pay, according to the tenor of the contract (fæstebrev), a certain annual rent, partly in money and partly in produce, which tribute is known under the denomination of "Landgilde." He is moreover bound to perform certain services on the manor called "hoverie," or soccage he has to keep the house and inventory of his farm in good order, and to defray all public taxes, for the due payment of which however the landlord is held responsible. The "hoverie" had been for ages a great hardship upon the peasantry, and in the year 1786 it became a particular object of the solicitude of the Government to place it upon a more equitable footing; with that view every thing was done at the time to induce the landowners and the peasantry to enter into a voluntary agreement with regard to the extent of the service to be rendered, and a commission was expressly empowered for the purpose of fixing the amount on those estates, where no arrangement for that purpose had been entered into. That important question was finally settled by two Ordinances issued in 1791 and 1799, containing all the laws and regulations with respect to soccage, which are still in force, but which seem to require a revisal.

The peasantry of Sleswick Holstein were equally bound to the soil, but for want of proper laws protecting them from the arbitrary proceedings of their landlords, the state of bondage to which they were doomed was still rendered more oppressive. This however was done away with, partly in consequence of the impulse given by the Government in emancipating the peasantry previous to the sale of the Crown lands, and partly by a spontaneous renunciation of their rights on the part of some of the most enlightened men amongst the nobility. By an Ordinance of the 19th December 1804, bondage in the Danish dominions was finally and for ever abolished.

The system of dividing and parcelling out large estates into small farms and allotments has been very commonly resorted to in Denmark for the last half century, and it is to that measure that the increase of population is mainly ascribed. But although it has been condemned by some of the writers upon the national economy of Denmark as having too much promoted improvident marriages, and ultimately produced pauperism amongst the agricultural classes, yet on the other hand it cannot be denied but that it has greatly contributed to the improvement of husbandry, and to bringing a larger quantity of land under cultivation. It must be left to after times to decide in how far the country has been benefited by it or not; but what regards the present, I am induced to believe, from what I have seen and read, that on the whole the condition of the small proprietors in Denmark is, comparatively speaking, a happy one; and it would still be more so if it were not for various causes which prevent their prospering to such a degree as might under other circumstances be expected. The most most prominent of these impediments are the taxes on the land, which are too high in proportion to the value of the produce of the soil, and the restrictive commercial policy of Denmark, by which the great mass of her population are disregarded, in order to protect a few manufactories, which, notwithstanding the encouragement given, have not made the least progress since the peace.

A very numerous class of husbandmen in Denmark are the "huusmænd," or cotters, who partly have a few acres, and partly no land attached to their habitations, and most of whom are tenants. At all times when the division of an estate took place, care was taken to reserve certain allotments of land for those of the cotters who were not provided with any. In many places whole farms were distributed amongst them, or lands were assigned them on the boundaries of the farmers' allotments, or they received waste or wood-lands. There is now on each of the large estates a certain number of cottages, and on each small farm at least one; the lands belonging to which, the proprietor is not allowed to alienate or to take into his own hands.

In the Dutchies of Sleswick and Holstein the husbandmen are either proprietors or tenants on long lease (erlpächter), or peasants called "Bonden" and "Hufner," according to the different tenures by which they hold their lands; or they are cottagers or "Kætner," which latter, in consideration for a certain rent or service, hold a small house or cottage with a garden or a few acres of land.

The male and female labourers on the farms in Denmark are generally hired by the year, and live under the farmer's roof, who also boards them. Day labourers are chiefly employed during harvest time, and on other emergencies. They must find their own provisions; but on being supplied by the farmer, he retains one-half of their wages. The Danes are great eaters, and they eat at all times of the day. The following quantities of food are usually allowed to male farm servants per month:—Bread, 60 lb.; potatoes, half a bushel; groats, half a bushel; butter, 4 lb.; bacon, 10 lb.; meat, 4 lb.; salted herrings, 30; salt fish, 2 lb.; beer, 60 quarts; milk, ad libitum. The Danish peasants make five meals a day in summer. Early in the morning they have, 1°, breakfast, consisting sometimes of coffee, but generally of warm milk and bread; 2°, at 9 o'clock follows bread and butter and a dram; 3°, at 12 o'clock, dinner, the introduction to which consists of spoon-meat, such as milk porridge, beer soup, curds, with warm milk or beer, or of fish, boiled groats, cheese, greens or dried pease; after which follows fresh or dried fish, bacon or meat, with potatoes or other vegetables, or boiled or poached eggs, or pancakes; 4°, at 5 o'clock, bread and butter, and a dram or two, especially in harvest time; 5°, supper after sunset, sour groats, curds, with milk or buttermilk. In winter, when they get up later, they have one breakfast, and consequently they only make four meals a day. The poorer families seldom boil their kale upon meat, but upon a piece of hog's lard or bacon. In most of the cottages a sheep or lamb is killed before the winter. The more substantial peasants kill a pig, a cow or an ox, and they dispose of what they do not require themselves to their neighbours. They also kill a certain number of their geese and ducks, salting them down for the winter, and using the feathers for their beds. This mode of living applies chiefly to peasants in districts of a middling soil, but where it is richer they have more of bacon, meat and fish, in lieu of other dishes; also is the beer they drink of greater strength. Fish is almost their diurnal food in the villages adjacent to the sea, and they often use dried fish instead of bread, especially in times where the rye crops have failed, when their rye bread is often found mixed with barley. Amongst the poorer cottagers who have no land, it would sometimes happen that they must content themselves with a crust of dry bread, and milk and water in lieu of beer; but such cases are not of frequent occurrence, at least all the reports on the agricultural state of the country which have been published these latter years concur in stating that the generality of peasants is well off, and that there is plenty of employment in the country for all labourers that choose to work.

I shall conclude these observations by stating the annual expenditure of a labourer with a wife and three children in this neighbourhood, the several items reduced into sterling:

House rent and taxes - - - -	10	-	-	Milk, 8 quarts per week, at $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	17	4	-
Turf for fuel - - - -	12	-	-	Soap, candles and groceries - -	18	-	-
Rye for bread, $3\frac{1}{2}$ quarters, at 13s. 6d.	2	6	6	Clothing, brandy and lottery tickets	3	2	-
Barley for bread and groats, $4\frac{1}{2}$ quarters,				School rate 5 d., books 2 s. 2 d.	-	-	7
at 10 s. 6 d. - - - -	2	7	3	Religious teaching - - - -	3	4	-
Meat and bacon, 30 stone, at 1 s. 9 d.	2	12	6
Potatoes, 12 quarters, at 2 s. 3 d.	1	7	-
Coffee $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., sugar $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. per week	2	2	-
Butter 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ firkin, cheese 120 lb.	2	6	-
					£. 19	6	6

This is nearly what the amount of their joint labour would produce, provided they be employed during an average number of days in the year. At a certain distance from the large towns the items of coffee, sugar and brandy must in a great measure be omitted, by which the whole expenditure would be reduced to about 15 l. sterling per annum.

The WORKHOUSE at Slagelse.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from the Rev. John Bastholm, Rector at Slagelse in Zealand.

IN this workhouse a pauper receives a loaf of rye-bread of 7 lb. weekly, a quart of common beer daily, (no cheese nor butter is allowed, because the labourer existing on his own industry ought to live somewhat better than a pauper supported by the parish); he further receives half a quart of warm soup with potatoes every day for dinner, and $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. pork or beef three times a week. The dinner costs $1\frac{1}{8}d.$ daily; and the beer varies according to the ruling prices.

A pauper's complete maintenance during the year costs $4l. 1s.$ on an average, every thing included. The economy of the workhouse is superintended by the overseer, as a contractor would endeavour to enrich himself at the expense of the poor.

In a workhouse the chief object of the overseer must be to keep the paupers continually employed. In this establishment, the one is employed in mending clothes, and the other in repairing shoes or in any other work that may tend to their common benefit, besides which, a manufacture of woollens (only of the coarsest kind however) serves as a steady occupation. It is constantly carried on, but at present with less zeal and activity than in former times, which can only be attributed to certain accidental circumstances. It has sometimes yielded considerable profits, but it is sufficient if it can only be carried on without loss, because the principal object is to employ the paupers, and to impose the obligation upon them to make them work for what they receive. The manufacture exists for the sake of the poor, but these latter are not kept for the sake of the manufacture, and the moment a pauper can maintain himself by his own labour for a shorter or longer period, he is immediately discharged from the establishment. The strict principles that were formerly upheld have been somewhat deviated from during these latter years, but the pernicious effects already begin to manifest themselves, and it is therefore intended to return to the former system. I have been yielding where opposition was in vain, as time and experience are the best teachers.

The DISTRICT WORKHOUSE at Odense.

From a Report of Mr. Thomas Charles Grut, British Vice-Consul at Odense,
in the Island of Funen.

IN the district workhouse for forced labour in this town, beggars and vagrants condemned by the common courts of police of the province, or other idle, drunken and disorderly persons receiving support from their respective parishes, and condemned by the overseers of the poor of such parishes, with the concurrence of the police master, may be confined. The period of confinement of those persons sentenced by the common courts of the province is prolonged according to the more or less frequent occurrence of the causes of complaint, and can be extended to several years, whereas the confinement by the decision of the overseers cannot be extended beyond four weeks. In case however the causes of complaint should be of a nature to qualify them to be brought before the common courts of police, these courts have the power of prolonging the period of confinement according to circumstances. The work of the persons confined in this establishment consists in spinning wool, cow hair, flax and hemp, and on entering the same, the master or keeper has to decide what kind and what quantity of work each individual, male or female, is capable of doing every day. Idleness, disorderly conduct and other vicious habits are punished according to the decision of the superintendent of the institution, either by solitary confinement or by the application of a certain number of lashes, however not exceeding ten, with a rope's end. The prisoners' allowance consists in 2 lb. rye bread, 1 pot or quart of porridge for dinner, and half a quart of beer daily, worth altogether $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ sterling. The average amount or value of each individual's daily work does not exceed $1\frac{1}{4}d.$ for each working day, and deducting the holidays, it does hardly amount to $1\frac{1}{8}d.$ On dismissal from the establishment, each person is conveyed to the parish to which he belongs.

For the maintenance of this workhouse the whole province contributes annually $75l.$ for fuel, clothing, wages, &c., besides $20l.$ per annum for a certain number of years to the overseers of the poor at Odense, in consideration of the expense of the building, which the town erected in 1807. According to the original plan, it was only intended for the town of Odense, but since the year 1825 it has been made the workhouse, or rather an establishment for forced labour of the whole province. With the exception of the above-mentioned contributions, the whole expense of maintaining the establishment is borne by the town. Prayers are read to the prisoners every morning by a layman appointed for the purpose.

The PARISH WORKHOUSE at Odense.

From a Report of Mr. Thomas Charles Grut, British Vice-Consul at Odense,
in the Island of Funen.

THERE are at present in the workhouse for the poor in this town (containing 8,000 inhabitants) about 100 individuals, of whom a part have only lodgings, and another part only an allowance of 6 lb. of bread, or from $2d.$ to $4d.$ sterling per week. What each individual may require more than this for his support is left entirely by him to provide by his own exertion. Such inmates of the workhouse as may apply for it can obtain work in spinning and winding flax and hemp, for which they are paid according to a rate fixed by the overseers. The institution gives lodging to the old and infirm, who, under the denomination of Boarding Inmates, are entirely supported by the parish, but must, in return for the support they receive, spin or do any other kind of work adapted to their capacities. They are provided with the most necessary articles of clothing, and are allowed daily, 1 lb. bread, 1 quart of porridge for dinner (consisting alternately of soup with meat and vegetables, potatoes, &c. or of pease soup and pork, of barley gruel or of cabbage broth, and the like), and half a quart of beer, all which, according to the present prices, may be worth on an average $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ sterling per diem.

REPORT on Danish POOR LAW, supplied by the Danish Government, in consequence of a request of Mr. Browne to that effect, made by him in pursuance of Instructions sent to him by Viscount Palmerston, in Mr. Backhouse's Circular Despatch of August 12th, 1833.—Enclosed with Mr. Browne's Despatch, No. 5.

DENMARK.

Copenhagen, 1834.

So early as the year 1683, we find in King Christian the Fifth's Danish Code (published in April that year), several regulations concerning the support of the poor, which object has also been treated of in subsequent ordinances.

But the poor system of Denmark has received its present organization, in as far as regards Copenhagen, from a regally sanctioned plan, published 1st of July 1799, modified, however, considerably in respect to its management by the Rescripts of 20th October 1815 and 21st November 1828, and, in as far as regards the other towns and the country districts, from two Regulations of 5th July 1803.

These fundamental laws have in several points been altered and explained by later laws, among which the most important are, Placard of 14th December 1810, (containing a number of additions to the Regulations for the country towns and country districts); Placard of 20th February 1817, Placard of 28th December 1827, Placard of 29th December 1829. Copies of the four above mentioned, and also of some other laws, are sent herewith, together with a catalogue of the whole.

Copenhagen has its own poor system quite distinct from that of the rest of the kingdom. In former times, the poor system of the metropolis was not consolidated, but there were poor funds for persons of military and of civil condition, for different religious sects, &c. But all are now consolidated under one common management, all being obliged to contribute to the general fund, and all having equal right of access, in case of necessity, to receive benefit from the general fund; excepting only those of the Mosaic persuasion, who support their own poor, without being exempted from contributing to the general poor-tax in the same way as the other inhabitants.

According to the plan of 1799, the poor system of Copenhagen was managed by a board of 24 directors, some of whom were named by the King, and were partly official persons, and partly other citizens and inhabitants. The 24 directors were divided among five sections, and performed their duties without remuneration. But, by the above-mentioned Rescripts of 20th October 1815 and 21st November 1828, the management is now intrusted to a board of directors named by the King and paid by the poor fund. To these belong, as directors ex officio, viz., in police cases, the master of police of Copenhagen; and in medical cases, the city physician. For the purpose of facilitating inspection, the city is divided into 12 wards, and these again into smaller districts, to each of which latter a poor overseer is appointed by the board.

The other towns have each their own poor system common to all the inhabitants of the town, and in general to such of the neighbouring country inhabitants as belong to the town church; but not the inhabitants of a parish which has its own church, though it may have the same parson in common with the town, or be annexed to it, as it is called. Such annex parishes follow the system prescribed for country districts. In some particular places that portion of the country inhabitants, who belong to the town church, have a distinct fund of their own separate from that of the town parish; which exception from the general rule has arisen from the circumstance of the said inhabitants being a sufficiently numerous body to form a separate poor district, and that the persons concerned found it more for their advantage to be disjoined from the town.

In towns (Copenhagen excepted) the poor system is managed by a commission, consisting of

The parson (or clergy, if the town consists of more than one parish).

One of the magistrates (supposing the town has a regular magistracy). In smaller towns the duties of the magistracy are discharged by the byefoged, who is a member of the commission in another capacity.

The byefoged, as master of police.

Two or more respectable men of each parish as overseers.

All the poor commissions of the towns of a bailiwick are under the control of two directors, viz. the high bailiff, as their temporal head, and the bishop.

In the country every parish, or if more than one parish are united under one clergyman, then the united parishes, form a poor district, and are under the management of a parish poor commission, consisting of

The parson.

The police master.

One of the chief landholders, and three or four of the most respectable parishioners, according to the greater or smaller extent of the parish.

DENMARK.

All the country parish districts of a bailiwick are subordinate to a board of directors, consisting of

The high bailiff.

The collector, or collectors of the King's taxes.

All the provosts (clergy) and

Two managers of King's estates, or other experienced agriculturists, who are appointed by the chancery, at the recommendation of the high bailiff.

The bishop also, in as far as his other duties may permit him, acts as director.

Cases which do not admit of delay may be dispatched by the high bailiff immediately, without waiting for the meeting of his colleagues; but at the first meeting he must report what he has done.

The whole poor system of the country is under the government college of chancery. To it are referred all complaints of mismanagement, either where the directors are unable to give a decision, or where the parties concerned are not satisfied with the decision given by them. By it are finally settled all disputes between parishes as to their respective obligations, when such cannot be settled by the board of directors to which they are mutually subject. Its approbation is required to all important alterations in the poor system.
